Historical Introduction

ALFRED T. ANDREAS

Alfred T. Andreas, the compiler of this prodigious Atlas, was born on May 29, 1839, in Amity, Orange County, New York. His family moved to nearby Chester where young Alfred gained a good education at Chester Academy. While Alfred was still in the Academy, his father moved to New York City where he became a successful merchant, retiring a wealthy man in 1858. Meanwhile, Alfred struck out for the Mississippi in 1857, locating at Dubuque. He held clerical and teaching positions in Dubuque until 1860, when he moved to Sparta, Illinois, where he continued his work as a teacher.

In 1861 young Andreas enlisted as a private in Company G of the 12th Illinois Infantry, giving his residence as Pinckneyville, Illinois. His pleasing personality and genius for organizing led to rapid promotions. In 1864 he became Division Commissary on the staff of General Thomas W. Sweeny, and later Quartermaster with General John M. Corse, in the Atlanta Campaign. He served in this capacity with Sherman on his March to the Sea, and subsequently in that brilliant commander's campaigns through the Carolinas.

When Andreas was mustered out of the army on April 1, 1865, his residence was given as Davenport, Iowa, in the Report of the Adjutant General of the State of Illinois. It appears that Alfred T. Andreas had visited Davenport while on a furlough during the Civil War. He liked the town and he also liked a young lady whom he met there. Accordingly, after his discharge from the army, he returned to Davenport and married the girl—Sophia Lyter, daughter of Samuel Lyter and sister of John M. Lyter [see pages 7 and 8].

It took several months for young Andreas to find himself after the war. Having risen to the rank of a captain in the Quartermaster Corps during the Civil War, he bore this title with honor and distinction throughout his life. An imaginative and resourceful young man, the newly married Andreas determined to leave no stone unturned in his effort to win a competency.

Like many an entrepreneur, Andreas sometimes embarked on risky ventures. During the winter of 1865-1866, he conceived the idea of establishing a skating rink at the top of Brady Street hill in Davenport. The idea turned out to be an ill-advised undertaking. On December 19, 1865, the Davenport Daily Gazette recorded:

We regret the gloomy prospects of an early success of Capt. Andreas' Park in North Davenport. Much money has been expended in preparing it for use, and in making it a most delightful place of resort for those who want to skate in good style.—On account of the failure of his wells to supply the quantity of water necessary, Capt. Andreas undertook, on Friday, the seeming impracticable task of flooding the Park by hauling water from the river, —nearly a mile, in wagons and water-carts.—A great quantity of the water is immediately absorbed by the new made ground, and after three days' hauling but very little impression had been made. The Captain has shown a Spartan energy in prosecuting his project, and seems undaunted yet. We most sincerely wish his energy may be rewarded with success; fearing, however, it will not be so this season, in time to return him much profit.

The foreboding of the Gazette appeared well-founded. On December 22, the same Davenport editor declared:

CAPT. ANDREAS has, for the present, abandoned the attempt to flood his Park on the bluff. He will resume operations as soon as success seems practicable.

Since skating rinks were not his specialty, Andreas turned his attention to a field that was destined to win him lasting fame, namely state and county atlases. Of this field Walter W. Ristow, associate chief of the geography and map division of the Library of Congress, has written:

THE PRODUCTION of state atlases is one of the underdeveloped branches of American cartography. Robert Mills's Atlas of the State of South Carolina, the first of an individual state, was published in 1825, nearly five decades after the Republic was established. Four years later the Atlas of the State of New York by David H. Burr was published. These two distinguished and handsome volumes were the only state atlases printed from engraved plates. A revised edition of Mills's work was published in 1838, and several revisions or reprintings of Burr's Atlas were issued between 1829 and 1841. No other state atlases were published until after the Civil War, but in the two decades after 1865 they were produced in great numbers. More than thirty volumes, covering some twenty-two states, were published between 1866 and 1887. New England, the Middle Atlantic region, and the Middle West were the principal centers of atlas activity.

In 1867 three former army associates—the Thompson brothers of Geneva and Louis H. Everts—persuaded Andreas to join their staff of canvassers in producing large maps of Illinois counties. It was not long before Andreas became one of Thompson's most successful salesmen. His personality, his industry, his general bearing and manner of speaking, stood Andreas in good stead in his work.

Andreas soon conceived the possibility of new sources for profit. He believed that if a huge county map was cut into townships and these bound into book format, an entirely new market would be opened to him. Such a publication could be sold in counties for which large maps had previously been published. This book could have an unlimited number of pages devoted to township maps; historical sketches of farms and business firms; biographical sketches of farmers and leading businessmen.

At specified rates per line of text or square inch of portrait space, the income from subscriptions, which usually averaged around $9 per atlas, would be greatly increased. It has been estimated that for an edition of 2,000 to 2,500 copies, the publisher might gross $35,000, almost one-half of which could be net profit.

The prospects of gaining untold wealth led Andreas to resign his position with Thompson and Everts and form a partnership with his father-in-law as Andreas, Lyter & Company. Under this and other imprints he published Fulton County and Knox County atlases in 1871, Adams, Morgan, Pike, and Schuyler counties in 1872, and Scott and Tazewell counties in 1873. These were all Illinois county atlases printed in Davenport and in the possession of the Library of Congress.

During 1873 Andreas moved to Chicago where he established himself in the Lakeside Building at the corner of Clark and Adams. This building had been created especially for the publishing business, according to Harrington's How 'Tis Done, and was particularly set up for the printing of atlases. Three Iowa county atlases—Des Moines in 1873, and Lee and Louisa in 1874, were produced by Andreas in Chicago.

It was in the Lakeside Building that Andreas published his first state atlas, that of Minnesota, in 1874, and it was in this building, too, that Alfred T. Andreas published his Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa—1875.

It took an army of skilled personnel to solicit subscribers, compile the history, execute portraits, draw pictures of homes, farms, buildings, and cities, and record faithfully and reliably the maps and plats of counties and towns. The magnitude of this stupendous enterprise (it required the services of 300 men for an average of a year and a quarter) is attested by every page of A. T. Andreas' Illustrated Historical Atlas of Iowa. The success of the original solicitors, as well as the favorable impressions left by artists, historians, and cartographers can be further demonstrated by the fact that nearly 23,000 subscribers—the majority of whom were leaders in their communities and influential men of Iowa—became patrons, or subscribers, to the gigantic project.

Iowa editors appeared almost uniformly enthusiastic at the prospects of securing a detailed State atlas. The Davenport Gazette of August 22, 1874, expressed delight when it learned its former fellow-townsman would head up this monumental work:

Capt. A. T. Andreas, formerly of this city, and more particularly remembered by many of our citizens in connection with his skating park enterprise on the bluff in the winter of 1865-6, has put his indefatigable energy and industry to more practical purposes. He is now the head of an extensive map and atlas manufactory, with hundreds of skilful artisans in his employ, and a business amounting to this year of over a million dollars, according to the Chicago Times. He has now 108 men employed in Minnesota alone, surveying, drafting and solicit- ing, making maps of every county in the State, with handsome engravings of men and houses, and writers engaged to give biographies, histories of localities, &c. The Times, to give an idea of the magnitude of this work, says the paper employed weighs over seventy tons, while the cardboard for the cover alone exceeds seventeen tons, and when completed it will require the service of twelve ordinary freight cars to transport to Minnesota. This is drawing heavy on the imagination or on railroad transportation! Capt. A. is also engaged in mapping many counties in other States, each county making a large book of maps, engravings and reading. He has a contract, the same paper says, for publishing a map, &c., of Iowa, and in a few days will put a hundred and fifty men in the field to work up the details. The maps will be lined engravings, instead of the usual lithographs. So much for our Davenporter abroad.

Two months later, on October 15, 1874, the Anamosa Eureka carried the following advance publicity, issued by A. T. Andreas himself, on the proposed Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa:

TO THE PUBLIC—I propose publishing an Atlas of the State of Iowa, containing a map of every County in the State, showing Sections, Timber, Prairie, Roads, Railroads, Streams, School Houses, Churches, etc., etc. Fine maps, 14x28 inches, of the State of Iowa, United States and Territories, and of both Hemispheres. Plans, with histories of the Cities, Towns, Villages, and Counties of the State. Biographies of a large number of early settlers and prominent men in the State. Also a condensed political history of the State, giving votes, etc. Six maps of Iowa, so colored as to show the Geological and Climatological condition of the State, with also the Congressional, Senatorial and Representative Districts. Sixteen maps of the United States, colored in five fine shades, to show the amount of Wheat, Corn, Hay, Cotton and Tobacco raised in proportion to acres cultivated. Also to show deaths by consumption and other diseases, in proportion to the deaths by all diseases, and to show density of population, and proportion of colored, and various foreign nationalities in the United States.

An immense amount of very useful statistical information, covering about 50 square feet of closely printed matter in every Atlas. To the patron of the work is published his name, residence, business, nativity, post-office address, and when he came to the State, besides locating name and residence on his land. The whole will be illustrated by fine lithographic views of hundreds of public buildings and private residences in both town and county, and portraits of prominent men.

A large force of experienced men will commence immediately an experimental canvass; and if sufficient encouragement is received, I hope to complete the work sometime during 1875. Yours truly,

A. T. ANDREAS, Publisher
Chicago, Ill.

Apparently the advance agent, or solicitor, in Jones County did very well, for on October 29, 1874, the Anamosa Eureka declared:

IOWA ATLAS—Mr. Boston, the atlas man, dropped in yesterday and showed us how he was succeeding in the canvass of this town. He has already secured orders of a large number of our leading business men, and the canvass is not nearly completed. We are glad to learn that the work is meeting with so good success, and that the people of Iowa appreciate and encourage such an undertaking.

Since the success of the atlas depended on the number of subscribers, it was important to enlist the wholehearted support of the most influential citizens in each community. The following endorsement from the "First Citizen" of Iowa—Governor C. C. Carpenter—was printed in the Belle Plaine Union of November 19, 1874:

To Whom it may Concern:—I have examined the proof sheets of the Minnesota Illustrated Historical Atlas, by Capt. A. T. Andreas, of Chicago, and I regard it as a work of superior merit, and it seems to me any citizen of Minnesota could hardly do without it. I understand from E. T. Phelps that Capt. Andreas is now taking the preliminary steps preparatory to publishing a similar Atlas of Iowa, with such improvements as past experience in this business naturally suggests to his mind.

Having known Mr. Andreas intimately and well for many years, I have no hesitation in assuring all who may read this that he will do all he proposes, and that the public will find his work fully equal to the promises of his circular and advertisements.

C. C. CARPENTER

The above appeared in scores of Iowa newspapers.

At least one sour note, which smacked of partisan politics rather than a diatribe against the Andreas Atlas, was contained in the Burlington Daily Hawk-Eye of December 16, 1874:

We question if it isn't in rather bad taste for the Governor of the Commonwealth of Iowa [C. C. Carpenter] to go into the puffing business and sign his name, under the official date of the "State of Iowa, Executive Department," to the statement that "It seems to him that any citizen of Minnesota can hardly do without" a certain map of the State, recently published. This map is an excellent one, we believe, but it is, or should be considered, a little below the dignity of the Governor of a great and growing State to go into the puff business, especially at such an exaggerated rate as the sample given above indicates. There are plenty of very good and very intelligent citizens who get along very conveniently and happily without State maps, and Governor Carpenter knows it. But, whether he is inditing a message, a thanksgiving proclamation, or a puff for a map, it is our Governor's failing to use so many words that he almost invariably says more than he means.

To canvass the entire State with its more than a million inhabitants was no small feat in 1875. It would be natural to expect that the canvassing part of the work that was destined to be distributed in fourteen months, would certainly be completed long before July 1st. It was not until the spring of 1875, however, that the atlas salesmen got as far west as Adams County. On April 15, 1875, the Adams County Union (Corning) declared:

Mr. Stacey, representing Andreas' Historical Atlas of Iowa, has arrived in Corning, and will wait upon the citizens of this County for their subscriptions to this invaluable work. We hope Mr. Stacey will meet with the greatest success. The book he represents will be the greatest, grandest, best thing ever gotten out for our State. We have already stated a few of its merits in these columns, and Mr. Stacey has now with him a copy of the Historical Atlas of Minnesota, which will show the plan on which the Iowa Atlas is projected. It should be borne in mind, however, that the Iowa Atlas is expected to surpass the Minnesota Atlas in many important respects.

Mr. Andreas has an army of agents in the field in the state, and confidently expects to meet with sufficient encouragement to warrant him in sparing no pains or expense in making the Atlas valuable, not only as a historical, statistical, and geographical work, but as a work of art. Every citizen—especially every old settler—will be particularly interested in possessing a copy. The price is somewhat higher than an ordinary book, but it should be remembered this is not an ordinary book. And when its many merits are considered the price is none too high. The subscription is not to be paid until the Atlas is delivered.

See Mr. Stacey and give him your name. Don't let Adams County be behind the other counties of the State in this matter.

Mindful of the loss he had sustained in producing his Minnesota Atlas, Andreas pushed his Iowa sales force until well into the summer. Thus, on June 30, 1875, the Marengo Republican noted:

Mr. J. H. Hackett is now engaged in canvassing Iowa County for subscriptions to this valuable work, which is expected to be completed and ready for delivery some time during the coming fall. . . . We advise all of our readers to give the work a careful examination when presented for their inspection, and also to subscribe for a copy if they desire to secure a perfect and reliable map of the State of Iowa.

The fact that solicitation was still going on for subscribers less than five months before delivery of the huge volume began in Iowa must amaze the average printer in 1970 who is faced with the problem of solicitation, compiling, typesetting, proofing, printing, folding, collating, and binding a volume. It also helps explain why there were gaps and errors in pagination as the Chicago printers completed various signatures that had been assigned a certain number of pages for Congressional Districts only to have them usually fall short, but sometimes run over.

As one phase (and a very important one) of Andreas' Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa we must not overlook the artists who were enlisted to perform their work in the field, and at the home office in Chicago. Since 1875 was a year when the stagecoach and the livery stable still afforded an important means of access to many smaller Iowa communities, the artists who were assigned to the field doubtless outnumbered the steel engravers in Chicago who copied the original art work on steel plates. The Clayton County Journal (Elkader) of November 25, 1874, noted:

ANDREAS' ATLAS.—Mr. W. W. Elliott, artist of the grand State Atlas enterprise, is in town soliciting views for presentation in this work. We should be glad to see Elkader and vicinity go "into pictures" to a reasonable extent. Parties desiring to confer with Mr. Elliott will find his headquarters at the Boardman House.

Three weeks later, on December 16, 1874, the same editor noted:

Our "special artist on the spot," for Captain Andreas' great atlas is sketching the best looking things in and about Elkader. Of course our pictur' is in.

Aside from being a plug for Andreas' Atlas the previous two quotes would indicate that a considerable length of time was spent by an artist in a relatively small community. Only one portrait of a Clayton County citizen appears in the book—that of Alexander McGregor. Four Clayton County town plats—Elkader, Guttenberg, McGregor, Strawberry Point—were included in the Atlas. In addition, eighteen Clayton County pictures graced the Congressional District section of the Atlas while nineteen were counted from adjoining Fayette County. And, if the "pictur' " of the editor of the Clayton County Journal (Elkader) did not appear among the portraits, at least the picture of the newspaper office itself, with J. W. Shannon's name as editor [see page 167], was recorded for posterity in a neat drawing.

The publication of A. T. Andreas' Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa—1875 was the most monumental Iowa history up to that time. As a reference tool it far eclipses any and all other volumes. As a matter of fact, nothing that has been printed since 1875 would begin to include, as does Andreas, the varied aspects of the Iowa scene from the beginnings of white settlement down to 1875.

The ten pages, containing 220 steel engravings of Iowans, represent a portrait gallery of historic and contemporary citizens that cannot be duplicated elsewhere. The neatly executed county maps—83 full page county maps and three double page spreads to delineate the 16 relatively unsettled counties in Northwestern Iowa—make an unusual and unique contribution to Iowa history and cartography. The 44 pages devoted to 198 plats of Iowa cities and towns, some of the latter very small, provide another rich resource to Iowaland as it appeared almost a century ago. The 182 pages containing 587 handsome engravings of homes, farms, churches, schools, colleges, breweries, livery stables, industries, hotels, courthouses and public buildings, represent a pictorial art gallery that cannot be duplicated by any combination of publications up to that time, or indeed by anything else that has appeared in the century that has elapsed since the appearance of the Andreas Atlas in 1875. Over the years the Andreas volume has been consulted more frequently than any other book in the rich collection of almost 100,000 volumes in the State Historical Society of Iowa Library.

Thus far we have seen that approximately 361 of the 596 pages of this colossal undertaking are pictorial in character. The remaining 233 pages may be divided as follows:

Biographical Sketches	31
Iowa, Topography, Geology, Climate	4
State History	26
County Histories	84
Patrons of the Atlas	56
Business Directory of Patrons	18

The widespread coverage of Iowans who chose to have their portraits appear in Andreas' Historical Atlas is demonstrated by the 65 towns sprinkled throughout the nine Congressional Districts. It is also worth noting under "Most Pictures" that Davenport—the city where Andreas was best known and highly respected—led all other Iowa towns with 33 portraits.

The nine Congressional Districts into which Iowa was divided in 1875 are a far cry from the seven (soon to become six) Congressional Districts in 1970. With the exception of the First District, the participation of the other eight Congressional Districts in the Andreas Atlas was uniformly good in 1875. It should be pointed out that the pages and pictures attributed to each of the Congressional Districts listed below appeared exclusively in the Atlas printed for that particular District.

In discussing the pictorial section of the Illustrated Historical Atlas a bit further, one should point out an unusual feature of the present reprint that was not contained in the original Andreas. Apparently believing it would be more practical from the standpoint of both sales and costs, Andreas allocated a certain number of pages for pictorial views of each of the Districts, including only one Congressional District in each bound volume. Thus, by substituting the equivalent of say 16 to 32 pages, or one to two 16-page printer's signatures, the Congressional District picture section would be different in each volume for which it was designed.

But this was where Andreas ran into trouble with his pagination. He probably allocated 16 pages to serve as a pictorial supplement for each of the nine Districts and this worked out almost perfectly for the 2nd, 3rd, 6th and 9th Districts. Unfortunately the 1st District paid enough for a picture section of only 6 pages. Andreas accordingly had to drop the unused 10 pages from his Atlas containing the First Congressional District pictures. This adding or dropping of page numbers continued through the nine Districts. Thus, he was able to bring out his huge volume with each Congressional District having its own pictorial section added to the already large number of pictures permanently included on 39 pages of each Atlas.

We have pulled all these pages together for the nine Congressional Districts and run them consecutively so that they make up a total of 182 pages. These are followed by the regular 39 pages of pictures that pretty well cover the entire State. Iowans who happen to have an original copy of Andreas' Illustrated Historical Atlas can quickly determine which Congressional District is represented in their book by checking the specially inserted pictorial section falling usually between pages 32 and 72. In order to include all nine Congressional District pictures in this volume we have eliminated all United States Census records—population, post offices, etc. which formed part of the original 1875 Atlas. The material contained in this reprint has been restricted solely to Iowa.

The 39 pages of pictures listed below appeared in all nine Congressional Districts. They were made up of a considerable number of relatively small pictures, although both full and half-page views were included. The fact that 79 towns are represented in this pictorial section attests to the widespread coverage of Iowa by the tireless Andreas salesmen. Again it should be noted that Davenport accounted for 34 pictures in this section, a fact that doubtless entitled the "Queen City of Iowa" to be honored with the frontispiece in all nine Congressional Districts of Andreas' Illustrated Historial Atlas of the State of Iowa—1875.

The reception of Andreas' Illustrated Atlas of the State of Iowa was uniformly enthusiastic. The Cedar Rapids Times of November 11, 1875, was lavish in its praise:

ANDREAS' Atlas of Iowa has been delivered to subscribers here, and we find it to be all the publishers promised—a complete and reliable representation of Iowa, its history, progress and present status. True, it is not free from errors, but we have, as yet, discovered no serious ones, such as will interfere with the value of the work. The pictures of persons and places are, in the main, correct and truthful, gotten up in excellent taste and style. The historical portion of the work is valuable, and taken as a whole, the citizens of Iowa can join the publishers in feeling a just pride in, and commending Andreas' Atlas of Iowa as the finest thing of the kind yet presented to the Iowa public.

The editor of the Daily Iowa State Register was equally warm in his praise. On December 14, 1875, when distribution of the Atlas began in Des Moines, he declared:

Andreas Atlas—Col. F. G. Batty yesterday commenced the work of delivering this work to subscribers in Des Moines. It is printed with great care and neatness, and is a volume that would be ornamental on any table and useful in any library. The Atlas contains 590 pages, 14x20 inches in size, properly indexed. Among the portraits are many of the distinguished men of Iowa; many that have been extinguished. The farm and city views are very handsome.

Two weeks later on December 28, 1875, the Des Moines editor reprinted the history of Des Moines in his columns, headlining the story as—"A Lively Sketch of Early Times—The First Churn—The First Church—and The First Baby." Similar accounts appeared in other Iowa papers.

The wide disparity in pictures sold between the First and Fourth Congressional Districts, for example, explains how uniform pagination was impossible in putting together the various sections of the Illustrated Atlas of the State of Iowa.

It is interesting to speculate as to just what happened in the First Congressional District that it merited only six pages containing 20 pictures compared, for example, with 26 pages and 94 pictures in the Fourth Congressional District. What is all the more perplexing is the fact that Des Moines County (Burlington), Henry (Mt. Pleasant), Louisa (Wapello), and Jefferson (Fairfield) are not represented in the above 20 pictures while Washington County is represented by 12 of the 20 pictures. For Lee County, Keokuk has 1 picture, Fort Madison 2 pictures, but tiny Farmington has 4 pictures! The only other picture is one of Keosauqua in Van Buren County.

And, while all of the nine Congressional Districts contained the same permanent 39 pages upon which 239 pictures were shown, again we must note that only 2 of these 239 pictures were associated with the seven counties making up the First Congressional District. Clearly some unfortunate incident must have occurred, possibly in its relationship to the press, for the Andreas Atlas to have fared so poorly in a project that had gained statewide acceptance. For Keokuk, Fort Madison, and Burlington are three of Iowa's most historic towns, and if anything, they should have led the rest of the state in the number of portraits and pictures used.

That the First District was quite aware of the prospective atlas is attested by the Fort Madison Plain Dealer of December 10, 1874, chronicling the arrival of E. F. Phelps, "Advertising Agent" for A. T. Andreas' Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa. Phelps had a copy of the "elegant" Atlas of Minnesota with him for inspection and the Fort Madison editor declared a similar one for Iowa would be "a valuable addition to the Library." The Plain Dealer carried a typical Andreas advertisement "To the Public" on the same page.

Twelve months later the Keokuk Daily Gate City of December 12, 1875, carried the following from its correspondent in Fort Madison:

There has been an agent here this week delivering the Illustrated Historical Atlas of Iowa to subscribers. This gentleman succeeded much better in delivering than he did in collecting pay for them. The precise amount that he took from here would be hard to tell, but we think about 1 out of every 3 were dissatisfied with the work, and refused to pay on it. A majority of those gentlemen who's faces adorn its pages from this city were so well pleased (?) with their pictures that while contemplating their extreme beauty (?) and correctness they let the agent leave town without paying for them. They are now wicked enough to charge that they were slandered, and if we were that agent or the author of that Atlas, we would take out a policy in some reliable Life Insurance Company before we could be induced to put in another appearance in Fort Madison within the life time of any of the gentlemen above mentioned. We are greatly mistaken if the lawyers don't get something to do before these maps are settled for.

Apparently no legal suits followed and doubtless the remaining third of the atlases were snatched up despite the fact that money was tight following the Panic of 1873. Reference to the Fort Madison portraits [page 2] will quickly reveal that they were among the very smallest executed, and hence commanded the smallest price to include them in the Illustrated Atlas. When other pictures appeared that were larger the subscribers were deeply disappointed.

Although Andreas was a heavy loser in the Minnesota and Indiana atlases, he appears to have had an uncanny ability in recouping his fortune. Invariably, however, whenever he seemed to be on the verge of amassing a fortune some new venture lured him to financial disaster. Thus, he invested in hotels and dining places to take advantage of the Chicago World's Columbian Exposition, only to lose so heavily as to be forced into bankruptcy.

The only really consistent success Andreas had was in his city, county, and state atlases and histories, and even in these he frequently lost money. But whether he won or lost, posterity must be grateful to this man who through his imagination, enterprise, and courage, left an imperishable record in Iowa and Midwestern history. It would be difficult to produce his equal.

One should not overlook the universally high esteem in which Andreas was held by many professional historians. Dr. Paul M. Angle, long-time Director of the Chicago Historical Society and an outstanding Lincoln and Illinois history scholar, declared Andreas' 3-volume History of Chicago, was "the great mine of Chicago history" even though it now remains "forgotten by almost everyone except librarians." Librarian Walter W. Ristow concurred with Dr. Angle, declaring Andreas' History of Chicago "is still recognized as the best historical record of Chicago in the nineteenth century."

Andreas' Illustrated Historical Atlas of Iowa and his 3-volume History of Chicago have been described by such words as "monumental" or "prodigious." If these words are true, what can one say of his volumes on Kansas and Nebraska?

Far from being 600-page tomes, as was the Iowa Atlas, his History of Nebraska, published in Chicago in 1882, contained 1,506 pages while his History of Kansas, published in 1883, numbered 1,616 pages. Both books are extremely difficult to pick up, Wright Howes rating them at $25 to $100 on the Rare Americana market. The large number of biographies and portraits contained in the Kansas volume soon caused it to be called the "Herd Book." One authority declared the "completeness of the work is amazing." The price of the Kansas volume was $12 and the printing is said to have reached 15,000 copies.

What manner of man was this Andreas, that he should have displayed such unusual abilities. According to a contemporary description he was "of good personal appearance, above the medium height, and light complexioned. He was . . . of slight frame, nervous and incessantly active; young in years, but of sufficient world experience to give him self-command. He had an open countenance, smiled easily and laughed readily. . . . His eyes were blue, frank in their gaze and sure to impress the beholder favorably. His language was good, his manner of speaking earnest, and his bearing, while in conversation, such as to enlist attention and inspire confidence. He was quick to form opinions, reach conclusions and prompt to act. . . . He had mixed with all classes of men, and had purposely studied human nature. His aim in life was to succeed."

And succeed he did! For, with his Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Minnesota Andreas introduced a "new format and pattern, as well as a new distribution policy for state atlases," which led him to become "one of the most prolific and successful atlas producers of the post-Civil War period" in the "new and rapidly growing states" of the Upper Mississippi Valley. His "aggressive operational and promotional techniques" differed greatly "from the practices of the established cartographic firms."

Between 1865 and 1885 he published, independently or with associates, approximately thirty county and state atlases. "At least one source," Walter W. Ristow declares, "gives Andreas credit for originating both the illustrated county atlas and the illustrated state atlas. Unquestionably, both types of cartographic publications reached their maximum development under his direction."

The Chicago, Kansas, and Nebraska volumes came out at the end of Andreas' publishing career. Although he continued to live in Chicago for thirteen years, Andreas appeared to gain only modest financial returns from his city directories. In 1897 he moved to Boston, and in 1899 to New Rochelle, New York, where he died on February 10, 1900.

The following notice of his passing appeared in the New Rochelle Pioneer of February 17, 1900:

Colonel A. T. Andreas died last Saturday morning at his home, No. 74 Elm Street, Residence Park, from the effects of paralysis believed to have been superinduced by bullet wounds which he received in the Civil War. Colonel Andreas was taken ill about three months ago while in Worcester, Massachusetts, on business and on his return to this city became bedfast. He suffered from paralysis of the right arm which spread to other parts of the body. The arm became so inflamed that he was removed to St. Luke's Hospital, New York, and the arm was amputated last week. . . .

Colonel Andreas was born in Orange County, New York, and was in his sixty-second year. . . .

He was a former officer of the Loyal Legion and was a Mason. A widow and two children—Mrs. C. M. Atherton and Miss E. Andreas—survive him. The burial was in the Post family plot in Orange County on Tuesday.

The magnitude of printing the original Andreas' Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa can be gleaned from the author's Preface. In the present reprint, although the book has been reduced one-third in size to 9 by 12 inches, it still required a staggering amount of paper to print it. Thus, the paper used in the body of the Atlas totaled 71,520 pounds, or almost 36 tons. Measured in still another way, it required two railroad cars to bring the paper stock to Iowa City. The end sheets required an additional 1,440 pounds of paper. The cover stock weighed 13,250 pounds, or 6½ tons and the cartons in which the Atlas was shipped required another 5,600 pounds. Approximately 700 pounds of glue was needed to complete the sewing and binding of 12,000 volumes.

The paper, printing, binding, boxing, and mailing the Atlas was performed by the Economy Advertising Company of Iowa City and the negatives were made by Tru-Art Engravers of Cedar Rapids. The 10,000 members of the Society will be pleased to know that their annual dues, plus sales of publications, underwrote the entire cost of production, from printing to mailing. Not a single dollar came from State appropriated funds.

PREFACE.

WE herewith present A. T. ANDREAS' ILLUSTRATED HISTORICAL ATLAS OF IOWA, complete, to our subscribers.

The work was undertaken something over a year ago, in the confident belief that such a publication would be well received and liberally patronized by a large number of the citizens of Iowa. The result has fully justified our expectation, the work having already received the practical endorsement of nearly Twenty-three Thousand Subscribers, the majority of whom are among the leading and influential men of every part of the State.

The HISTORICAL ATLAS OF IOWA is the largest publication ever issued in one edition, absorbing One Hundred and Twenty-two Tons of supersized and calendered paper, and requiring the services of Three Hundred Men for an average of one year and a quarter.

A work of such magnitude has tasked our energies and resources far beyond the comprehension of any except those who have a practical knowledge of the immense amount of labor, care and expense involved in its preparation and publication. We have spared no pains nor expense deemed necessary to make the work as complete as possible, and have introduced such new features as, in our judgment, would render the Atlas more valuable to our subscribers. For example:—In addition to the vast amount of matter promised in our prospectus, we have published complete tables of the Census of Iowa for 1875, bringing down the entire statistics of the State to the day of publication, at an increased expense of Several Thousand Dollars. This is a very valuable feature, and one which we confidently anticipate will be highly appreciated by the public; as statistics, although containing the most important information, are rarely furnished in so general a manner as this work will bring them before the people. We have printed these statistics as they have been furnished us by the State Department, not holding ourselves responsible for any slight errors that may, on a critical examination, be discovered in them.

In the preparation of the work, a great variety of details have had to be supervised; and, while each department has been under the charge of a competent superintendent, who has given to his respective branch of the work his constant and undivided attention, yet, from the greatness of the work, it has been impossible that any one man could supervise it in all its details. Hence, a few errors have unavoidably crept in; but they are chiefly mechanical, and not of a character to impair the practical value of the Atlas.

It will be noticed that a few skips have been made in paging. This was unavoidable in a work so large, and at the same time requiring to be printed while the historical and statistical matter was fresh. To have waited till every department was complete, would have delayed the publication of the work at least eight months. Hence the different departments had to be begun at an early day and printed as the work progressed. It was, therefore, necessary to estimate beforehand the number of pages which the matter in each department would be likely to fill, and to estimate large enough to avoid paging in fractions. In doing this, the number of pages in each department was over-estimated, and hence the skips which have occurred in passing from one department to another. This, however, does not affect the value of the Atlas, as the matter is all printed in its regular sequence, and every article, map and view in the work is accurately indexed.

We make this explanation so that the reader may understand how the skips in the paging occurred, and not suppose that portions of the Atlas are left out.

Citizens in some portions of the State may complain that they are not equally represented with other portions in some of the departments of this work. This is explained by inequality of patronage. The publishers would have been glad, had it been practicable, to have made every part of the State alike in its representation in all the departments of the Atlas; but owing to previous publications of County Atlases, etc., in some localities, a feeling existed prejudicial to our work, and it was found impossible to induce Agents to work in those localities with any assured prospect of success. We feel confident that, if the citizens of those portions of the State could have understood the character and value of the Atlas we have actually produced, they would have cheerfully given us the encouragement necessary to have represented them as fully in the View, Biography and Portrait Departments, as other portions are represented.

It should be borne in mind that the enormous expense of getting up these departments could not be incurred in those sections of the State which yielded us barely subscribers enough to pay for canvassing the territory. But in the Map and Historical Departments, which did not depend upon the co-operation of patrons, the work will be found equally complete for all parts of the State. There is, indeed, a difference in the length of the County Histories, but it was impracticable, both from the extent of materials obtained and the number of different writers employed, to reduce them all to a uniform standard; and the necessity for printing them progressively also interfered with their reduction to such a uniformity. The counties are not arranged in the work alphabetically, but they are indexed in that manner, which will equally facilitate reference to them. We trust that the Atlas will meet the general approval of the citizens of Iowa, for whose special benefit the work has been prepared.

We take this occasion to present our thanks to our numerous subscribers throughout the State, for their liberal patronage.

Our acknowledgments are also due to His Excellency, Governor Carpenter, for his high appreciation of the value of our work, and the cordial and ready manner in which he has aided us by every means in his power; —to the officers of the State Department, for access to archives and documents needed to make up the statistical, political and historical matter herein published;— to the numerous County Officials throughout the State, who have aided us in gathering such facts as were necessary from the records, and in consulting plat-books of cities, towns and villages;—to many private citizens and "Old Settlers," who have furnished our agents and historians with valuable information concerning the early settlement of the country;—and to the Press of the State in general, whose editors and publishers have cordially encouraged and aided our enterprise. On the part of all, our agents have, with but few exceptions, met with uniform courtesy and cheerful assistance.

For the materials of the General History, the State Library was made available to our historian, through the courtesy of Governor Carpenter; W. H. Fleming, Esq., Private Secretary to the Governor; Hon. Josiah T. Young, Secretary of State; and the State Librarian, Mrs. Ada North, to whom our acknowledgments are justly due.

We are also indebted to the "Annals of Iowa," and to several well informed citizens, who have contributed valuable historical and biographical articles to that work, as Judge Negus, of Fairfield, in his "Early History of Iowa"; Prof. Parvin, of Iowa City, and others. We also acknowledge assistance rendered us by Col. A. P. Wood and C. C. Child, Esq., of Dubuque; Hoyt Sherman, Esq., and Mills & Co., of Des Moines; and many others, whose aid in procuring historical details of many localities and of the Press, Biographies, and the Military Record of Iowa during the Rebellion, have been invaluable.

We send forth our work into the busy centers of trade and commerce; into the work-shops of the industrial classes; into the counting-houses of merchants and manufacturers; into the county offices, schools, academies and colleges; and into thousands of families in the young, prosperous and enlightened commonwealth of Iowa, confidently believing that it will be received as the most complete and valuable Compendium of State Information in all the various departments represented that has yet been published, and trusting to the candid judgment of our subscribers and the general public, as to the manner in which it shall be received and appreciated. We do not claim that it is perfect, but we have used our best endeavors to make it as nearly so as men and means would permit.

Biographical Sketches.

Honorable CYRUS CLAY CARPENTER, present Governor of Iowa, was born in Hartford Township, Susquehanna County Pennsylvania, on the 24th of November, 1829. This portion of Pennsylvania had been the home of his New England ancestors for three generations, whose hardy endurance, energy and perseverance, had redeemed it from a savage wilderness and converted its rugged and forest-covered hills into a fruitful field. The story of the settlement of this region by the Carpenters and other pioneers is briefly as follows :

In the Fall and Winter of 1789 several young men of Attleborough, Massachusetts, had frequent meetings to deliberate on the subject of leaving the place of their nativity for the unexplored forests of the West. These men were mostly unmarried and without family hindrances to endure the hardships and dangers incident to pioneer life. A few of the number were married and owned small farms. A company of nine concluded to enter upon the undertaking in the Spring—their names were Caleb Richardson, Hosea Tiffany, Ezekiel Titus, Robert Follett, Moses Thatcher, Samuel Thatcher, John Carpenter, Daniel Carpenter and Josiah Carpenter. Messrs. Tiffany, Titus and Follett, were married. They left Attleborough in two companies, by two different routes, and proceeded by way of Kinderhook to Albany, New York, where they made inquiries of the Surveyor General as to a favorable location. He suggested Canajoharie, Herkimer and German Flats, as inviting fields, or, if not suited there, then Cherry Valley, or some town soon to be surveyed west of the Unadilla. The reported sickness of the Mohawk Valley induced them to turn aside from the river and proceed to Cherry Valley, where they were inclined to settle, but on visiting one William Cooper they were invited to pass down the Susquehanna River with him in a boat, free of expense, to view the lands of which he had the agency, lying about one hundred miles south. Passing down the river they arrived at Great Bend, May 16. Here they found a few families with whom they tarried over the Sabbath, and on the following Monday proceeded with Mr. Cooper, the surveyor, and others, into the wilderness in a southern direction. On Tuesday they reached Beaver Meadow, and having found a good running spring, erected near it a bark cabin, the first "house" for a white man ever erected in that section.

After several days spent in viewing the country, a purchase was made of a tract of land four miles long and one mile wide, for £1,198. The writings were drawn and signed on a hemlock stump, May 22, 1790. Thus these hardy pioneers passed the fertile Valley of the Mohawk to find a home of their choice amid the heavy forests and rugged hills of Northeastern Pennsylvania. Northern Pennsylvania and the adjacent parts of New York were then but a wilderness. Between Lanesborough and the mouth of Snake Creek, about a dozen families had located. Another small settlement styled the "Irish settlement," had been made at Hopbottom, now Brooklyn, and another about fifteen or twenty miles below Thornbottom. From neither of these places could a supply of provisions be obtained. Wilkesbarre and a French settlement below Towanda, on the Susquehanna, were the nearest points of supply, and to reach these a wilderness of forty or fifty miles had to be traversed, without beasts of burden or without the sign of a path or trail to lead them in the right direction. These were the hardships to be overcome, only one generation ago, in a country now teeming with all the luxuries of modern civilization. In the Spring of 1791 the most of them had made a home on their land, and very soon the settlement became known as the "Nine partners," which name it bore till 1807.

Here the father of Cyrus C. Carpenter was born, and became the head of a family by his marriage with Miss Amanda M. Thayer. He was a farmer in moderate circumstances.

The father and mother of Cyrus died when he was quite young, being but ten at the death of his mother, and two years later he was left an orphan by the death of his father. The protracted sickness of his parents entirely exhausted the little property they had acquired by a life of industry. Being left destitute, young Carpenter went first to learn the trade of clothier, at which he worked for some months, but not liking the trade, he quit, and soon after engaged with a farmer, and was employed in farm pursuits for some years, devoting a season each Winter to study in the district schools of the place. When eighteen he commenced teaching school, and for the next four years divided his time between teaching and attending the academy in Hartford. At the conclusion of this term of years he left his native state for Ohio, where he engaged in teaching school for one and a half years, and working in Summer on the farm. This was in Johnstown, Licking County, now one of the best counties in the state, with good soil, well improved farms, and a prosperous people, fully up to the requirements of the age.

In 1854 he turned his face westward, stopping at various points in Illinois and Iowa, but not being satisfied, he still kept moving, until his arrival in Des Moines, then a town of some twelve hundred inhabitants, far from market, and not affording any very favorable prospect of coming greatness as a central commercial city of wealth and influence. On account of the low state of his finances he was compelled to prosecute his search for a location on foot, which he did, traveling the whole distance to Fort Dodge, where he arrived June 28, 1854, and which was his home until his removal to Des Moines. On this lonesome journey his entire worldly possessions were contained in a carpet sack which he carried in his hand. At Fort Dodge he soon found employment as assistant to a government surveyor, in dividing townships immediately west of the Fort. The contract was soon completed, and the employees returned to head quarters, where Mr. Carpenter assisted his landlord in cutting hay, but after working a few days he was employed to run the compass for Leech & Bell, of Davis, who had a contract of government surveying in what is now Palo Alto and Kossuth Counties. In the early part of January he returned to Fort Dodge, and not having employment for a few weeks, he engaged in teaching school. Early the next Spring he was employed to take charge of a set of hands and survey a contract taken by Haggard, of Dubuque. This contract comprised the Counties of Emmet and the northern part of Kossuth.

On his return to Fort Dodge he found that the land office which had been established at that place by act of Congress, was about to open for the sale of lands then coming into market. Being familiar with the country, and the location of the most choice land, he opened a private land office, and in platting and surveying lands for those seeking homes, or land to enter on speculation, he found constant and profitable employment for the next three years. During this time he became extensively known, and being an active Republican from the organization of the party, he was naturally chosen as the standard bearer for that section of the state, as candidate for the State Legislature. He was elected in the Fall of 1857, and took his seat in the session of 1858. His district then comprised nineteen counties, which he represented during the following Legislative term, being the first session held in Des Moines after the removal of the capital from Iowa City.

In 1861, on the breaking out of the rebellion, he volunteered his services, and was soon appointed to a responsible position, and assigned to duty as a commissary of subsistence. Serving in this department as a captain, much of the time being chief commissary of the left wing of the sixteenth army corps, until 1864, when he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, and assigned to duty on the staff of General Logan, as chief commissary of the fifteenth A. C. He continued in the performance of this duty on the march through Georgia, and from Savannah to Raleigh, when, the war being closed, he went with his corps to Louisville, and was mustered out in August, 1865, having the rank of Brevet Colonel.

Returning to Fort Dodge, he found that the wonderful development of the country and the increase in population had called new operators into the field, and that his business, once so prosperous, had passed into other hands. Not being of a disposition to remain idle, he at once set himself about the improvement of a piece of land of which he was owner, where he remained until the Fall of 1866, when he was elected Register of the State Land Office, which required his removal to Des Moines. He was re-elected to the same office in 1868, and refused a nomination in 1870—returning to Fort Dodge hopeful of remaining in private life. But in this he was doomed to disappointment, for the party to which he belonged could not spare his services. Therefore in the Summer of 1871 he was nominated for Governor, and in the Fall was elected to fill the office of chief executive of Iowa, for two years. He was inaugurated on the 11th of January, 1872, and his address delivered on this occasion was replete with facts in relation to the best interests of the state. It is a document but rarely, if ever surpassed by those entering upon duties in an untried field. After alluding to the different material interests to be fostered, he closed this his first message to the Legislature, and to the people of Iowa, in these words :

"We may differ upon some measures of public policy. We may, as partisans, be Republicans and Democrats. But there is one particular in which we will not differ—in our abiding love for Iowa and her people, we are one. And my desire is, we may so meet our joint responsibilities that, in the great realm of the future, Iowa, in her character of patriotism, virtue and intelligence, will stand as an exemplar in a sisterhood of states, the number of which no prophet may to-day predict ; all constituting one nation, one sovereign nationality, with one governing civilization, one inspiring history, one alluring hope, one foredated future destiny, and one eternal weight of earthly glory."

In 1873 Governor Carpenter became the nominee of the Republican party of Iowa for a second term. He was re-elected October 14, 1873, and inaugurated on the 27th of January, 1874.

During his entire life, Mr. Carpenter has been devoted to the principles of reform and the best interests of all classes of citizens who, by adoption or by birth-right, are entitled to a home upon our soil and the protection of our laws, under the great charter of "Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness." In an address in 1852, he took advanced views upon the leading subjects of public interest. He had already laid the foundation for that love of freedom which afterwards found an ample field of labor with the Republican party. There was nothing chimerical in his views. He looked at every strata of human society, and from the wants of the masses, wisely devined duty and prophesied destiny. He would have the people of a free republic educated in the spirit of the civilization of the age. Instead of cultivating a taste for a species of literature tending directly to degrade the mind and deprave the heart, thereby leading back to a state of superstition and consequent barbarism ; he would cultivate principles of temperance, industry and economy in every youthful mind, as the indispensable ingredients of good citizens, or subjects upon whose banner will be inscribed Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

Thus early Mr. Carpenter saw the destined tendency of our American institutions, and the advancing civilization of the age. He saw it in the peace congress whose deliberations have made the Rhine thrice immortal. He saw it in the prospective railway which he believed would one day unite the shores of the Atlantic with that of the Pacific—a fact realized by the construction of the great continental railway—completed and carrying the commerce of the world at a date only eighteen years removed from the day of prophetic vision.

It was thus early that he began to study of the wants of the world, and with what clearness and directness may be seen by the correctness of his vision, and the accomplishment of what he considered an inevitable necessity.

Thus growing up into manhood, and passing onward in the rugged pathway of time, disciplined in political economy and civil ethics in the stern school of experience, he is prepared to meet every emergency with a steady and a ready hand ; to bring order out of discord and insure harmony and prosperity to the land.

Governor Carpenter's services as public speaker and orator, on various occasions, have been widely sought after and highly appreciated. Among his earlier efforts in this direction, his oration at Fort Dodge, on the 4th of July, 1865, is an example. He also delivered an able 4th of July oration at Dexter, Iowa, in 1871. His agricultural addresses, and those before colleges and literary institutions, have been numerous, and rank among the best productions of the kind in Iowa.

On the 4th of July, 1872, he delivered an oration at Spencer, Iowa, in which he elucidated one of the most vital questions relating to education—showing in a concise and forcible manner that men are not the product of legislation, but of voluntary achievement, labor and self-culture. What we are, what we may be, and what will be our future, depend more upon ourselves than upon statutory enactment or fundamental law. After reviewing the tendency to depend upon legislation rather than upon personal exertion, to exalt the state at the expense of the individual, and to think that whatever is wrong in the social compact may find its remedy in the pages of the statute book, he says : "The idea obtains credence almost everywhere, that man, with his endowments for good or evil, is the result of the structure of certain national institutions, in disregard of the truer theory that national institutions assume their character from the man." With this as the key note of his grand discourse, he argues for an education that shall bring out the highest qualities of manhood, and shows that these qualities being the groundwork in man, will naturally shape themselves into wise and beneficent legislation, and be the foundation of the greatness and prosperity of the state. The discourse is an able and thoughtful production, and we regret that our space will not allow us to give fuller extracts from it.

He delivered an eloquent oration at Muscatine on Decoration Day, May, 1873. We can not forbear quoting the closing paragraph of this noble discourse :

"These noble men have now been relieved from duty, having passed over the river into the great 'camp' of the 'All Hail Hereafter,' and a new detail has been ordered. To-day WE are on duty. Are our arms as brightly burnished as were those of our predecessors? Are we as sleepless to the approach of danger as the relief whose posts we have come to occupy? The countersign to-day is 'FIDELITY!' If any prowler about the lines passet the post we profess to hold, or steps across the beat our feet are supposed to trend, who has not this countersign, we are responsible for the detriments which thereby may come to the republic. It is for us to HALT the suspected, and require them to 'MARK TIME,' until better men are signaled to the front. Doing this, and bearing in our hearts the example of those whose memory we to-day embalm, it is not too much to hope that the day will come again when the public service will exemplify an honor and an integrity which will rise into the atmosphere of chivalry."

The Kansas Commonwealth speaks of this oration and its author in the following language, making copious extracts from the address :

"In all the country there is no more ardent and consistent republican, no man of better impulses and stricter integrity, than Cyrus C. Carpenter, present Governor of our sister state of Iowa. He has an admirable way, too, of treating political topics in a candid, logical and pointed style. Hence his public utterances are entitled to and always command general attention.

"On Decoration Day Governor Carpenter delivered an eloquent, well timed oration at Muscatine—an oration which gives expression, with painful plainness, to the dominant feeling concerning our political affairs. It may, indeed, be fairly taken as a presentation, in a fair, and truthful, and forcible manner, of the new issues which are coming up for adjustment, and which can not safely be ignored or put aside."

After quoting the Governor's oration quite extensively, the editor adds :

"These exalted sentiments are not the hypocritical mouthings of a soured politician, or an uncaught corruptionist who seeks to conceal his own shortcomings under an energetic outburst of indignation 'on general principles.' Governor Carpenter is a man whose character is above reproach, whose services to his state and to the country have been conspicuously straightforward and unselfish, and who illustrates in his daily walk and conduct the truths which he urges upon the country in his public utterances. When such a man sounds the alarm, it is time to stop and listen ; and the recommendations which he feels it incumbent upon him to offer, merit the close and thoughtful attention of all good citizens."

On the subject of cheap transportation Governor Carpenter gave his views very elaborately in an able address before the State Agricultural Society at Des Moines, in 1873. He said of the exorbitant rates of transporting grain to market ; "This is the skeleton in every Western farmer's corn crib."

The Inter-Ocean published in full Governor Carpenter's speech delivered at Cedar Rapids at the opening of the campaign of 1873, with the following editorial comments :

"It will impress the people of all parties who may read it, with confidence both in his judgment and integrity. He has been a citizen of Iowa for nearly twenty years ; during the war was intrusted with responsibilities of the gravest character ; discharged the duties of important civil trusts before his accession to the Governorship ; but the man, woman or child does not live who can truthfully charge him with dishonesty, or collusion with dishonesty. He is a plain, practical, non-assumptive man of the people, who has won his way to the proud position he occupies by sheer merit, and he will not only be re-elected by a larger majority than he received two years ago, but his administration will stand out all the brighter by reason of the calumny which petty demagogues have attempted to force upon him."

The following is from the Dubuque Daily Times of July 1, 1873, immediately after the convention re-nominating Governor Carpenter :

Governor Carpenter was re-nominated by acclamation, a fitting indorsement of an enlightened and faithful executive. No man comes in contact with C. C. Carpenter without appreciating the fact that he is one of the ablest men, and one of the most honest and pure minded and unselfish officers, we have ever had in the State. Plain, unassuming, modest to a fault, he has won his public position more through the enthusiasm of his friends, than by any personal efforts or desires of his own. But he everywhere, and at all times, and upon all occasions, has shown how fully the confidence of his friends is justified—how equal he is in resources to every position—how great a reserve force there is in him, acutely to observe, broadly and accurately to measure, honestly to do, and eloquently to enforce and defend. Among the first to appreciate the importance of the issues now upon us, he has also been one of the earliest and most able of the advocates of the rights of the people as against monopolies, involved in these issues. He had enough of the prescience of statesmanship to appreciate the full significance of the struggle, and enough of sympathy with the people to attach himself early to their cause. No Executive of any other State has exceeded him in efforts and earnestness in the discussion and advancement of measures looking to the relief of the country from transportation evils ; none have sought more sincerely to turn the public thought to the practical means of securing such end. And it is evident that whatever enlightened executive judgment can do to secure for the farmers of Iowa cheap freights to and from the seaboard, will be done by Governor Carpenter in the future as in the past. As to his past official course, there is no taint of dishonesty or neglect."

In 1870, Governor Carpenter prepared a convenient little volume, entitled "Instructions to County Surveyors," in compliance with Chapter 183 of the acts of the Thirteenth General Assembly. This work was published by the authority of the State, and has been found a valuable compendium of the laws and decisions relating to County Surveyors and their duties. It is full of minute details, showing careful research and pains in its preparation, and is as full and complete a summary of instruction as could be desired on the subjects of which it treats.

Honorable C. C. COLE.—Probably few men in the Northwest, certainly none in Iowa, have deserved and secured greater popularity than the present Chief Justice of the Iowa Supreme Court, Honorable Chester Cicero Cole, who is a native of Oxford, Chenango County, New York, where he was born June 4, 1824, and where he passed the earlier portion of his life. He received a good academic education, and at the age of eighteen was prepared to enter the Junior class in Union College, but was prevented from doing so by a severe and protracted illness. Four years later he entered the law school of Harvard University, where he received a thorough legal training under such eminent teachers as Simeon Greenleaf, William Kent, and Joel Parker. Immediately after leaving Harvard he removed to Frankfort, Kentucky, and took charge of the legislative department of the Frankfort Commonwealth. He returned to his former home in New York State, and June 24, 1848, was married to Amanda M. Bennett, a lady with whom he had been acquainted from childhood. Returning to Kentucky with his wife, he located at Marion, Crittenden County, was admitted to the bar, and commenced in earnest the practice of his chosen profession. The second day after his arrival he was employed in an important case, in which he was eminently successful, and at the ensuing term of the Circuit Court, a few weeks afterwards, he was engaged in thirty-three separate cases, while at the succeeding term, some six months later, he was retained in every case on the docket. During the nine years that he continued to practice at Marion, there was not an important contested trial in which he was not employed, while in the higher criminal practice in which he was engaged he never had a client whom he undertook to defend convicted, and never prosecuted more than two men, one for murder, who was hung, and the other for passing counterfeit money, and he was sent to the penitentiary. This was certainly a remarkable experience, considering that he had for competitors such able and distinguished jurists as L. W. Powell, afterwards Governor of Kentucky, and United States Senator Samuel A. Kingman, now Chief Justice of Kansas, Archibald Dixon, Lieutenant Governor, and United States Senator; Geo. W. Barbour, Robert A. Patterson, H. C. Burnett, for many years a member of Congress; John W. Crockett, a real nephew of the original David Crockett, and other leading men identified with the history of Kentucky. His practice also extended into several counties in Illinois, where he was accustomed to meet in the courts Gen. John A. Logan, present United States Senator from Illinois; W. K. Parish, Judge and United States District Attorney; W. J. Allen, member of Congress and United States District Attorney for Southern Illinois; A. J. Kuikendall member of Congress; Colonel Dougherty; N. L. Freeman, Supreme Court reporter; John Olney, who was Lincoln's elector in 1860; and others who have, like Judge Cole, since distinguished themselves as lawyers and statesmen.

In May, 1857, Judge Cole came to Des Moines, Iowa, where he has since resided, and tendering his professional services, soon acquired an extensive and lucrative practice. Two years later he was a candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court on the Democratic ticket, but was defeated; and in 1860 was nominated for Congress in the Southern District of Iowa, making, with his successful competitor, Gen. Curtis, a seventy days of joint debate campaign of the district. On the receipt of the news of the firing upon Fort Sumter, he was among the first to head a call for a public meeting in support of the Union, which meeting was held in Sherman Hall, Des Moines, and addressed by him in an unanswerably able and eloquent speech, in which he took strong grounds in favor of standing by the Government, and putting down the rebellion by force of arms. From that time on he was a most decided, outspoken Union man, and naturally found his alliance with the Republican party, although his recognition as a Democrat did not end until the Fall of 1862, when being called upon to address his Democratic brethren assembled in convention at Des Moines, he delivered a most excoriating denunciation of their course in sympathizing with and encouraging the South. During 1861 he was zealous and persistent in endeavoring to influence the Democratic party to support the war, and to that end secured the meeting of a second Democratic convention, which, however, failed to relieve the party from its equivocal position.

In the Spring of 1863, when an outbreak was threatened along the Missouri border in consequence of President Lincoln's proclamation proposing the abolition of slavery as a war measure, Judge Cole left his court and spent near thirty days in making Union speeches to the people through those counties, for the purpose of reconciling his old Democratic friends to the emancipation policy of the Administration. In the campaign of 1863 he wrote a letter, giving in clear and unanswerable language his reasons for supporting William W. Stone, the Republican candidate, for Governor, which as a campaign document had a wide circulation and a powerful influence throughout the state. Two years later he came out boldly and unequivocally in favor of negro suffrage, in an open letter written to Mr. Windsor, his old friend and Presbyterian brother of Taylor County, and was probably the first man of influence in the state to put himself thus publicly on record in favor of this then unpopular measure, which he fearlessly defended, ably arguing that it was right and reasonable, and that justice to the colored race demanded it.

In December, 1863, Judge Cole took an active part in the organization of the Iowa Soldiers' Orphans' Home, and was one of its trustees until June, 1865, when he was elected President. At the time the institution came under his control, it was a small concern, with only twenty-five children, and less than ten thousand dollars of means; but during the one year it was under his management there were gathered eight hundred soldiers' orphan children into comfortable homes provided for them, and there was collected, expended and turned over to the state, in money and property, over a quarter of a million of dollars.

In 1865, in connection with Judge Wright, he organized a law school at Des Moines, which has since been transferred to Iowa City, and made a part of the State University, and is now one of the best and most deservedly popular institutions of the kind in the West.

In February, 1864, he was appointed one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Iowa, and in the following Fall was unanimously nominated for the same position, and elected by over 40,000 majority, and in like manner was re-nominated and re-elected in 1870 by an equally large vote.

The career of Judge Cole upon the bench epitomizes the history of Iowa jurisprudence for the past twelve years. Associated during his judicial experience with the ablest minds which the state has produced — with Wright, and Dillon, and Lane; with Beck, and Miller, and Day — called to the consideration of legal questions, a large number of which were without precedent in the reports of the state, particularly those relating to the taxing power, and to the relations of corporations to the whole body corporate, Judge Cole has been the peer of the ablest of his judicial associates. With respect to the subjects to which we have adverted, and which during this period have been matters of absorbing public interest, the decisions of the court have been plainly and indelibly impressed with the stamp of his own convictions. The positions which he assumed in the earlier history of this time, particularly with reference to corporate rights, have come to be the settled faith of the public mind.

His judicial work has been distinguished for a display of the highest qualities which are demanded by the bench. Of remarkable quickness and correctness of apprehension, he always deals directly with the point in issue; of great discrimination in the selection of analogies, he illustrates his opinions with few but apt citations of authorities; fortunate in his early legal training, and still more fortunate in the possession of an untiring industry which has never given him respite from study, he has infused into his decisions, and thus into the legal monuments of the state, the spirit with which he has been imbued from a lifelong intercourse with the highest sources of the law. To these qualities he has brought a singleness of intellectual purpose which has always kept him from discursive argument and reasoning, and a courage of conviction by which he has announced the law boldly and fearlessly, regardless of personal consequences or present approval.

As a judicial writer, he has elegance, clearness, and force. Some of his opinions, while always reaching to the very point in issue, have the characteristics of scholarly essays upon legal topics. At the same time, while his elegance of diction and readiness of expression might expose him to the danger of intellectual display, his opinions always bear the evident purpose of casting upon the mind of the reader the same light which is shining in his own. This paramount and single object is always in view — to illustrate clearly and logically his own earnest and honest convictions.

To one other characteristic his reputation stands not a little indebted. While always a lawyer and a jurist, his inspiration has not been drawn alone from the study of authorities, or guided by the formulæ of the books. Of large sympathies, and a thorough practical knowledge, he has never lost sight of the human and ethical side of the law in his devotion to the maxims of the past. With him, a decision must always, indeed, have been grounded in the law; but that could not be law which did violence to equity, or resulted in inconvenience or wrong to great masses of the community.

The people of the state, and particularly the members of the legal profession, are glad to acknowledge his great services upon the bench, and point with pride to his opinions as memorials of the best period of Iowa jurisprudence.

For the last four or five years he has edited the Western Jurist, an able and widely circulating periodical, published at Des Moines. He is also editor of a new and largely annotated edition of the Iowa Reports.

Such is the necessarily brief and imperfect life history of one who, having little more than reached the meridian of life, has acquired a State and National reputation attained by few in this the most laborious and exacting of all the professions. Possessing a natural genius for the law — or being what might be termed a born lawyer — Judge Cole has cultivated and strengthened his naturally acute, subtle and penetrating legal mind, by careful and laborious study, large experience and long practice, until he has become a thorough master of the legal science. As a forensic orator he is clear, forcible and argumentative, possessing much of that magnetic power which sways juries and secures the breathless attention of his audience, while as a judge and a man, his clear, penetrating judgment, his terse and forcible manner of expression, combined with sterling integrity of heart and honesty of purpose, have secured for him the respect and confidence of the bar, and all who have known him intimately and well.

Honorable GEORGE G. WRIGHT, United States Senator, was born in Bloomington, Indiana, March 24, 1820, and graduated from the University of that state in 1839.

He studied law with his brother, Honorable Joseph A. Wright, who was Governor of Indiana, and afterwards Minister to Berlin, where he died in 1867. Senator Wright was admitted to the bar in 1840, and in that year removed to Iowa, settling in Keosauqua, Van Buren County, on the 14th of November, where he opened an office for the practice of his profession, and continued till his removal to Des Moines on the 20th of October, 1865.

In 1847 he was prosecuting attorney for Van Buren County; in 1848 he was elected to the State Senate, and served in that capacity two terms; in 1853 he received the Whig vote of the General Assembly for United States Senator, but the Democrats being in the majority, General George W. Jones, of Dubuque, was elected.

Senator Wright was elected Chief Justice of Iowa in the Winter of 1854–5; but in 1859, when judges of the Supreme Court were elected under the new Constitution, he declined a nomination. In the Summer of 1860 a vacancy occurred in the bench of the Supreme Court by the death of Judge Stockton, Governor Kirkwood appointed Judge Wright to fill the place. He accepted, and occupied it till the next general election, when he was elected by the people to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Stockton, which continued till December 31, 1865. At the general election in 1865 he was re-elected for a term of six years ensuing from the first of January, 1866.

On the 18th of January, 1870, Judge Wright was elected to the Senate of the United States for a full term, commencing March 4, 1871, in consequence of which, he resigned his place on the Bench, to take effect September 1, 1870. In the Senate he acted on the following important committees: on the Judiciary, on Finance, Claims, the Revision of the Laws, and on Civil Service and Retrenchment. For the remainder of the Forty-third Congress he is Chairman of the Committee on Claims.

For five years, commencing in January, 1860, Judge Wright held the office of President of the State Agricultural Society. In the Fall of 1865, in connection with Judge Cole, he organized the Law School at Des Moines, which in 1868 was removed to Iowa City, and made part of the State University. Judge Wright continued to give lectures in the Law School till he entered upon his duties as United States Senator, March 4, 1871.

In politics Senator Wright was originally a Whig. He came to the Territory of Iowa when the Democratic party was strongly in the ascendant, but just at the time when party lines began to be distinctly drawn in the Harrison campaign of 1840. Among the influences which aided in giving strength and development to the Whig party of the state, and in paving the way for its final absorption by the Republican movement of 1856, the personal exertions, ability, and weight of character of Senator Wright, formed no inconsiderable part. He was from the first an able and zealous advocate of Whig principles, and subsequently of the principles, policy and measures which have been so signally triumphant under Republican auspices throughout the country. In 1850, against his earnest protest to the contrary, he was nominated by the Whig Convention in the First District for Congress; and although not elected, succeeded in effecting a considerable reduction of the then overwhelming Democratic majority.

On the 25th of February, 1875, Senator Wright wrote a letter declining re-election to the Senate. He returned to Des Moines, and is now engaged in the practice of law as senior partner in the firm of Wright, Gatch & Wright.

No man in Iowa has been more laborious, thorough and effective in political campaigns than Senator Wright, particularly during the last four or five years. He has served the public faithfully and well for a long period, during which he has been a hard worker, without accumulating a large fortune.

Senator Wright delivered his first speech in the campaign of 1875, on Saturday, September 4, at Hillsboro, Henry County. The State Register says of it:

"We give Senator Wright's speech as completely as possible for the reason that to him, more than to any other man in Iowa, the people look with the most confidence for an honest, frank, and logical discussion of all political questions. His candor and fairness, too, make his speeches, independent of all mere partisanship, of great popular interest and value.

"Purity and power both considered, Senator Wright stands to-day the highest of all our public men in Iowa. The people implicitly believe in his honesty, because in a lifetime of official service he has never proved else than honest; and they know he is strong because he has been tried in several of the most exalted positions in our public service, and ever and always found the man for the place and a leader of the people. This speech which we publish to-day is worthy of the man and the party."

In matters of education, both general and local, he has always felt a deep interest, and taken an active part, being many times elected to serve on school boards, and has aided the cause of education in many other respects. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and President of the Board of Trustees of the Simpson Centenary College at Indianola.

Senator Wright was married on the 19th of October, 1843, to Miss Mary H. Dibble, of Van Buren County, daughter of Judge Thomas Dibble, formerly of New York.

Honorable ALONZO ABERNETHY.—The paternal ancestors of Mr. Abernethy came from the north of Ireland to Connecticut at an early day; his mother was a lady of York, Pennsylvania, of Dutch ancestry. Alonzo Abernethy was born in Sandusky County, Ohio, April 14, 1836. In 1839 his father moved to Bellevue, Ohio, where Alonzo received the rudiments of common school education during the Winter months, working on the farm during Summer seasons until the age of seventeen. In March, 1854, he moved with his father's family to Fayette County, Iowa, and there, during the following Winter, commenced teaching school at a salary of $13 per month. Having accumulated the sum of $60, he went to Burlington, the seat of the nearest educational institution, which he entered, and there remained three years and a half, with the exception of three months passed in teaching a neighboring district school. He was dependent for support during this time chiefly on his own exertions, added to what little assistance his father was able to render him. He then entered the University of Chicago, and pursued his studies until August, 1861, when he left the senior class and enlisted in Company F of the 9th Iowa Infantry. From this time he was almost constantly with the regiment until the close of its eventful career, having re-enlisted in January, 1864. He served as orderly sergeant of his company during the first months of its history, including the campaign against Price in the Spring of 1862, culminating in the battle of Pea Ridge, on the 9th of April, where he was severely wounded in the right ankle. He was able to return to active duty in the latter part of July, having meantime been commissioned second lieutenant of the company, and as such participated in the attack on Haines' Bluff, above Vicksburg, and the capture of Arkansas Post. As first lieutenant he took part in the campaign against Vicksburg in 1863, and was engaged in the principal battles around the city and near Jackson, both before and after the capture of the former. As captain of his company he led it in the "battle above the clouds," on Lookout Mountain, and at Mission Ridge the day following. In the Atlanta campaign and its principal battles he served as provost marshal on the staff of General Osterhaus. Participating in the "march to the sea," on reaching Savannah he was commissioned major, and took command of his regiment on the final Goldsboro campaign. After this the regiment was ordered to Louisville, Kentucky, where he received the silver leaf of lieutenant colonel, and as such was mustered out with the remnant of the veteran 9th, July 24, 1865.

Returning to Fayette County, he was elected the following October as its representative in the Iowa Legislature, and participated in the session of 1866. In 1869 he removed to Crawford County, Iowa, where he purchased land and engaged in farming; but in September, 1870, he was called to Des Moines as Principal of the Baptist College of that city. In 1871 he was nominated and elected Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of Iowa on the Republican ticket. In 1873 he was re-nominated by acclamation as the unanimous choice of the State Convention, and re-elected, his term ending January 1st, 1876. At the Republican Convention in 1875 he was unanimously re-nominated for a third term.

Mr. Abernethy's public life is a record of honorable and efficient services, untarnished by a single unworthy act. His private character is equally blameless and praiseworthy. He became a member of the Baptist Church at the age of sixteen, and has ever since maintained his connection with it. In January, 1868, he was married to Miss Louise E. Eaton, an estimable lady of Fayette County. He is described as a man of much energy of character, full of life and power, strict in his business habits, devoted to duty, and a close student.

Honorable JOHN RUSSELL.—This gentleman, well known to the people of Iowa as "Honest John Russell," was born at Kettle Bridge, County of Fife, Scotland, October 8, 1821. He enjoyed limited school privileges until fifteen years of age, when he was apprenticed by his father to the trade of stone cutter, and served a full term o four years. Soon after his term expired, while working at his trade as a journeyman, at Glasgow, he obtained a copy of the "Life of Benjamin Franklin," and the work made a deep impression on his mind. He acquired a love for literature and imbibed liberal political principles, and took an active part in the "Charter movement," in behalf of universal suffrage, vote by ballot, no property qualification, and other modifications of the British system. Becoming well posted in reference to American affairs, he resolved to emigrate. After accumulating money enough to defray the expenses of his passage, he proceeded to Liverpool and embarked on the "Patrick Henry," arriving at New York, May 29, 1842. From New York he proceeded to Pittsburgh and engaged in cutting stone until an uncle of his residing there persuaded him to engage in trade, loaning him $350, to which he added $100 of his own, purchased some goods and opened a store at Highland, Columbiana County, Ohio. Here he remained nearly nine years, when having acquired about $2,000, he decided to see more of the West. He visited St. Louis and St. Joseph, Missouri, and from thence came to Iowa on foot. After visiting a considerable portion of the state, he bought a quarter section of land in Jones County, and returned to Ohio for his wife and children. In December, 1852, he landed at Keokuk, on his return, and purchasing a team, conveyed his family thence to Jones County early the following Spring, where he improved his farm, and has since been numbered among the successful farmers of Iowa.

With his native ability, improved by careful reading and study, he did not long escape public attention. His first official position was that of chairman of the Board of School Directors at his new home. In 1860 he was chosen one of the Board of Supervisors of Jones County, and made chairman. In 1861 he was elected as Representative of the County in the Iowa Legislature, and was repeatedly re-elected to the same position, which he held for five consecutive terms. In the House of Representatives he was chosen Speaker for the session of 1868, and displayed good ability as a presiding officer.

Mr. Russell's legislative career was a useful and honorable one. He was an earnest, industrious worker, and a fearless advocate of the right as he understood it. With sagacity and excellent common sense he united marked ability in debate, and wielded much influence in the House. He took an active part in the organization of the Agricultural College, and was one of its Directors for four years, doing much to secure its permanent usefulness and prosperity. He was author of the act for the publication of the state laws in the newspapers, which passed in 1866. In 1870 he advocated the taxation of railroad property. This was the first important battle on the question in the General Assembly of Iowa, and the advocates of the doctrine that railroads are under legislative control of the state, gained its first important victory in the law then passed, although its effect was considerably neutralized for the time by amendments secured by the powerful railroad interest.

In 1870 Mr. Russell was the choice of the Republican State Convention for Auditor of State, and was triumphantly elected. He was re-nominated and re-elected in 1873. He retired on the first of January, 1875, with a well earned reputation as an honest and efficient officer. His service to the state in procuring the adjustment of all unsettled school fund accounts with the several counties whose accounts were in an unsettled condition, is deserving of especial mention. In this work it was necessary to sift the transactions with the fund, in some of the counties, to the earliest date, in order to protect the fund against loss, and definitely ascertain its proper amount. This work was thoroughly and satisfactorily accomplished, and the school fund accounts were adjusted in excellent order, ere the close of his term as Auditor.

Mr. Russell has much force of character, firmness, and conscientiousness; but is naturally very sociable, agreeable in his deportment, and strongly attached to his friends. In every public position he has left a clear and honorable record.

Honorable CALEB BALDWIN was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, April 3, 1824, and was educated at Washington College, of that state, graduating in the class of 1842.

He moved to Iowa, and began the practice of law in Fairfield, in 1846, before Iowa was admitted into the Union. He was elected prosecuting attorney for Jefferson County for three successive terms. In 1855 he was appointed Judge of the District Court by Governor Grimes, to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of the Hon. W. H. Seevers.

In 1857 he moved to Council Bluffs, his present place of residence.

In 1859 he was elected one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the State, at the first election held under the revised constitution, which provided for the election of judges by the people. In 1862, by seniority in office he became the Chief Justice of the State.

In 1864 he resumed the practice of law, declining a re-election to the bench.

In 1865 he was appointed by President Lincoln United States District Attorney for the District of Iowa.

In 1874 he was appointed one of the judges of the Court of Commissioners of the Alabama Claims, which position he occupies at the present time.

General W. W. BELKNAP graduated from the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, in the class of 1848. He studied law with H. Caperton, Esq., at Georgetown, D. C., and was the partner of the Honorable Ralph P. Lowe, afterwards Governor of Iowa, and Judge of the Supreme Court, and practiced his profession successfully at Keokuk, Iowa, where he located in 1851. He was elected to serve one term—that of 1857 and 1858—in the Iowa Legislature, as a Democrat. Being unwilling to give countenance to the "Lecompton Swindle," he separated from the radical wing of his party, and was known as a "Douglas Democrat," up to the outbreak of the rebellion.

He entered the army as Major of the Fifteenth Iowa Infantry, commanded by Colonel (afterwards General) Hugh T. Reed, about the 19th of October, 1861, and engaged in his first battle at Shiloh, in the Army of the Tennessee.

He served on General McPherson's staff as Provost Marshal Seventeenth Army Corps, and in other capacities. He figured in the campaigns in Tennessee under both Generals Sherman and Grant, and by the latter his services were very highly esteemed.

At the battle of Atlanta, on the 22d July, 1864—where General McPherson was killed—he distinguished himself so highly as a commander, that he was promoted to be Brigadier General of Volunteers.

After the capture of Atlanta he marched with Sherman to the sea, and finally to Washington, taking a prominent part in all the actions of the brilliant campaigns of Sherman.

Since his appointment as Secretary of War, he has served in the Cabinet of President Grant with great acceptation, both to the Administration and the country; and his administration of the affairs of the War Office is regarded, both by the officers of the army—who experience its practical results—and by the country at large, as one of the most successful of the Secretaries of War.

At the commencement of the second presidential term of General Grant, General Belknap was re-appointed Secretary of War, and still holds the portfolios of that office.

Honorable JOHN A. KASSON—Member of Congress from the Fifth Congressional District.

Honorable John A. Kasson is a native of Vermont. He was born in the Town of Charlotte, on the east side of Lake Champlain, January 11, 1822. His life exhibits a career of struggle, energy and self-reliance, such as has characterized few men who have risen to distinction in the political affairs of the West. He began early in life to be trained in the school of self-support, his father dying when he was only six years of age. After receiving his primary education at the common school, and at a country academy, he prepared for college in the City of Burlington, Vermont, where he entered the State University, in 1838, and graduated second in his class, in 1842.

Mr. Kasson's chosen profession was the law, upon the study of which he entered immediately after graduating, in the office of his brother, Charles D. Kasson, Esq., then a distinguished advocate at Burlington; but having little means he was obliged to relinquish his studies for a time, and sought employment as a teacher, in Virginia. This circumstance had much to do with the tone of his future political action on the slavery question. While in Virginia he saw the enormities of slavery in a nearer and stronger light than ever before, which so much increased his repugnance to the institution, that he became its open and avowed opponent from that day forward, till slavery was finally wiped out by the emancipation proclamation.

On his return from Virginia he resumed the study of the law, at Worcester, Massachusetts, with Hon. Emery Washburn, afterwards governor of the state, and professor in the law school of Harvard University—continuing through many struggles and pecuniary embarrassments, which his energy and determination enabled him to successfully meet and conquer, till he was finally admitted, at Lowell, to practice in the courts of Massachusetts. His ambition and determination were such, in relation to his profession, that he chose to enter it in the foremost legal state of the Union, and where the sentiment of justice and the equality of all men before the law was most in consonance with his own views and feelings. The influence of this training Mr. Kasson has never forgot in his political life.

After his admission to the bar he went to New Bedford, where he entered the law office of Timothy Coffin, a famous advocate, especially in marine practice. Here a year of additional study and partial practice, fitted him to form a law-partnership with Hon. Thomas D. Eliot, afterwards for many years a member of Congress from that district; and after five years practice in the United States and state courts of Eastern Massachusetts, he decided to go where a fresher and larger field opened more avenues to a young man for a successful career. Accordingly he came West. At St. Louis he spent one year in the law office of Hon. Joseph Crockett, and becoming familiar with the mode of practice in that state, opened an office of his own, speedily gaining a large and lucrative practice from merchants and mercantile corporations. He has often spoken with affection of the late John J. Roe, who first enrolled himself as his steady client and firm friend.

After six years of hard labor in his profession, the climate of St. Louis proved unfavorable to his health, and in 1857 he established himself at Des Moines, Iowa, where he engaged in the practice of law. Attention to business, reputation and recognized talents, soon gave him a large docket. The capital had just been removed from Iowa City to Des Moines, and Hon. Ralph Lowe elected governor. From their first acquaintance the governor gave Mr. Kasson his confidence and friendship. He appointed him chairman of the commission to examine the condition of the various state offices, and his report, published in the state archives, shows careful attention to details and foresight for the safety of the public interests, which are characteristic of all his public actions.

In 1858 he was appointed chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and received praise from all parts of the state for his effective organization of the new party, which began to show itself from that time in continually increased majorities.

In 1860 he was a delegate from Iowa to the National Republican Convention, at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for the presidency. He represented his state in the committee on the platform. He was also a member of the sub-committee that drafted the platform, and the author of the famous resolution declaring freedom to be the normal condition of the territories of the United States.

His services in harmonizing conflicting views and presenting a platform for the union of a majority of the people of the United States, were so eminent that the New York Tribune, in a leading editorial, immediately after the convention, declared the party chiefly indebted to Mr. Kasson as the principal author of the platform. He also took the stump at the close of the convention, advocating Lincoln's election, in Illinois and Iowa.

In 1861, at the request of Senator Grimes, supported by the names of several other Republican senators, Mr. Kasson was appointed, by President Lincoln, First-Assistant Postmaster General. It was the second nomination made by the President, and was confirmed by the senate. It was a surprise to Mr. Kasson himself, who had neither solicited nor expected the office.

He immediately entered upon the duties of his office, which were greatly increased by the disturbance of all party relations, caused by the late civil war. Nearly the whole burden of administering the department devolved upon him, as the Postmaster General gave his chief attention to cabinet affairs and the prosecution of the war. During his service in the department, covering a period of about two years, he found time not only for the details of postal administration, but to revise and codify all the postal laws—to revise the foreign postal treaty and to lay the basis for uniformity and great reduction of rates in foreign countries

In 1862, the State of Iowa became entitled to six representatives in Congress. The new fifth district was composed of twenty-three counties, embracing the capital and nearly one-fourth of the territory of the state. While Mr. K. was at Washington, the first Republican convention of the fifth district offered him a nomination for Congress. He accepted it, placed his resignation in the hands of the Postmaster General, and actively entered upon the canvass in the joint debate with his Democratic competitor, D. O. Finch. This is believed to have been the first introduction in the state of joint debate between competitors. Its effects were to increase largely the Republican vote. He was elected by about 3,000 majority to the thirty-eighth Congress.

After his election, at the request of the Postmaster General, he returned to Washington to complete some unfinished reforms which he had inaugurated in that department. One of these was the amelioration of the service, and could only be effected by concert of action between the governments of Europe and America. The object was to establish a uniform system of postal international accounts, with cheaper and uniform postage. At the suggestion of the Post Office Department, the State Department invited a Congress of postal representatives, to meet at Paris, and take all of these questions into consideration, and, if possible, to establish common rules as the basis for future conventions. Mr. Lincoln appointed Mr. Kasson to represent the United States in this Congress. The governments of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Prussia, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, the Sandwich Islands, and one or two of the South American Republics, were represented in this Congress. The rules there established have effected great changes in the postal intercourse, and have been the basis of all the postal treaties since made by the United States. At the close of the Congress, a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Mr. Kasson and his Government for the beneficent work they had inaugurated.

In 1864 he was re-elected, after a joint debate through the district with his Democratic opponent, M. D. McHenry, by about 6,000 majority. As a member of Congress he was a worker, and has left a record that will live in history through all coming time.

We find, by reference to the Congressional Globe, commencing with the volume dated December, 1863, that John A. Kasson, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee—Thaddeus Stevens, Chairman—took prominent part with, and was the trusted aid of, that Republican veteran, in fighting successfully, among other things, for a national banking system—advocating with gifted mind and the stern logic of facts, the nation's cause, and meeting successfully the sophistries of Pruyn, Kernan, and other shining lights on the Democratic side.

He took active and prominent part in conducting the debates on the various bills for appropriations necessary to save the nation's life.

He sustained with eloquence and patriotic devotion the enrollment and conscription act, providing for prompt and ample support to our soldiers in the field, and in aid of the military operations against the rebellion; making a speech with telling force in favor of calling out colored men and engrafting them in the military service.

He advocated the abolition of the abuses of the franking privilege.

He advocated and urged the reservation of mineral property for the use of the men who would work the lodes.

He reported, as chairman of the Committee on Coinage and Weights and Measures, and had passed bills abolishing the three and five cents paper money nuisances, and substituting coins therefor.

He had the Iowa land grant law so amended as to secure future grants from becoming great monopolies, and lands from being tied up for years, and settlement thereof impeded, and compelling lands to be sold at public auction within a limited time, unless previously sold at private sale.

He procured the revision of the postal laws lowering and making uniform rates of postage.

He was a strong prop and one of the reliable supports to the Freedmen's Bureau for the protection of the freedmen.

He spoke with burning eloquence and patriotic appeal in favor of rescuing our sick and imprisoned soldiers from the enemy by more speedy exchange of prisoners.

His great speech (in January, 1865,) in favor of the amendment of the United States Constitution for the emancipation of all the slaves in the United States, was alike creditable to Republican Iowa and her honored representative, and elicited the applause of the good and great of every nation. The Democratic members pronounced it the most convincing and unanswerable speech made on the Republican side of the House. The Republican members attested their appreciation of it by subscribing for many thousand copies for distribution throughout the country. The entire speech shows itself to be the work of a master mind. To give extracts to illustrate the train of argument would be impossible in the brief space which we have at our disposal. As an able debater and a smooth, fluent orator, Mr. Kasson stands in the front rank in the Western States, and has few superiors any where in the country.

Re-elected to the thirty-ninth Congress, he was again assigned to duty on the Ways and Means Committee, and, although the committee was divided, and separate duties assigned its members, Thaddeus Stevens and Mr. Kasson were inseparable, and their special work devoted to appropriations. To enumerate the bills in Mr. Kasson's charge, or make mention of all the debates in which he took prominent part, is not possible in the short space here allotted.

He advocated and secured an amendment to the proposed Bankrupt Act, so as to save the homestead of the debtor (as under the laws of Iowa).

The Civil Rights Bill was also ably advocated by him, and he worked and voted to pass it over President Johnson's veto.

The Freedman's Bureau was again sustained by his help, till other securities were obtained for the freedmen.

He advocated Hale's Qualifying Amendment to the Suffrage Bill, in the District of Columbia, as endorsed by a full Republican caucus. That amendment being defeated, he voted for the Universal Suffrage Bill, which was passed, and again voted to pass it over Mr. Johnson's veto.

He worked and voted for Thaddeus Stevens' Reconstruction Committee.

He worked and voted for the passage of the Reconstruction Bill over the veto of President Johnson.

He introduced and made a speech in favor of a Declaratory Act—which passed the House—to enforce the Thirteenth (emancipation) Amendment, and prohibit the sale of freedmen back to slavery for fines, as was done in Maryland.

He introduced and advocated the passage of a bill to prevent whipping and other cruel punishments of freedmen in the Southern States.

He introduced and passed through the House a bill to transfer the control of Indian affairs to the War Department, and to regulate the management of Indian tribes.

As Chairman of the Committee on Weights and Measures, he reported bills which which passed the House and Senate for including and legalizing a decimal system of weights and measures, uniform throughout the United States. The report accompanying the bill is a document which will take its place with that of Thomas Jefferson and John Q. Adams on the same subjects.

In the numerous debates in general legislation, more of a business than of a political character, we find him an active participant, and a clear, forcible, and influential debater.

In 1866 a combination of personal and political interests, while Mr. Kasson was yet engaged in his duties at Washington, defeated his re-nomination for a third term, after seventy-eight ballots in the convention. This result gave dissatisfaction to the friends of Mr. Kasson, which soon kindled into a spirited division in the party—a disgrace in itself, and one that should not be countenanced by the well wishers of good society. It is hoped that the disaffection has now seen its end.

At the close of his Congressional service, in March, 1867, he was solicited by the Postmaster General to undertake the negotiation of definitive postal treaties with various European governments. He sailed in April, of that year, on this mission, and negotiated new treaties with Great Britain, Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Italy and Germany, thus gathering in the fruits of his labors in the Postal Congress of 1863, by reducing the rates of postage to ab out one-half of the previous tariff.

During his absence on this duty his fellow-citizens of Polk County nominated and elected him to the General Assembly of the State, and have ever since insisted upon re-electing him to the same office, whether he was at home or absent.

In 1870 he made an extended tour, embracing southern Europe, Egypt, the Holy Land, Syria, Turkey and Greece. It was not a mere trip of pleasure, but was made profitable in studying the customs, manners, religion and systems of government of the various nations which he visited, besides storing his mind with a better knowledge of the wants and developments of his race.

In the Summer of 1872 he was called upon to become a candidate for Congress, and after a short contest with his competitors, was nominated by the decisive majority, in the congressional convention, of fifty against twenty-four votes, and was elected to the forty-third Congress, and is re-elected to the forty-fourth and Centennial Congress, being his fourth term of the service of his district in that capacity. In the forty-third Congress he was still a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. Kasson is not an office seeker. In nearly every instance the office has sought the man. Twice he was nominated and elected to the Legislature, while absent, and was nominated for both his terms in Congress, while in performance of his duty at Washington.

Such is a brief record of John A. Kasson. Few men of his age have a more brilliant one, and few, if any, ever held a more confidential place in the hearts of the people. In all his relations to society, he realizes that he is one of the people, and that their interests are his interests, and in their prosperity alone can he prosper. Self-made and self-reliant, with his nerve-force and will-power, he is destined to carve a niche still higher in the scroll of fame, as a worthy, well tried, and true servant of the people.

Honorable SAMUEL MERRILL, Ex-Governor of Iowa.—Samuel Merrill was born in the town of Turner, Oxford County, Maine, August 7, 1822. He is of English ancestry, being a descendant, on his mother's side, of Peter Hill, who came from the west of England, and settled in Saco, Maine (now known as Biddeford), in 1653. From this ancestry have sprung the most of the Hills of America. On his father's side he is a descendant of Nathaniel Merrill, who, with his brother John, came from Salisbury, England, and settled in Newburg, Massachusetts, in 1636. Nathaniel begat Daniel, who begat John, who begat Thomas, a farmer, born in Salisbury, Massachusetts, December 18, 1708. Thomas begat Samuel—the fifth generation, who was born August 4, 1728—was married, and had a family of twelve children. Samuel begat Abel, who was brought by his father to Biddeford, Maine, when but six months old, and to Boston in 1750. Abel was married to Elizabeth Page, had five children, and served in the war of the Revolution. Abel begat Abel, jr., who married Abigail Hill, June 25, 1809, in Buxton, Maine. They soon moved to Turner, where they became the parents of eight children, Samuel, the subject of this sketch, being next to the youngest—the fourth and youngest son in the family—and in the eighth generation from his Pilgrim Fathers. Samuel was married to Catherine Thorns, who died in 1847, but fourteen months after their marriage. In January, 1851, he was again married, his second wife being a Miss Hill, of Buxton, Maine. To this union there has been five children, three of whom died young, the oldest living only two years and a half.

At the age of sixteen he moved with his parents to Buxton, where his time was mostly engaged in turns at teaching and attending school until he attained his majority. Having determined to make teaching a profession, he set out for that purpose towards the sunny South, but as he says, he "was born too far north" for his political comfort. Suspicion having been raised as to his abolitionist proclivities, and finding the element not altogether congenial, he soon abandoned the land of the palm and palmetto for the Old Granite State, where he engaged for several years in farming. In 1847, he moved to Tanworth, New Hampshire, where he embarked in mercantile business, in company with a brother. In this, as in all his industrial enterprises, he was quite successful. Not being satisfied with the limited resources of northern New England, he determined to try his good fortune on the broad prairies of the new and more fertile West.

Accordingly, in 1856, he turned his face towards the setting sun. He made a final settlement at McGregor, Iowa, where he established a branch house of the old firm. McGregor was then but a queer looking village, with but few scattering houses, and surrounded by a country with a sparse population. But immigration poured in rapidly, new farms were opened, and the barren prairies made to blossom as the rose. With increased population their trade increased, until their house became one of the most extensive wholesale establishments on the Upper Mississippi River. This result was owing to his correct and energetic business qualities.

During all these years of business Mr. Merrill took an active but not a noisy part in politics. In 1854 he was elected, as an abolitionist, to the New Hampshire Legislature, at the same time that General N. B. Baker, now Adjutant General of Iowa, was Governor of the State. In 1855 he was returned a second term to the Legislature. In this latter year he voted for Honorable James Bell for United States Senator, and for Honorable John P. Hale, to fill the unexpired term of Honorable William Atherton, deceased. This was during the Kansas-Nebraska excitement, when political evolutions were sudden and fiery, in the beginning of Pierce's administration; but Mr. Merrill performed his duty quietly, doing faithful service in the place assigned him by the people.

In Iowa he was equally fortunate in securing the good will of those who knew him. His neighbors, and those who had dealings with him, found a man honest in business, fair in his dealings, social in his relations, and benevolent in his disposition. He took an active interest in the prosperity of the town, and ever held an open hand to all needed charities. These traits of character had drawn around him, though not realized or intended by himself, a host of personal admirers. This good will resulted in his being nominated for a seat in the Legislature, and the only one elected on his ticket.

The session of the Legislature which convened in 1860 was composed of some of the best minds in the state, and did more real, hard service, than any session held in Iowa before or since that date. Among the members were such men as Cyrus Bussey—a fine speaker, and afterwards a Union general—W. F. Coolbaugh, Alvin Saunders—for six years Governor of Nebraska Territory—James F. Wilson, Thomas F. Drummond, L. L. Ainsworth, John Scott, Rankin, Udell, Neal Anderson, Bowen, Duncomb, D. S. Wilson, McPherson, Caldwell—since Judge of the United States Courts—Thomas W. Claggett—the invincible—B. F. Gue, N. B. Baker, Ed. Wright, J. D. Jennings—who for eloquence was a leader among the Iowa democracy—Charles Paulk, Zimri Streeter—the legislative wag—Gurley, and others.

Thus crowded with men of mark, they must of necessity do a vast amount of work, and do it well. They revised the code of laws known as "The Revision of 1860," a volume of more than 1,000 pages; provided a system of county government; elected F. W. Palmer as state printer for his first term; re-elected Harlan as United States Senator, and discussed the wisdom of Governor Kirkwood in refusing the requisition of Governor Letcher, of Virginia, for the delivery of Barclay Cappoc, an alleged fugitive from justice, he having been engaged under John Brown in the temporary capture of Harper's Ferry. The debate upon this subject extended through several evenings, drew crowded houses, and was one of the finest displays of forensic combat ever witnessed in the state. It was this Legislature, also, that shaped our school system, pushing it out in that progressive channel where in twelve years it has gained a degree of perfection scarcely equalled by that of any other state in the Union. The Legislature met in extra session in 1861, to provide for the exigencies of the Rebellion, in which Governor Merrill rendered effective and unselfish service in providing for the defense and perpetuity of our nation against the hand of treason.

He continued in business at McGregor until the Summer of 1862, when he was commissioned as Colonel of the Twenty-first Iowa Volunteer Infantry, proceeding immediately to Missouri, where active service awaited him. Marmaduke was menacing the Union forces in central Missouri, which called for prompt action on the part of Union generals. Colonel Merrill was placed in command of a detachment of the Twenty-first Iowa, a detachment of the Ninety-ninth Illinois, a portion of the Third Iowa Cavalry, and two pieces of artillery, with orders to make a forced march to Springfield, he being at Houston, eighty miles distant. On the morning of January 11, 1863, they having come across a body of rebels, found them advancing in heavy force. Colonel Merrill immediately made disposition for battle, and brisk firing was kept up for an hour, when the enemy fell back. Colonel Merrill now moved in the direction of Hartsville, where he found the rebels in force, under Marmaduke, and from six to eight thousand strong, with six pieces of artillery, while Colonel Merrill had but eight hundred men and two pieces of artillery. This was the first time the Twenty-first had been under fire, and considering the numbers engaged, was one of the most remarkable engagements of the war. Says Lieutenant Colonel Dunlap in his report, "I make mention of no one as having distinguished himself above another. Every man was brave, cool, active, and a hero. Too much praise can not be accorded them." In this engagement the rebels lost several officers, and not less than three hundred men in killed and wounded. The Union loss was seven killed and sixty-four wounded, five captured and two missing. The conduct of the officers and men engaged elicited the highest praise of General Warren. The regiment performed severe marches and suffered much in sickness during the winter. At the proper time it moved to take part in the campaign of Vicksburg. It is sufficient here to say that it was assigned to the Thirteenth Corps, General John A. McClernand; that it fought gallantly at the battle of Port Gibson; that while the impetuous charge of Black River Bridge was being made, Colonel Merrill was severely, and reported fatally, wounded. The battle of Black River Bridge, the last of the series of engagements during the campaign of Vicksburg, in which the rebels fought without their fortifications, was a short but bloody combat of the 17th of May. The rebels were posted in a strong position. The west bank of the river here consists of bluffs rising abruptly from the water's edge. On the east side there is an open bottom, surrounded by a deep bayou. Following the bayou was a strong line of defenses, consisting of a series of works for artillery, and breastworks. The bayou served admirably as a ditch. In rear of the principal line of works was another line, shorter, but strong, and both extended in something like semi-circular shape, from the river, above the bridge which gives the battle its name, to the river below. The works were well defended by artillery and infantry. McClernand was ordered to take them. Lawler's brigade, in which was Colonel Merrill's regiment, was ordered to make the charge. It did so with the greatest gallantry. The rebels were driven from their works in a very short time, leaving eighteen guns, fifteen hundred prisoners, and many of their wounded, in the Union hands. The charge had hardly occupied more time than it takes to tell of it. But along its track the ground was covered with the dead and the dying. The victims on the Union side, most of whom belonged to the Twenty-first and Twenty-third Iowa regiments, Colonel Kinsman, of the latter command, being slain, numbered three hundred and seventy-three. While Colonel Merrill was leading his regiment in this deadly charge, he received an almost fatal wound through the hips, which laid him up from the 17th of May till January, when he again joined his regiment in Texas; and in June, 1864, on account of suffering from his wound, resigned his commission and returned to McGregor. He was unable to attend to his private affairs for many months.

During the gubernatorial career of Governor Merrill, extending through two terms, from January, 1868, to January, 1872, he was actively engaged in the discharge of his official duties, and probably no incumbent of that office ever devoted himself more earnestly to the public good, standing by the side of Governor Fairchild, of Wisconsin. The two were instrumental in placing the slack water navigation between the Mississippi and the lakes, in the way of ultimate and certain success. In his message to the Thirteenth General Assembly, the Governor says:

"I have given this subject, during the past five years, much thought, and some personal examination. It is receiving consideration in many parts of the country, and especially in the northwestern states. Cheap transportation is the one question which is vital to these states, and to none more so than to Iowa. It is of little consequence whether her products be moved by rail or water, but of the greatest consequence that they be moved at rates whereby the market price will give back the cost of production and a living profit to the farmer. If railways can carry heavy freights as cheaply as water ways, it is certain that they will not, unless compelled thereto by water competition. The improvement of water channels will reduce the charges on every ton of heavy freight, whether moved by water or by rail. Our state has raised, during the past year, nearly fifteen millions of bushels of wheat for export. With the freight charges on this quantity reduced, in the cost of transhipment and movement, only ten cents a bushel, the total saving will amount to $1,500,000. But Iowa exports large quantities of other grains and other products, and imports great amounts of lumber, merchandise, etc., so that this large sum would not be one half the yearly saving to Iowa alone. The States of Wisconsin, Illinois, and Minnesota, and those lying further west, will be benefited, but perhaps in a less degree. With wheat selling in the State of Iowa at an average price of fifty cents per bushel, and on Lake Michigan at seventy cents per bushel, our representatives in Congress should not long hesitate in assuming for their constituents their part of the necessary debt in order to open an ample water way between the Mississippi and the lakes. The full results no one can foresee. It would unite the commerce of the lakes, with its two thousand vessels, to the commerce of the Mississippi and its tributaries, with their more than two thousand vessels; and the commerce so united, measured by tons or by values, would be greater than the existing foreign commerce of the country. The highest estimated cost of this improvement, made by Gen. G. K. Warren, government engineer, is about four millions of dollars.

"I deem this question so vitally important to the agricultural interest of our state, that I may (if time will permit) submit at more length my views upon the subject."

So earnest was he in behalf of this improvement, that he renews the subject in his message to the Fourteenth General Assembly.

In the instigation of the work, the Governors of the several states interested called conventions; the first at Prairie du Chien, November, 1868, the second at Portage City, Wisconsin, October, 1869, and through the deliberations of these conventions, the aid of the General Government was secured.

Under the administration of Governor Merrill, the movement for the erection of the new state house was inaugurated. The Thirteenth General Assembly provided for the building at a cost of $1,500,000, and made an appropriation with which to begin the work, of $150,000. With this sum the work was begun, and on November 23d, 1871, the corner stone was laid in the presence of citizens from all parts of the state. On this occasion the Governor delivered the address. It was a historical review of the incidents culminating in the labors of the day. It was replete with historical facts—showed patient research; was logical and argumentative—at times eloquent with the fire and genius of American patriotism. It is a paper worthy of the occasion, and does justice to the head and heart that conceived it.

Thus briefly have been reviewed the leading features in the record of a busy life. Among the men who have been called from private enterprises to fill public positions of responsibility and trust, on account of their peculiar fitness for office, Governor Merrill has made a record not less honorable than any of his associates or predecessors.

It was the decree of the people that he should be the standard bearer of his party in 1867, in preference to several others of larger experience, and a reputation extending to the borders of the State. The history of his administration proves the wisdom of this choice, as the successor of men of note, such as James W. Grimes, Ralph P. Lowe, Samuel J. Kirkwood and William M. Stone, all of whom he fairly equaled in the general administration of state affairs, and in some respects history will accord to him the honor of leading the list.

Mr. Merrill is a fair type of "Young America," and a faithful representative of the stalwart sons of Northern New England. In stature he is fully six feet, and in avoirdupois not much below two hundred and fifteen pounds.

General GEORGE W. JONES.—The life and public services of this distinguished citizen of Iowa are intimately interwoven with the history of the country from a period dating back to before the organization of the Territory of Wisconsin, down to the expiration of his last term of service in the Senate of the United States on the 4th of March, 1859.

The father of the subject of this sketch was John Rice Jones, a native of Merionethshire, Wales, who, after graduating at Oxford University and at the Medical and Law Schools, came to Philadelphia about the close of the Revolutionary War, and engaged in the practice of law; thence he removed to Vincennes, Indiana, and became eminent in his profession. He was a man of fine abilities and a ripe scholar, having acquired a thorough knowledge of the Greek, Latin, Spanish and English languages, as well as of the mathematics and other branches of learning. He participated in the early wars of the country, for which he received patents of land from the United States. He subsequently removed to Missouri, where he was a member of the convention that framed the Constitution of that State in 1819–20, under which he was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and held the office till the time of his death in St. Louis on the 10th of February, 1824.

The mother of General George W. Jones was of German descent, born in Pennsylvania, a lady of a highly cultivated mind, being able to converse and write correctly and fluently in the French, German, and English languages.

Judge Jones had six sons, a brief record of whom we proceed to give as follows:

Rice Jones, the eldest, was a physician and a lawyer, and eminent in both professions at the time of his assassination by a political rival; John Rice Jones, Jr., the second son, served under Colonel Henry Dodge in the war of 1812, and was subsequently twice appointed Postmaster General of the Republic of Texas; General Augustus Jones, the third son, served under Colonel Dodge at the age of sixteen, and was for nine years Marshal of Missouri and a captain in the Mexican war; Myers F. Jones, the fourth son, was a member of the Missouri Legislature, and afterwards, removing to Texas, became a patriot in the war for independence, and aided in annexing that Republic to the United States; William P. Jones, the youngest son, at the time of his death, was a past midshipman in the United States Navy, and had just returned from a tour through Europe, where he had been sent by the Government, when he died suddenly of cholera in Dubuque.

GENERAL GEORGE WALLACE JONES, the subject of this memoir, was born at Vincennes, Indiana, on the 12th of April, 1804. At a suitable age his father sent him to be educated under the guardianship of Henry Clay at Transylvania University, Lexington, Kentucky, where he graduated in 1825. He then commenced the study of law in the office of his brother-in-law, Honorable John Scott, then member of Congress from Missouri. In 1826 he was appointed Clerk of the United States District Court at St. Genevieve, under Honorable James H. Peck, United States District Judge.

His health becoming impaired by too close and assiduous application to study and the duties of his office, by the advice of his physician and devoted friend, Honorable Lewis F. Linn, he abandoned the law office and the desk, and in 1827 removed to Sinsinawa Mound, Wisconsin, then embraced within the limits of Michigan Territory, where he engaged in mercantile business, farming and smelting lead ore. As early as 1828 he bought lead of the Sac and Fox Indians on the spot where Dubuque is now situated, those Indians being at that time the occupants and workers of the mines opened here by Julien Dubuque in 1788. In this neighborhood General Jones established the first reverberatory furnace ever erected in Iowa, and was one of the first to open stores in Dubuque and Peru.

During the Black Hawk War, in 1832, he was Aid-de-camp to Governor Dodge, who had command of Posey's Brigade of Illinois Militia; and at the close of the war, contrary to his wishes, he was appointed to succeed Governor Dodge as colonel of militia, the latter being appointed by President Jackson major of a battalion of rangers.

In the Spring of 1833 General Jones was nominated by a mass meeting of the people of Mineral Point for Judge of the Territorial Court of that locality, but being present at the meeting he respectfully declined the proffered honor. However, after the proceedings of the meeting had been transmitted to the Governor at Detroit, by due course of mail General Jones received a commission as Judge of the Court. He remained on the bench till October, 1835, when he was elected a delegate to Congress from Michigan Territory, which then embraced what now forms the States of Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, and the vast territory lying west of them to the Rocky Mountains. On vacating the bench General Jones presented to his county the whole amount due for his services as judge for the erection of a court house.

In the contest for Congress his competitors were Judge Woodbridge, of Detroit, afterwards United States Senator from the State of Michigan; Judge James D. Doty, afterwards delegate in Congress, Governor of Wisconsin, and member of Congress from that state, and Honorable Morgan L. Martin, subsequently delegate in Congress from Wisconsin Territory. His success against such a brilliant array of competitors shows the high appreciation in which General Jones was then held by the people.

During the session of Congress to which he was then elected, General Jones drew up and procured the passage of the bill establishing the Territory of Wisconsin, and that before the Territory of Michigan had been admitted into the Union as a state—a thing which had never occurred in any other instance in the history of the country. Neither his constituents nor any of the members of Congress expected the passage of the bill when he reached Washington in December, 1835. But such was the fact, perseverance and popularity of General Jones, that through the influence he was able to bring to bear in securing the aid of General Jackson, Daniel Webster, John C. Calhoun, Thomas H. Benton, James K. Polk, and many of the ablest statesmen then at Washington, who became his personal friends, the bill was passed. General Jones gave the name of Wisconsin to the new Territory, and during that session, though the only delegate from all this vast country, he procured large appropriations from Congress for roads from Green Bay towards Chicago, from Milwaukee and Racine to the Mississippi River, from the northern boundary of Missouri, via Dubuque, to Prairie du Chien, and thence to Green Bay; an appropriation of $5,000 for each of the towns of Racine, Milwaukee, Sheboygan and Green Bay; $20,000 for the erection of public buildings in Wisconsin, and $40,000 for the improvement of the Lower Rapids of the Mississippi. He procured also large appropriations to purchase from the Sac and Fox Indians an extent of territory which now forms some of the richest and most populous counties of Iowa, and for the purchase of the Winnebago country east of the Mississippi, and grants of 640 acres of land for each of the towns of Fort Madison, Burlington, Bellevue, Dubuque, Peru and Mineral Point.

In 1837 General Jones was re-elected to Congress by an almost unanimous vote over Mr. Meeker. At this session he procured the passage of the bill establishing the Territory of Iowa, and making large appropriations for the construction of the Capitol and the Penitentiary, and $5,000 additional for the Territorial Library. He also procured large sums for the prosecution of surveys west of the Mississippi, and $40,000 for additional improvements at the Des Moines Rapids. At the same session he also procured a grant of alternate sections of land, five miles on each side thereof, for the construction of a canal from Milwaukee to Rock River—a piece of devotion to the public welfare which, strange to say, excited the prejudices of unthinking people against him, in consequence of the increase of each section reserved by the Government from $1.25 to $2.50 per acre, which was usual in such cases, and notwithstanding the Territorial Legislature had memorialized Congress for the proposed canal.

This, together with the part which General Jones took in being second for Cilley in his duel with Graves, defeated his election to Congress in 1838. We can not here enter upon any elaborate defense of the course pursued by General Jones in that particular. No doubt the fact that he yielded a reluctant consent to the urgent solicitations of his friend who had already determined that nothing should prevent him from accepting the challenge, seemed to him a sufficient justification of his course, and has been so generally regarded by his friends. Honorable Lewis F. Linn, United States Senator from Missouri, wrote a letter to the Galena Democrat, in which he says: "General Jones only consented to become second after earnest solicitation on the part of Mr. Cilley and his friends, and because that gentleman could not obtain the aid of any other friend that could be relied on." Again he says, referring to General Jones: "Our friend is blameless in this unfortunate affair."

No one has ever charged General Jones with want of truthfulness, honor and chivalry in the matter; but the prejudice against him in the Northwest and the Eastern States was mainly because of a difference of opinion as to the code duello, and the fact that the unfortunate victim of his own courage and sense of honor was a Northern man. Had Graves been shot in the place of Cilley, no doubt the feeling would have been very different; in that case no blame would have attached to General Jones.

Franklin Pierce, in a letter to General Jones, says: "The proceedings of certain meetings at the East, and remarks in newspapers which must have fallen under your observation, in relation to your conduct as second to your unfortunate friend, have occasioned me much pain, although I have never doubted for a moment that a full development of all the facts would completely exonerate you in the public mind from the unjust and injurious expressions to which I allude."

When the news of the establishment of a separate territorial government for Iowa reached the people here, they immediately assembled in mass meetings in many places, without distinction of party, and passed the most complimentary resolutions, strongly recommending their able and indefatigable delegate, whose efforts to serve them had been crowned with such signal success, for their governor. From the proceedings of a public meeting held in Dubuque, and published in the Iowa News of that period, we extract the following:

"Resolved, That the pre-eminent and peculiar qualifications, without any reference to his past services, command for our highly talented and admired delegate in Congress, the Honorable George W. Jones, the decided and unanimous declaration of our earnest desire to see him occupy the gubernatorial chair of the future Territory of Iowa."

Petitions were sent to the President, signed by more than a score of the leading representatives and senators of the United States, asking that General Jones be appointed Governor. We have seen copies of the letters of Honorable Isaac H. Bronson, Honorable Lewis F. Linn, Honorable James Buchanan, and others, paying the highest compliments to the abilities and character of General Jones, and asking for his appointment to the governorship of the new territory. The President, however, had scruples about the constitutionality of the appointment of a member of Congress during his term of service to any other office, and, in accordance with this belief, Ex-Governor Robert Lucas, of Ohio, was appointed the first governor of Iowa Territory.

The energy and influence of General Jones in securing most of the territorial offices for his constituents, which had usually been filled in new territories by men from the states, was worthy the commendation which it universally received. Against the importation of officers into the territory, to take the places of responsibility and profit which of right belonged to the people thereof, General Jones strongly protested in an able document sent to the President, and was permitted to name fourteen out of the eighteen officers provided for in the territorial bill. These were mostly accepted upon his recommendation alone, as the people, not anticipating that he would succeed in getting the bill passed, had made, except in a few instances, no recommendations.

In 1838 General Jones procured the establishment of the two first land offices in Iowa—one at Burlington, the other at Dubuque; and through his untiring efforts during the same session, the bill creating a Surveyor General's Office at Dubuque became a law. The office was first filled by Albert G. Ellis, of Green Bay, who was the incumbent till 1840, and upon his resignation President Van Buren appointed General Jones, who took charge of it in March of that year, and occupied it till the Spring of 1841, when he was removed under the Whig administration of General Harrison, and retired to his farm at Sinsinawa Mound.

For about ten years General Jones had been in the public service, including his service in the Black Hawk War. When he left his own private business he was the owner of several large mercantile and smelting establishments; every thing about his delightful residence betokened comfort and plenty; but when he returned to his farm his effects of almost every description had passed away—he was comparatively a poor man. Out of his salary he had saved little, being a man peculiarly social and hospitable in his nature, and of the most liberal and generous impulses. Such a man, surrounded by constant appeals to his natural generosity, could save but little out of the salary of a member of Congress; and General Jones never served his country for money—the welfare of his constituents was his chief aim in political life.

In October, 1842, Chief Justice Dunn, of Wisconsin, tendered him the appointment of clerk of the court, which he accepted, and discharged its duties with the same promptitude and fidelity which had marked his course while in the House of Representatives of the United States.

In 1845 President Polk restored him to the Surveyor General's Office at Dubuque. When spoken to on that subject by Governor Dodge, of Wisconsin, the President remarked: "I remember General Jones perfectly well, sir; I messed with him, esteemed him highly, and will appoint him to any office he may desire in Wisconsin with pleasure." He therefore returned in April, 1845, to the Surveyor General's Office, the duties of which he proved himself well qualified to discharge.

The personal popularity of General Jones at Washington, and his tact and skill in securing almost any measure he undertook, were matters of such public notoriety that he was often called upon to use his influence at the Federal Capital, and he was uniformly successful. An instance of this occurred in 1842, after the President had removed the Land Office from Dubuque. A public meeting was called, and General Jones was sent to Washington to have the order countermanded. He went, and was completely successful in his mission. The office was restored to Dubuque. Again, in 1846, when the low maximum price per mile which he was instructed to allow for the surveying of the public lands, and certain grievances under which the clerks of his office labored, induced those interested to seek relief at the hands of Congress, they urged and entreated him to repair to Washington and endeavor to procure them additional compensation. He was gone several weeks, and succeeded in having a law passed doubling the price paid to deputy surveyors, and materially increasing the salaries of clerks.

On the 7th of December, 1848, General Jones was elected to the Senate of the United States, and by a succeeding election continued Senator till the 4th of March, 1859. Honorable Augustus C. Dodge, of Burlington, was his colleague. When these two senators-elect arrived at the Federal Capital and called to pay their respects to President Polk, the latter paid them a high compliment. Taking them both by the hand, he said: "If Iowa had left the choice of her senators to me, you are the very men whom I should have selected."

The course of General Jones in the Senate was characterized by his usual ability, fidelity to Democratic principles, and indefatigable labor for the welfare of his constituents. He and General Dodge were a unit on all important measures. They opposed the land monopoly scheme embodied in "Bennett's Bill," a measure introduced into Congress which proposed to give to the states a large share of the public lands, and thus withhold them from actual settlement. Every species of corrupt bargaining was resorted to to carry the infamous measure through Congress, but it was firmly resisted by the Iowa Senators, who as firmly adhered to the Homestead Bill, an act of Congressional legislation which, perhaps, more than any other has been a blessing to the West. It has prevented the ruinous consequences of a policy which would allow the wealthy capitalists of the old states to get possession of millions of acres of the choicest lands and reserve them from sale till their own exorbitant prices should be offered for them. Who can tell to what extent such a policy would have retarded the settlement and development of the resources of Iowa? The people of the West, and of this magnificent state, have reason to thank those incorruptible and far-sighted men in Congress who prevented such a blow from falling upon their prosperity, and of this gratitude and thanks General Jones is justly entitled to a large share for the valuable services he has rendered to his country.

Another measure which he resisted while in the Senate, even against the offer of valuable railroad grants, which he and his constituents were anxious to procure, was a modification of the Tariff Act of 1846—an act very greatly affecting the interests of the West, as opposed to those of Eastern manufacturers and capitalists. During his services in the Senate he also, with the aid of his colleague, procured the Dubuque and Keokuk and the Davenport and Council Bluffs Railroad Land Grant—a grant sufficient to build some 1,400 miles of railroad in Iowa, traversing the state by four different routes, and inviting that immigration, labor, and wealth which have given to Iowa a development and progress unparalleled in the history of the West.

At the expiration of his service in the Senate, March 4, 1859, President Buchanan appointed General Jones Minister to Bogota, New Granada, now United States of Colombia, where he remained two years and a half. This was entirely unsolicited and unexpected on the part of General Jones, and without the knowledge of any member of the Cabinet, till the President, on the 8th of March, read them his message to the Senate making the nomination. The Senate unanimously confirmed the appointment, without the usual formality of referring it to the committee, at the suggestion of the two Republican Senators from Iowa, Harlan and Grimes.

Although General Jones was a loyal man during the Rebellion, yet through misunderstandings and political complications, he was, on his return from Bogota, in 1861, arrested for treason and imprisoned in Fort Lafayette, but was speedily released. He prosecuted Secretary Seward for false imprisonment and defamation of character, but the death of Mr. Seward in the Winter of 1872 put an end to the suit.

It is impossible in a brief biography to notice all the important acts of one so long in public life as General Jones has been, and whose actions both in and out of Congress are so intimately interwoven with the history of the country for nearly half a century.

While in the Senate he offered and secured the amendment to the Illinois Central Railroad Bill, which extended the road to Dubuque, and gave to Northern Iowa an outlet East and South long before any other route had been opened, except the old route by water and the slow and tedious process of staging. This extension of the road to Dubuque in a great measure sacrificed the interests of Galena. The late Stephen A. Douglas, then a member of the Senate from Illinois, had voted for General Jones' amendment, and had thereby offended his constituents in the Galena district; and, in order to conciliate them, on the eve of election in 1858, put forth a statement to the effect that he had been compelled to vote for the extension of the road to Dubuque in order to secure the passage of the bill in any form; for Senators Jones and Dodge had the power to defeat the bill, and had declared their unalterable determination to do so in case their amendment was not accepted.

To this statement General Jones replied in his famous letter of November 9, 1858, a letter in which the courage and ability of General Jones are equally displayed in a manner rarely equaled in political controversy.

We omitted to mention in its proper place that in 1836 General Jones obtained an appropriation of $100,000 for frontier protection and for a military road from Keokuk to Fort Snelling, in Minnesota; $20,000 for making a harbor at St. Joseph, Michigan; large sums for treating with the Indians in his territory; $37,000 for the payment of legislative expenses; several townships of land for a seminary of learning; and $20,000 for the completion of the capitol; that upon his motion and resolutions appropriations were made for the construction of military roads from Green Bay to Fort Crawford and Prairie du Chien, and from the latter place to Fort Atkinson on Turkey River; from Burlington to Agency City; and also for the construction of forts and Indian Agencies.

General Jones was the active and moving spirit, to an extent which this notice will fail to make apparent, in all those works necessary to set in order a new territory—naming the officers, laying out post routes, establishing post offices, securing the appointment of postmasters, securing appropriations for surveys and boundary lines. He secured appropriations for running the boundary lines separating Wisconsin from Michigan on the northeast, and Wisconsin from Illinois on the south, and Iowa from Missouri, and named the commissioners in each case and the surveyors for the Territories.

General Cass remarked, in 1836, while General Jones was in Congress: "I have seen the face of that young man every day during the present session of Congress on business. He is indefatigable in his efforts to serve his Territy." While in the House and in the Senate the leading men of the country were his personal and warm friends, with many of whom he was on terms of intimacy; the friendships thus formed have lasted throughout his long career, and in most instances, where the subjects are still living, remain unimpaired to this day.

General Jones was never a great speech-maker, but always a great worker, believing that he could more effectually promote the welfare of his constituency by close, untiring, and assiduous devotion to their immediate interests as a working man than as an orator, consuming a large share of his time in the preparation and delivery of speeches. He could both speak and write with ability and effect when occasion required; but he has possessed that personal influence, versatile power, and agreeable and persuasive address, which have made him more potent with men in securing the support of the measures he proposed to carry through than all the great public speeches ever made in Congress. He has also possessed remarkable foresight and tact in the management of his cause, and this, in as great a degree as his personal popularity has made him uniformly successful.

General Jones is a gentleman of affable and agreeable manners and of strict integrity of character, and has devoted a long and laborious life to the public service. In private he is highly esteemed as a friend and genial companion, with a mind rich in lore and experience. Although past seventy years of age he is yet healthy and active, and his mental faculties are unimpaired.

Honorable STEPHEN HEMPSTEAD, Ex-Governor of the state of Iowa, was born at New London, Connecticut, on the first day of October, 1812, and lived in that state until the Spring of 1828 with his parents and three brothers; removed to St. Louis, Missouri, and settled upon a farm near Belfountain, a few miles from St. Louis; remained there until the Spring of 1830 and went to Galena, Illinois, and acted as clerk in a commission house; was there during the Sac and Fox war, and was an officer in an artillery company which had been organized for the protection of that place.

After the defeat of Black Hawk and the close of the war, entered as a student of Illinois College at Jacksonville, remaining there about two years; got into trouble about sectarianism and abolitionism; left the college and returned to Missouri; commenced the study of the law, and finished the regular course under Mr. Charles S. Hempstead, then a prominent lawyer of Galena.

In 1836 was admitted to practice as an attorney and counsellor at law in all the courts of the Territory of Wisconsin, then embracing the Territory of Iowa, and the same year located at the Town of Dubuque, being the first lawyer who commenced the practice of his profession in the place.

Upon the organization of the Territorial Government of Iowa in 1838, he was with General Warner Lewis; elected to represent the northern portion of the Territory in the Legislative Council, which assembled at Burlington in the year 1838; was chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, one of the most important committees in the Council. At the second session of that body was elected president thereof.

Was again elected a member of the Council in 1845, which was held at Iowa City, and was president of the same.

In 1844 was elected one of the delegates of Dubuque County to the first convention to frame a Constitution for the State of Iowa, and was chairman of the Committee on Incorporations.

In 1848 was with Judge Charles Mason and W. G. Woodward appointed commissioners by the Legislature to revise the laws of the State of Iowa, and which revision, with a few amendments, was adopted as the "Code of Iowa" of 1851.

In 1850 was elected Governor of the State of Iowa, and served in that capacity for four years, being the full term under the then Constitution. Was the second governor of the state.

In 1855 was elected County Judge of Dubuque County, and held the office for about twelve years. Under his administration was erected the principal county buildings, the jail, poor house, and some valuable bridges.

His health being very much impaired, he has retired from public life to enjoy quietude and repose.

Honorable THOMAS ROGERS was born at Fort Edward, Washington County, New York, October 14, 1808, and graduated at Union College, Schenectady, after which he studied law in the office of his father-in-law, Judge Cowan, at Saratoga. In 1839 he removed to Dubuque, Iowa, bringing with him an introductory letter to Hon. George W. Jones, whose indorsement was a prestige of success. He secured the life-long friendship of General Jones, on account of his talents, education, and amiable character, which qualities soon commended him also to the public, and he was frequently appointed by the court to appear on the part of the prosecution or defense in important criminal cases.

He was an honor to the Dubuque bar so long as he practiced his profession. His first law partner was J. V. Berry, and on the removal of Mr. Berry to California, he formed a partnership with William J. Barney, well known in Dubuque, and for many years a banker. He gradually retired from the practice of law before 1850, and took a more prominent and active interest in political affairs, so far as the then Territory, and subsequent State of Iowa was concerned. He was so highly appreciated by his fellow citizens that he was elected to the House of Representatives in the Territorial Legislature in 1840.

Mr. Rogers was a warm, earnest, and eloquent advocate of those principles which he believed to constitute the foundation of our general government. He was at that time over thirty years of age, one of the most eloquent speakers who appeared on popular occasions.

On taking his seat in the legislature, he soon became as conspicuous for his clear and correct judgment as he had been and continued to be popular at home. It made no difference to him whether he was in the majority or minority as to partisanship, when he presented a bill of his own, proposed for a law, or espoused the defense of a bill offered by another. The only question with him was, "Is it right in principle?" The reports of committees during that session, and his reported speeches in the press of that day, leave evidence of unusual legislative ability.

Years afterwards, when he was tendered an important public office, his unassuming modesty made him decline, and it was the same as to other offices to which he might have been appointed or elected. The older he grew the more modest he became as to assuming any official position. He might, if willing, have been Surveyor General of Wisconsin and Iowa, and afterwards declined to accept the place of United States District Judge, now occupied by Judge Love.

Leaving the practice of his profession, he engaged with partners — Gen. C. H. Booth and the late Narcissa Nadeau — in an important manufacture in Dubuque, chiefly the manufacture of flour. After a few years of successful business he retired from the firm, yet up to the last month of his life he continued in business incidental to it — the purchase of wheat.

In reputation, Mr. Rogers lived without reproach for more than thirty years among his fellow citizens. Few men have continued for so long a period such an unblemished life. In character it is almost needless to commend to his hosts of still surviving friends the life of such a man. Those who knew him as friends from 1840 to 1874 need not be reminded that he had a large and generous heart, and one of the most kindly natures. Many of the departed knew, and many who survive know and remember, how he visited the sick day by day, and passed by no opportunity where he could personally sympathize with distress or affliction, or by his purse aid any whom he knew to be worthy.

Mr. Rogers died in Dubuque on the 6th of February, 1874. The following resolutions were passed by the Dubuque bar:

"WHEREAS, Honorable Thomas Rogers, a member of this bar, has been removed from among us by death,

Resolved, That we learn with deep regret the loss that we in common with the community at large have sustained in the death of our brother, whose ability and courtesy placed him in the foremost rank while engaged in the active practice of his profession, and endeared him in after life to all those with whom he was associated in other pursuits.

Resolved, That we tender to the family of the deceased our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That as a mark of our respect, these resolutions be published in the city papers, and a copy thereof be furnished to the family of the deceased."

General CALEB H. BOOTH, of Dubuque, was born on Christmas Eve, 1814, in Delaware County, Pennsylvania. Till the age of twelve, at which time his father died, he lived on a farm in his native county. He was then sent to school at a fine classical institution in Burlington, New Jersey, where, under the tuition of the celebrated Quaker mathematician, John Gummere, he studied mathematics, Latin and French, and made a specialty of preparing himself for an engineer.

At seventeen he had an offer of a position as engineer on the Camden and Amboy Railroad, but, much to his regret, he was not at liberty to accept it on account of his father's instructions to his guardian to have him study a profession. The one chosen was that of the law, and he became a law student in the office of Samuel Edwards, Esq., in Chester, Pennsylvania, where he studied three years, and on the 3d of May, 1836, was admitted to the bar. His certificate of admission, which the General has still in his possession, is signed by John Edwards, Prothonotary—a term for clerk of the court which, we believe, is used only in Pennsylvania.

Soon after being admitted he determined to remove to Dubuque, then in Michigan Territory, and in company with P. H. Engle, well known as a distinguished lawyer and judge, first in Dubuque and afterwards in St. Louis, he arrived here on the 3d of July, 1836, just one day before the act of Congress establishing the new Territory of Wisconsin took effect.

General Booth brought the first steam engine to Dubuque, and erected a steam saw mill on the lot known as the Booth and Shinelot, and went into the lumber business. He also engaged in mercantile business in the firm of Booth, Townsend & Co., and in 1838 engaged in mining in company with William Carter, the firm being Booth & Carter. They have continued the business without interruption to the present time. About fifteen years ago Mr. R. O. Chaney became a partner in the business, and the firm has since been Booth, Carter & Co.

In 1839 General Booth was elected to the Legislature, and served during the first session in Iowa City.

In 1841 he was elected the first Mayor of Dubuque, and has served in the council several times since.

In February, 1849, he was appointed by President Polk Surveyor General of the land district embraced in Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota, with the office at Dubuque, and was highly qualified by his early education to fill it with credit and satisfaction to all concerned. So satisfactory, indeed, was his administration of its duties, that he remained in it under President Taylor, although of the opposite school of politics, and notwithstanding General Taylor was solicited to remove him. General Taylor had adopted a lenient and truly statesmanlike policy towards capable and honest men holding under previous appointments, which was not to remove them if they had not used their influence against his election; and finding that General Booth had been neutral during the campaign, he had a good ground of justification for retaining him in opposition to the partisan solicitations for his removal. General Booth discharged the duties of his office with rare judgment and fidelity, employing none as surveyors whom he did not know to be well qualified. He was superseded under Mr. Fillmore's administration by the appointment of George B. Sargeant, of Davenport, to the office of Surveyor General, between whom and General Booth a friendship was formed and continued for many years, growing out of the generous and kindly spirit with which the latter received the former when he came to Dubuque to take charge of his office. Mr. Sargeant, in gratitude for such kindly treatment, gave General Booth his choice of lands to survey and a contract in Wisconsin, in which he was engaged during the balance of that season.

In 1851 General Booth engaged in partnership with William J. Barney in buying and selling land warrants and locating lands in various parts of the country, which, during the rapid period of land speculation, grew into an enormous business. In 1853 the firm was merged into Cook, Sargeant, Barney & Co., whose operations were the most extensive in the state till the crash of 1857, which ruined their prospects, as it did those of thousands of others in the West. They did not get out of the business soon enough to save themselves.

In 1856 General Booth, with others, invested largely in the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad stock. In 1857 General Booth was elected treasurer of the company and one of the directors. From that time to the present he has been continuously connected with railroads in various ways.

No man in Dubuque, or perhaps in Iowa, has made and lost more money than General Booth. He has been a man of great versatility, adapting himself easily to changes, and hence few men have followed so many different occupations. He has been lumberman, merchant, pork packer, miller, banker, land dealer, miner, railroad officer, surveyor general, and shot manufacturer, besides the offices he has held and the public services he has performed. He built the first flouring mill ever erected in Dubuque, the Dubuque City Mill, in 1848, an interest in which he still owns. For five years he gave his own personal attention exclusively to mining, going into the mines himself and supervising their operation. In 1843 he struck one of the largest lodes ever opened in Dubuque, from which 7,000,000 pounds of lead were taken.

In 1856 he was one of the state commissioners to establish the State Bank of Iowa, which institution owes its origin and establishment to him and his associates. He was one of the originators, and has been the operator of the method of shot making by the substitution of a mining shaft for the ordinary shot-tower.

In the Fall of 1872 General Booth was elected a member of the fourteenth General Assembly on the Republican ticket, he having voted that ticket since the war, though previous to that a Democrat in political faith.

General Booth was married in 1838 to Miss Henrietta Eyre, a native of the same town in Pennsylvania, where he was born, and has raised two children. Both the General and Mrs. Booth are members of the Episcopal Church, of which church (St. John's, in Dubuque) he is Senior Warden.

Honorable J. K. GRAVES, of Dubuque, was born in Keene, New Hampshire, September 29, 1837. He removed to Boston, Massachusetts, in 1854, and from thence to Dubuque at the close of 1855, from which period up to the Fall of 1858 he occupied a responsible position in a prominent banking house.

In 1858 he commenced banking business on his own account, under the firm name of J. K. Graves & Co., and in 1859 took part in the organization of the Dubuque branch of the State Bank of Iowa, in which the business of his own firm was soon merged, and subsequently he became vice-president and general manager of this bank, and was also a member of the Board of Control of the State Bank of Iowa.

During the early days of the rebellion he was appointed post quartermaster at Camp Franklin, Dubuque, with the rank of colonel, having at one time nearly six thousand men in camp.

In 1866 he built and finished the Key City Gas Works, by which the City of Dubuque is now lighted, and of which company he is now president and director, and also a large stockholder.

In 1867 he was elected Mayor of the City of Dubuque, upon the Republican ticket, having a majority of 248 over his Democratic opponent, which, considering the fact that Dubuque is a strong Democratic city, spoke well for Mr. Graves' popularity.

The first (we believe) steam fire engine used in Iowa was purchased by the City of Dubuque and named the J. K. Graves, and Mr. Graves, in recognition of the compliment, donated his official salary as mayor to the fire department.

In 1868 Mr. Graves took a very active part in the organization and construction of the Dubuque Street Railway, of which company he was and is still the president, and also a director and large stockholder.

Mr. Graves was one of the principal parties in the organization of the National State Bank, of which he was cashier and subsequently vice president, and which bank succeeded to the business of the Dubuque Branch Bank. He was also largely interested in the organization of the First National Bank, of which he was also for several years vice-president. He occupied an important part in the organization of the Commercial National Bank, in which he is still a director and stockholder.

Mr. Graves owned and for some years operated the Dubuque Shot Tower, but finally disposed of the "Tower" to the St. Louis company, and conceived the idea of using a mineral shaft for making shot, and put the idea in practical operation, enabling one with an investment of a few thousand dollars to manufacture shot in competition with the ordinary "tower," where hundreds of thousands were required in the construction.

Mr. Graves has always identified himself with the varied manufacturing interests of Dubuque, and aided liberally in promoting her general growth and prosperity.

In 1870 Mr. Graves was induced to turn his attention to the construction of a new railroad outlet from Dubuque to Chicago, and was elected president of the Chicago, Clinton and Dubuque Railroad Company, the road of which is now in successful operation from Dubuque to Clinton, 60 miles along the west bank of the Mississippi River. He was also elected president of the Chicago, Dubuque & Minnesota Railroad Company, the construction of whose road was actively commenced within ten days thereafter, and rapidly prosecuted to completion, extending along the west bank of the Mississippi from Dubuque to La Crescent, Minnesota, with a branch extending up Turkey River from the main line to the west boundary of Fayette County to the Iowa Pacific Junction.

Mr. Graves is also President of the Iowa Pacific Railroad Company, whose line extends from the above junction westerly via Fort Dodge to Onawa, on the Missouri River, now mostly graded and partly ironed.

Mr. Graves has traveled extensively in this country, including a trip across the Plains to New Mexico, as a special commissioner appointed by the Department of the Interior to hold council with 6,000 Navajos Indians, Union prisoners of war at Fort Sumner, in the Southern part of New Mexico. He has also visited Europe and the continent twice.

As an active, enterprising citizen, Mr. Graves has taken a deep interest and pride in the development, growth and prosperity of Iowa, and whatever he undertakes is prosecuted with energy and vigor.

PLATT SMITH.—The subject of this sketch was born in the town of Hoosick, Rensselaer County, New York, May 6, 1813. His parents were in rather moderate circumstances, and when he was about two years of age they removed to Central New York, and finally settled in Chenango County, on a new farm. The country was new, and the soil was rather poor and covered with heavy timber. Until he was about fourteen years of age, there was no school in the district; a warfare was waged about the school house site; one house was built, and burned, as was supposed, by one of the contending parties. A school house was finally built, and a school was kept three months in the Winter, and about the same length of time in the Summer, of each year. He attended this school, off and on, during a year or two, and acquired sufficient information to read a newspaper. Work was plenty, and he did whatever was required; there was hardly a branch of business carried on in the neighborhood that he did not understand. After he was 21 years of age he engaged in merchandizing, with some success at first, but failed in the universal crash of 1837. The merchandizing affair cost him all he made, and left him forty-seven dollars in debt. During the next two years he worked at the millwright and carpenter business, and whatever else he found to do.

In November, 1839, he emigrated to Jackson County, Iowa, where he had the ague and fever for the first two years. During this time he was cared for by John E. Goodenow and family, the first settlers in the Town of Maquoketa. The kindness of Mr. Goodenow and wife will never be forgotten.

In November, 1842, a controversy arose between Curtis M. Doolittle, an intelligent bookseller then recently from Cincinnati, and an old gentleman by the name of David Harrington; the dispute was about a "claim." Harrington had built a small cabin on the land; Doolittle undertook to drive him out, and with a stick of brace timber knocked off some of the siding. Harrington struck Doolittle; a row ensued; Doolittle sued Harrington before a justice of the peace for forcible entry and detainer. This action was then regarded by the community as an action to test the title, or right of possession. Doolittle was a man of good education, was rather a fine public speaker, and fancied he knew considerable law. There were no lawyers nor law books in the neighborhood. Harrington asked Smith to assist him in the case, to which he assented, which was tried before a justice and a jury. The evidence was submitted. Doolittle addressed the jury. Harrington trembled. Smith replied to Doolittle, saying that he would meet the issue as Doolittle had made it, which was a question of title of ownership of the claim to the premises and cabin. The justice had sworn the jury on a Bible. Smith picked it up, and read from the 3d chapter of 1st Kings, where Solomon asked of the Lord wisdom to judge his people, and the Lord answered, "I have done according to thy word. Lo I have given thee a wise and understanding heart, so that there was none like thee, before thee, neither after thee, shall any arise like unto thee." Immediately after this there came before Solomon a controversy between two harlots as to who was the true mother of a child. The evidence and assertion of each was equally strong. Solomon called for a sword that he might divide the child between them. One of the claimants favored the division — the destruction — the other yielded her claim, and begged that the child might be spared. Solomon immediately decided the case in favor of the one who wanted no destruction, and they heard of the decision and wisdom of Solomon, and he became famous throughout the land for his wisdom.

That precedent and that decision is as good law to-day as it was when it was made. Doolittle sought to destroy the cabin. Harrington objected, and struck Doolittle. It is unnatural for the owner of property to seek its destruction. Harrington naturally sought to stay destruction, being the true owner of the cabin. It will be remembered that the wisdom of Solomon was given him that he might be able to judge his people.

The speech was brief; the jury thought it to the point, and the people who heard it were of the same opinion. Harrington ever afterwards, on all proper occasions, related the story with great satisfaction. Doolittle, the next day, came to Smith, and proposed that he should study law; he stayed several hours, and that was the principal theme of conversation. Others concurred with him. Doolittle offered to send to Cincinnati for books for him. Smith felt gratified by the good opinions that had been expressed by his friends in regard to the late trial, and finally consented to Doolittle's proposition. At that time there were no railroads in the country; the books came to hand on the 12th day of December. He had already obtained the consent of Henry Hopkins, a lawyer of Bellevue, to study law in his office. On the 13th of December he took his books to Bellevue and commenced. Harrington had previously resided in Bellevue, and was there on the 14th, and told the story of his previous trial with so much enthusiasm, that it was not more than two days afterwards until he (Smith) was engaged in another forcible entry and detainer case, this being the only action that was then usually brought to recover the claims of the settlers on the public lands, and there were no other lands in the country at that time. The amount involved was frequently of the value of five hundred dollars, and sometimes several thousand dollars. The trial of the first action in Bellevue took place within the first ten days; the case was an important one. Hopkins and James K. Moss, the only regular attorneys in Bellevue, were the opposing counsel. The trial resulted in a verdict for Smith's client. There was a large number of people present, and the enthusiasm of the people was such that from thenceforth he was almost uniformly the first choice in nearly every suit that was brought, and was usually opposed by Hopkins & Moss, and was generally paid a fee of from fifteen to twenty-five dollars in each case, and received twenty-five dollars for the first case which he tried in Bellevue. This was a capital such as he had not before had since he came to the territory. He had previously engaged his board with Hopkins, and was to saw wood for him and others to pay for it. The first cord of wood was finished, and that was the last. His time was divided between the study of his books and the practical business outside in attending to cases until the first Monday in February, when in view of the approaching term of the District Court, he went to Dubuque, for the purpose of being admitted to the bar. The court in Dubuque at that time was held in the Stone Church, on Locust Street. He listened to the cases for about four days, and then applied for admission. The court and lawyers had a consultation, and there was then rather a strong bar at Dubuque. The result was that they denied an examination, saying that he had not studied long enough. One of the attorneys, who was a very kind and humane man, recommended that he would apprentice himself to a harness maker, and proffered any assistance in his power. This proposition was made in good faith, and was no doubt done with the best of motives. Smith thanked the gentlemen, and replied he was coming to Dubuque to practice law, and his mind was then made up to do so; and before leaving the city he inquired into the price of board, rent of houses, etc.

He had formed quite a favorable opinion of the Dubuque bar notwithstanding their refusal to give him an examination for admission; he concluded that it would require five or six months to practice in Dubuque to get even with Davis and Crawford, whom he regarded as the most formidable of the Dubuque attorneys. He then returned to his old friend Goodenow, at Maquoketa. The idea that he had been refused an examination at Dubuque seemed to shock and astonish his friends in Jackson County. He paid Doolittle for the books, and a few days afterwards took passage on a raft of lumber that ran out of the Big Maquoketa, destined for Muscatine. He worked his passage and acted as pilot in running the raft over the Rock Island Rapids, having first tied up and run a small boat down to see the channel. At Muscatine he hired a horse to go to Tipton, where Judge Williams' Court was then in session. He changed his clothes and left his pocket-book by accident in Muscatine; when he got to Tipton he discovered the mistake. He viewed the court and lawyers a few moments, then introduced himself to Ralph P. Lowe, since Governor and Chief Justice of the state. He related to him the circumstances; asked him for the loan of ten dollars, which he said would be a great favor; told Mr. Lowe that he wanted to be examined and admitted. Lowe immediately advanced the money and told Smith to pay it to Deshler, his partner, in Muscatine. The examination was satisfactory; he obtained a certificate of admission, which was dated the 27th of March; returned to Muscatine, paid Deshler the ten dollars, and returned home. On the first Monday of April, the court sat at Andrew, the county seat of Jackson County. The judge, who a few days previously had denied an examination at Dubuque, was surprised to find Smith's name marked as counsel in thirty-five cases out of a total number of forty-two on the docket, and took the first opportunity to suggest to Smith that he ought be admitted to the bar before he could attend to those cases. The judge seemed quite willing that Smith should be examined. Smith assured him that he was admitted at Tipton and offered to show the judge the certificate, which he declined to look at. The judge was ever afterwards a good friend of Smith's, and, in fact, in refusing the examination he only did what nearly any other judge would do under the circumstances. But Smith was not as frank at Tipton in stating the length of time that he had studied law as he was at Dubuque; he only said that he had studied law sufficiently to qualify himself for admission, as he had been advised by Hopkins and Moss. The cases at Andrew were disposed of in about five days. Smith met the Dubuque bar there, and when Court adjourned they all professed, and no doubt sincerely, to regret their course of action, and thought that Smith must have been studying law for the last five or six years.

The criminal cases in which he was engaged were severely contested. He assisted Hopkins in the prosecution of a man named Jackson who was indicted for the murder of Zopher Perkins. Jackson was convicted and hung. Smith soon regretted that he had assisted Hopkins at all, because, on reflection, it was extremely doubtful whether Jackson did not kill Perkins in self defense. Be that as it may, he never prosecuted another man for murder. During the next eight years he was engaged to defend a great majority of all criminals that were tried in the district and some in the adjoining states — States of Illinois and Wisconsin,—and in no case was any one ultimately convicted and sentenced, not even to pay a fine. Two of the judges who presided in the district are still living and many lawyers who practiced during that time, but no one can mention a case where a man ever paid a penalty of a dollar, or was hung or imprisoned, except the imprisonment usual before the ultimate trial. He sometimes tried seven or eight murder cases in one year; in one instance there were four such cases in four successive weeks in four different counties—three white men and one Indian,—and frequently he defended two or three Indians in the same week. The excitement in some of these murder cases ran very high. Public meetings were frequently held, especially in Jackson County, to denounce Smith and his clients; but it was all of no avail—the supposed culprit was always set free. One reason why this was so was that he always gave the case a careful examination before he engaged as counsel. If there was no fair ground to doubt the guilt of the prisoner, he would leave the matter in the hands of others; but if there was a high probability of guilt, yet still there was room for a doubt, though the probabilities might preponderate in the ratio of ninety-nine to a hundred, that doubt formed in law and practice a ground for acquittal. About one half of these criminal cases paid very small fees; a large proportion of them nothing. A few paid well; but if there was a reasonable doubt about the guilt of the prisoner, even though he had nothing, the case was attended to the same as though he could pay a good fee. About the year 1850, he began to get tired of criminal cases, and from that time turned his attention to civil cases. In the year 1853, the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company was formed. Smith drew the articles and presented them to his friends; was the first attorney of the company; got up the stock subscriptions; procured the right of way in person. In the fourth volume of G. Greene's report it will be seen that the first case was a case about the validity of Dubuque County's subscription to the stock of the road. In that volume the firm of Smith, McKinlay and Poor is reported in thirty-six cases; George G. Wright, late Chief Justice and United States Senator, had sixteen cases; the other lawyers in the state each had a less number. Smith argued the thirty-six cases in person, his partners frequently assisting, of course, in a portion of the Dubuque cases. But it may be remarked that he made no pretentions to ability to win a civil case; all he could do was to argue and submit them, and take his chances. The change of practice from criminal to civil cases greatly increased the annual compensation; but the change from the law to the railroad business was unfortunate so far as compensation was concerned. He remained with the first formed company until the road reached Iowa Falls, and was generally Vice-President and Attorney of the company, and a part of the time President. He then organized the Iowa Falls and Sioux City Company, and was one of the four directors that had the management of the road until it was completed to Sioux City, in 1870. He was also a director in the Sioux City and Pacific, and was one of the first to organize and help to start four or five other roads. He was one of the directors and helped to plan the Dubuque bridge, which was a work of short duration and very successful. He was almost entirely disconnected with the law for about fifteen years, but occasionally took a case, and usually received a fee varying from one thousand to as high as sixteen thousand dollars in each case.

In 1853 he tried his first case in the Supreme Court of the United States; the case of Chotau v. P. Malony. That was a test case brought to try the validity of the Dubuque claim, which was a grant by the Spanish Governor to Dubuque, of a tract of land nine miles wide by twenty miles in length. It included the City of Dubuque, and was supposed to be of the value of fourteen million dollars. Hon. T. S. Wilson and Platt Smith represented the settlers. In opposition, Chotau, who claimed under Dubuque; Reverdy Johnson and Mr. Cornick were counsel for Chotau. The documents were written in French and Spanish. The claim was situate in Louisiana at the time the grant was made. The law that applied to the case was also French and Spanish. A very unusual interest was shown by all concerned, especially those living on the tract, not only on account of the large amount involved in the case, but the novelty of the questions also made the case interesting.

Hon. A. C. Dodge and George W. Jones, the two United States Senators, were present at the argument. At the close of the case, C. J. Taney and several other of the judges, spoke in complimentary terms of Smith's speech, and congratulated the Senators. This was regarded as a good omen by Smith and his friends, but was looked upon as rather a backhanded compliment by the opposite counsel. Mr. Charles Gregoire, who had a very important ferry case pending in the same court at the same term, was there to employ counsel for his case. He consulted Reverdy Johnson about it, who spoke so highly of Smith's speech that Gregoire concluded to commit the whole case to Smith's hands—both cases were decided in his favor; but one point which was argued for Gregoire was overruled. Justice Grier especially complimented Smith for his effort in Gregoire's case, and said he would lay the brief away for reference in some future case. In Conway et al. v. Tayar's Executors, the 1st of Black's Reports, a similar question arose eight years afterwards in which the same question was involved. Mr. Justice Swayne, in delivering the opinion of the court, refers to the brief in Fanning v. Gregoire, and says, "The arguments on file show that this objection was pressed with learning and ability." This shows that Justice Grier must probably have called the attention of Justice Swayne to the brief, as the latter was not on the bench at the time the Gregoire case was tried. In the case of The Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company v. Litchfield, Mr. Justice Catron refers to Smith's brief, and quotes a half page from it on pages 88 and 89. This case was a test case involving the title of several million dollars worth of land. It was also decided in favor of Smith's client, but was afterwards practically overruled in subsequent cases, in which Smith was not counsel. In one of those cases he filed a brief which presented the case in a light that did not suit his associate counsel; they withdrew and suppressed it, and stated the case on their own points, and were beaten. The case might have resulted differently if the brief had been left in. In the case of Sanders v. The State of Iowa, reported in the 2d Iowa Reports, page 251, will be found the only reported speech made by Smith in a law case. As he was about leaving Iowa City, he was asked to assist William E. Leffingwell in a small case involving an important constitutional question. James M. McKinlay, Smith's partner, who was an expert shorthand writer, reported the speech for Mr. Clark, the reporter, who inserted it verbatim.

Honorable J. B. GRINNELL, of Grinnell.—Mr. Grinnell's parental ancestors were Huguenots who, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, escaped from France to Wales, and thence emigrated to Rhode Island in 1710,—his grandfather settling in the wilderness of Vermont. His maternal grandfather was from Scotland; he was an American soldier, wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Plattsburg. The subject of this sketch was born in New Haven, Vermont, in 1822, and is the son of Myron Grinnell, an intelligent gentleman who frequently held places of honor and trust. He was left an orphan at the age of ten years. Under the roof of his guardian he fitted himself to teach school at the age of sixteen, and then prepared for college under the late James Meacham, M.C., teaching Winters, and entered Oneida College, N.Y., graduating with honor, and subsequently receiving, at Middlebury College, Vermont, the honorary degree of A.M. He then graduated in theology at Auburn, N.Y., was ordained to the ministry in the Congregational Church, and commenced preaching at Union Village N.Y., where he remained three years. He then filled a Congregational pulpit one year in Washington, D.C., where he preached the first anti-slavery sermon remembered in that city, after which he removed to New York, and for three years dispensed the gospel to a congregation in that city. This brings his history to the beginning of 1854, when, on the approach of a throat disease, he determined upon removing to the West, and notice of his intention of establishing a colony in the West was published in the Independent and Tribune of New York, in the Winter of 1853-4.

In May, 1854, Mr. Grinnell met, by appointment, others who wished to join him in the enterprise, at Iowa City, Iowa, and the party proceeded to select a location. This done, Mr. Grinnell entered several thousand acres of land in the vicinity, and laid off a town site, which he deeded to a board in trust for educational purposes, at a nominal price. This title contained the celebrated prohibitory clause stipulating reversion of title to the donor of any lot upon which intoxicating liquors should ever be sold as a beverage. The town was named Grinnell by its citizens in honor of the founder. They also decided that his generous donation should be used toward establishing an institution of learning named "Grinnell University," of which Mr. Grinnell was made President, remaining such until the University was united with and merged in Iowa College in 1858. In addition to the munificent donation he had previously made, Mr. Grinnell now contributed considerable money and twenty acres of very valuable land for a college campus, and his influence and liberality undoubtedly secured Iowa College to Grinnell.

After supplying the pulpit at Grinnell for some time gratuitously, and doing much to put the Congregational Society of that place on a footing from which it has risen to be the largest society of that name in the state, Mr. Grinnell entered another field of public life, and in 1856 was elected to the Senate of Iowa on the issue of free schools and opposition to slavery. In that assembly he became Chairman of the Committee on Schools and Universities, and as such introduced and advocated the law which thereafter made education free at public expense to every child in Iowa. He was also placed upon the Board of Regents of the State University, in which body he earnestly and forcibly advocated the co-education of the sexes on an equal footing in that institution. The proposition carried after a fierce contest.

Mr. Grinnell continued to take an active part in politics, warmly espousing Republican principles, and was a delegate to the memorable convention which nominated Mr. Lincoln for President in 1860. He was appointed Special Mail Agent for the Northwest during the first year of Mr. Lincoln's administration, and in 1862 was elected to a seat in the House of Representation from the fourth district of Iowa. In 1864 he was re-elected. Retiring from Congress at the close of his second term, he received nearly 400 votes for the nomination for Governor in the convention which nominated Col. Samuel Merrill, but withdrew in favor of the soldier. As the successor of James W. Grimes in the United States Senate, he lacked but a few votes of a nomination in the Republican Legislative Caucus. In 1872, Mr. Grinnell attended the convention which nominated Mr. Greeley for President, as an old and ardent friend of the great journalist, but not as an enemy of General Grant, having declined an honorable appointment from the President. He is understood now to be not in accord with the Republican party leaders; yet he stands by his radical votes.

In Congress Mr. Grinnell was an advocate of a protective tariff. He was a strong partisan and never wavered in his support of the Union cause, and had the satisfaction of seeing that cause triumph completely before he left the representative chamber. On one occasion he had a bitter controversy upon the floor of the House with General Rousseau, of Kentucky, and was attacked by him with a cane in consequence; for which Rousseau was censured at the bar of the House, and before his death in New Orleans asked and received pardon of his injured colleague.

Mr. Grinnell achieved lasting honor as umpire in settling the dispute in relation to the title of the Cherokee Neutral Lands in Kansas, of which sale had been made by both Harlan and Browning. He drew and secured the ratification by Congress of the supplemental treaty which arrested enormous litigation, quieted the title to 800,000 acres of land, secured the building of the railroad down to the territory, and the final settlement of the question to the satisfaction of all justly interested parties. The following year he was intrusted with an important confidential pecuniary mission in that region, making a trip across the Indian Territory and through Texas.

Gifted with versatile talents and an enterprising spirit that abhors rest, Mr. Grinnell has been equally active in other directions. He is the reputed founder of several towns in Iowa and Kansas. He has been director in the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad Company. He was first President of the Central Railroad of Iowa; later Director. He is now actively engaged in building the A. K. and D. Railway, and is President of several roads incipient. He has been styled by the press "the busiest man in the country, now praising Iowa at a state fair, now presiding at a convention, and in one year Railroad President, Bank President, and President of the Iowa Wool Growers' Association and the State Horticultural Society." He is emphatically a public man, speaking on most questions of public interest with fluency and force. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, but has a taste and reputation for settling rather than prosecuting cases.

Mr. Grinnell was married in 1852 to Miss Chapin, of Springfield, Mass., and has two daughters, now members of Iowa College. His elegant residence is within a stone's throw of the Union Depot for the C., R. I. and P. and Central Railroad of Iowa, and he is "at home" in its broadest sense in the progressive young city named in his honor, and which will perpetuate his deeds both in what it has and what it has not,—on the one hand, one of the foremost educational institutions in the state; on the other hand, not a single saloon, and no intoxicating liquors have ever been publicly sold within its limits. He has reason to be proud of the city and of its reputation.

Honorable THOMAS S. WILSON, one of the original judges of the Territory of Iowa, and of the District Court for many years, was born at Steubenville, Ohio, October 13, 1813. He graduated at Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, in 1832, and, after studying law two years, was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Ohio in 1834. He immediately commenced practice with General Stokely, at Steubenville, and although having an unusually good prospect in that locality, contrary to the advice and wishes of his friends, he determined to go west and rise with the new country. Having a brother, Captain George Wilson, of the 1st United States Infantry, under command of Colonel Zachary Taylor, at Prairie du Chien, he went there with his wife (being then a married man), and remained till he could select a place of settlement. Deciding to settle at Dubuque, he removed here in October, 1836.

In the Spring of 1837 he was elected President of the Board of Trustees of the Town of Dubuque. Iowa was then a part of Wisconsin Territory, and contained two counties—Dubuque and Des Moines. Up to the 4th of July, 1838, he practiced law in Dubuque, Mineral Point, Lancaster and Prairie du Chien, and was engaged in almost every suit up to that time.

In June, 1838, he was nominated a delegate to Congress by the northern counties of Iowa; W. W. Chapman, of Burlington, being nominated by the southern counties; and taking a steamer, with the view of going south to canvass the southern part of the state, he was informed by the captain that a St. Louis paper, which he had on board, contained the announcement of his (Mr. Wilson's) appointment, by President Van Buren, as one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Iowa. That was the first intimation he had of an appointment which had been made wholly unknown and without application on his part. His appointment was renewed by Presidents Tyler and Polk, and he continued Judge of the Supreme Court till a year after the admission of Iowa into the Union as a State in 1846.

When the first Legislature met and went into joint ballot, he came within one vote of being elected United States senator.

The first court ever held in Iowa Territory was held by Judge Wilson, at Prairie La Porte, now Guttenburg, on the second Monday in September, 1838.

He resigned his office as Judge of the Supreme Court in 1847, and practiced law in partnership with Platt Smith, Esq., and his brother, Honorable D. S. Wilson, about four years; and in April, 1852, was elected, without opposition, Judge of the District Court, and by successive elections held the office till January 1, 1863,—making twenty years and a few days of service as judge. He held the first courts ever held in the counties of Clayton, Delaware, Jones, Allamakee, Winneshiek, Black Hawk, Bremer, Chickasaw, Fayette and Clinton; and the following counties were in his district during his term of office: Clayton, Dubuque, Jackson, Scott, Muscatine, Cedar, Jones, Delaware, Fayette, Linn, Benton, Black Hawk, Grundy, Bremer, Floyd, Chickasaw, Allamakee, Winneshiek and Clinton. It is stated upon good authority that Judge Wilson never had ten cases reversed during all the time he was on the bench.

In the local controversy respecting the right of the Government to lease the lead mines of Dubuque, the question was brought before the District Court, and Judge Wilson decided against the right of the Government to lease the mines, claiming that, while there had been an act of Congress in reference to mines in Indiana Territory, there had been none respecting those west of the Mississippi. As soon as the judge's decision had been sent to Washington, the Secretary of War, Honorable John C. Spencer, wrote the judge a sharp letter, intimating that he would speedily be removed from office. In this letter occurs a laughable mistake, which is a good illustration of how little even men high in place understood the geography of this western country at that time. Secretary Spencer stated in his letter that, even if the right of the Government to lease the mines did not extend west of the Mississippi, he did not see why the judge could not have decided that it did extend to that part of Iowa lying east of the river.

Honorable James Wilson, Surveyor-General of Iowa (having his office at Dubuque), saw the letter, and having occasion to visit Washington, called on the secretary and gave him a lesson in geography, and pointed out to him between what states and territories the Mississippi ran. "This," says Judge Wilson, "settled the question as to my removal from office. The Father of Waters was my father and friend on that occasion, and stayed home in his old bed; for had he left home and traveled off between other states and territories, my head would have fallen off."

Judge Wilson was elected two consecutive terms to the Legislature—in 1866 and 1868. At the session in 1866 he was tendered, by the Democratic members, the nomination for United States senator, which he declined.

He was also a member of the Cincinnati convention, and took an active part in the nomination of Mr. Buchanan for the presidency.

Judge Wilson has been twice married. His first wife, whom he married in Ohio before he came west, was Miss Anna Hoge, daughter of David Hoge, Esq., of Steubenville. He was married to Miss Mary Stokely, his present wife, in 1864, and has had five children. The judge is now engaged in the practice of the law in Dubuque, and notwithstanding his long and laborious experience in public life, appears remarkably young and active. His talents have been recognized and his great services appreciated by his fellow-citizens, among whom he is held in high esteem.

Honorable DAVID S. WILSON, Judge of the Ninth Judicial District of Iowa, was born in Steubenville, Ohio, March 18, 1825. At the age of fourteen he graduated from the High School in his native town, and immediately removed to Dubuque, Iowa, for the purpose of studying law with his brother, Honorable Thomas S. Wilson, who was at that time Judge of the District Court, and had been one of the three original judges both of the District and Supreme Courts of the territory, appointed with Honorable Charles Mason and Honorable Joseph Williams, by President Van Buren in 1838.

Mr. Wilson remained with his brother in the study of law about six months. At the expiration of that period a new field was opened for the exercise of his talents, in connection with the press; and, although a mere youth, he was invited to assume the responsibilities of the editorial profession, which he entered upon and followed with marked success during a period of about five years. The Miner's Express had been started at Dubuque, in 1841, by Avery Thomas, who had retained his connection with it about six months, when it was purchased by Mr. Wilson and Andrew Keesecker, and conducted by them jointly till 1845. During this period the Express was edited by Mr. Wilson, Mr. Keesecker being the printer. It was a decided success both editorially and financially, considering the period in which these parties were engaged in its publication. Mr. Wilson, the young editor, was ardent in the Democratic faith; the Express was democratic in politics; such were also the prevailing political sentiments of the country during that period; and the proprietors did a large share of the public printing of the territory.

At the close of his editorial career, in 1845, having sold the Express to George Greene, Mr. Wilson returned again to the study of law with his brother.

In April, 1846, when he had arrived at the age of twenty-one years and one month, he was elected to the Legislature of Iowa, as a member of the house, from Dubuque County, and in the question then pending respecting the re-submission of the State Constitution to a vote of the people, took an active and prominent part, both in oral discussion and written articles.

This was during the period of the Mexican War. Governor Clark, of Iowa, desired a company of volunteers to be raised to relieve Major Sumner, in command at Fort Atkinson, whose services, with the 2d Cavalry, were required in Mexico. To accomplish this object, Governor Clark commissioned Mr. Wilson lieutenant, with authority, in conjunction with Captain Morgan, to raise the required company of men. The company was accordingly raised—one half by Captain Morgan and the balance by Lieutenant Wilson—and proceeded to Fort Atkinson, on Turkey River, where they remained in service two years. During this time they removed the whole tribe of Winnebago Indians from the reservation at Fort Atkinson to Long Prairie, one hundred and twenty five miles above the Falls of St. Anthony. They remained in service several months after the close of the Mexican War, on account of the inability of the Government to relieve them.

Returning to Dubuque, Mr. Wilson was shortly admitted to practice as an attorney and counsellor-at-law, and was immediately elected by the citizens of Dubuque County to the office of Prosecuting Attorney, which he filled during two consecutive terms with so much satisfaction to his constituents that he was unanimously tendered the office for a third term, but he declined, feeling that there was more profit in defending people than in prosecuting them.

In 1851, when the Land Office became established in Dubuque, great inducements were offered for active and energetic men to engage in the land speculations which became so rife during the following few years, creating a mania for land in the new settlements of Iowa and the Northwest. So great was the rush of land-hunters and speculators during this period, that lands were held at fabulous prices, and every interest connected therewith so enormously inflated, that it is impossible to conceive the extent of the excitement or the disastrous consequences that followed in a few years.

On the first wave of this rapid movement Mr. Wilson embarked, and was carried along by the spirit of the period. Forming a partnership with his brother, Judge Thomas S. Wilson, he engaged in the speculation in lands and land-warrants, giving his entire attention to the business, while at the same time his brother remained in the discharge of the duties of his office as District Judge. In a few years they had done an extensive business and become wealthy at the prices then prevailing, and had they stopped in season, might have continued so; but the temptation to continue was too great. They were drawn into the whirlpool which, in 1856–7, wrecked their fortunes in a general collapse throughout the West. But a man of energy and perseverance is not likely to be discouraged under such circumstances. And so Mr. Wilson, learning a valuable lesson in "inflation," came down at once to a "solid basis," on which, by his energy and talents in his profession, he has in a considerable degree retrieved his losses.

In 1857 Mr. Wilson was elected to the State Senate for a term of four years, having for his colleagues in the Senate Honorable Wm. G. Stewart, and in the House Honorable D. A. Mahony and Honorable Lincoln Clark, formerly a member of Congress from Iowa. This was said to be "as good a delegation as Dubuque County ever had in the Legislature."

During the extra session of 1861, which was called by the Governor for the purpose of putting the State of Iowa on a war footing, Mr. Wilson was nominated by the Legislature to deliver a lecture on the right of a state to secede from the Federal Union. Up to this time he had been an earnest Democrat, and had zealously advocated the principles and measures of the Democratic party. But in the examinations which it became necessary for him to make in the preparation of his lecture, he found occasion to diverge somewhat from the prevailing Democratic opinion. He brought out an able and thoroughly-prepared document, in point-blank opposition to the right of secession,—a document evincing great research into the subject, and one of the first of the kind that had appeared; showing historically and argumentatively, in a most convincing and conclusive manner, that a state has no right to secede from the Union on any pretext whatever. This argument of Mr. Wilson's became the great war-document of Iowa, and the Legislature circulated it by thousands all over the state. Henceforth Mr. Wilson was destined to act with the Republican party and the War-Democrats, in giving in his earnest adhesion to the cause of the Union during the Rebellion. At the invitation of the people of Des Moines, he repeated his lecture in that city to one of the largest audiences ever assembled at the capital.

A question had been raised as to the loyalty of the Irish regiment that had been organized in Iowa, and the Governor was unwilling to muster them into the Union service. Mr. Wilson, at the request of leading citizens of Dubuque, in 1862, went to Washington, and interviewed Secretary Stanton (who, by the way, had been an old friend of Mr. Wilson's family in Ohio), and obtained from him permission for the mustering in of the Irish regiment into the United States service, which was executed according to the order of the Secretary of War.

At the same time, Secretary Stanton, without the solicitation of Mr. Wilson, commissioned him colonel, with authority to go home and raise the Sixth Regiment of Iowa Cavalry. He immediately returned to Dubuque, and by his own personal exertions raised the regiment, although fifty thousand men had already been taken out of the state for the Union army. It was the preference of Colonel Wilson to have been ordered south with his command; but just prior to their mustering in, in August, 1862, the Sioux outbreak occurred in Minnesota, and Colonel Wilson, with his regiment, was ordered to Sioux City, to join a regiment from Nebraska, under command of Colonel Furnass, now Governor of that state, and thus consolidated under Brigadier-General Alfred Sully, to proceed up the river and join the Minnesota force in command of General H. H. Sibley, for the suppression of the Indian massacre. But failing to effect a junction, on account of delays in transportation, the force under General Sully found the Indian trail, and, overtaking them at White Stone Hill, fought the noted battle at that point, August 3, 1863, which resulted in killing about three hundred Indians and the capture of a hundred and fifty prisoners. In that battle Colonel Wilson had a fine horse shot under him, which had been presented him by the citizens of Dubuque. Seeing his horse about to fall, he instantly mounted another and kept up with the charge upon the enemy.

In the Fall of 1863 Colonel Wilson built Fort Sully on the Upper Missouri. During the Winter of 1863–4 he was stationed with his command, for the protection of the settlers, along the line of the Missouri River, from Fort Sully to Sioux City. Secretary Stanton not being able to fulfill his promise to send the colonel and his command south, Colonel Wilson resigned, and came home in June, 1864.

On the first of August following he started for California, where he went into partnership in the practice of law with his brother, S. M. Wilson, one of the leading lawyers on the Pacific coast. The partnership continued over two years, when he returned to practice in Dubuque and Washington City, being the attorney at the latter place in the celebrated case of McGarrahan vs. the New Idria Quicksilver Mining Company. This case was closed after being on trial two years. It was tried before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, Honorable John A. Bingham, of Ohio, chairman. The committee consisted of the following persons: Honorable John A. Bingham; Honorable Benj. F. Butler; Honorable ——Eldridge, of Wisconsin; Honorable John A. Peters, now Judge of the Supreme Court of Maine; Honorable Ulysses Mercur, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania; Honorable Michael C. Kerr, M. C. from Indiana; Judge Kellogg, of Connecticut; and Judge Loughridge, of Iowa. The attorneys in the case were: Honorable David S. Wilson and Honorable William M. Evarts, for the Company; and Judge Paschal, of Washington City, and Judge Shaw, of New York, for McGarrahan. Mr. Wilson presented the facts in the case and a very able legal argument. Mr. Evarts followed, basing his defense of the Company on the facts furnished by Mr. Wilson. The committee, also, in awarding the title to the Company, made up their report from the matter furnished in Mr. Wilson's statement and defense of the case. This was an important trial, and its decision, to which Mr. Wilson contributed so largely, saved to the company a mining interest in California worth a million of dollars. The case had been ably argued repeatedly before the Supreme Courts of California and the United States, yet it was admitted that Mr. Wilson's defense of the Company was the most thorough and complete of any thing that had ever been presented on the subject.

After returning to Iowa, in June, 1872, he was appointed Circuit Judge, to fill the unexpired term made vacant in the Ninth Judicial District by the death of Judge Barker, which office he held till August following, when he was appointed District Judge, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge Brayton. In the Fall of 1874 he was elected by a large majority, irrespective of party distinction, to the office of District Judge, for a term of four years, commencing January 1, 1875.

Judge Wilson was married in 1850 to Henrietta E. Sanford, of Erie, Pennsylvania, and by this marriage has four children,—three sons and one daughter. The latter, Mrs. George W. Brock, resides in Chicago. The judge's oldest son, Henry, is about ready to graduate to the practice of law.

FITCH B. STACY.—F. B. Stacy was born at DeKalb, St. Lawrence County, New York, November 15, 1821. Early his tastes led him to a mercantile line of life, and he secured a position, and continued in trade at Utica, New York.

In 1855 he went to Chicago, and until 1861 engaged successfully in the dry goods jobbing trade. At this time he disposed of his interests in Chicago, and moved to Stacyville, Mitchell County, Iowa, where he has since resided—has a comfortable and commodious home, surrounded by the conveniences attendant on industry, competence and good taste.

In 1865 Mr. Stacy turned his attention to the raising of blooded-stock, which he has carried on successfully, and his herd now includes some of the finest specimens in the country, both of his own raising and importations from eastern states, and from Canada. At his "Little Cedar Stock Farm," at Stacyville, he has the finest full-blooded short-horn stock of cattle so much sought after by stock fanciers, embracing Princess breed, in which the Bates' blood predominates largely in his whole herd; pure blood Cotswold sheep from imported stock; a direct importation from England of Berkshire swine; and also full blood Chester white swine. He is increasing his stock constantly, and expects to continue in it for time to come at his "Little Cedar Stock Farm" at Stacyville, Iowa.

Honorable LEWIS LICHTY.—This gentleman, the present popular Mayor of the beautiful City of Waterloo, Iowa, was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, on the 29th day of February, 1828, and is now consequently forty-seven years of age, although his appearance would not indicate that so many winters had passed over his head. Perhaps his youthful appearance is somewhat due to the fact, that though born in 1828, he has passed but eleven birthdays. He is of German-Scotch descent, his father's grandparents having emigrated from German fatherland, while his mother's parents were born in Scotland. Born and brought up on a farm, a member of a large family, there being six boys and three girls, he early learned that life was an earnest reality, by being required to perform certain duties which usually fall to the lot of boys on all well regulated farms.

He received the rudiments of an English education under circumstances poorly calculated to inspire in a youthful mind desires for literary attainments, attending school in the primitive log school house in his neighborhood only when he could be spared from home duties and work. He attended college but a short time, paying his way by teaching, which he followed for several years afterwards, employing the spare time it afforded him in reading and study, thus disciplining and improving his mind by a thorough course of self-culture.

He read law in the office of the Honorable A. H. Coffroth, in the Town of Somerset, and in 1855 was admitted to the bar, having passed a creditable examination.

He immediately opened an office in the Town of Somerset, which then contained one of the strongest bars in the State of Pennsylvania, and continued the practice of his profession for nine years, when he removed with his family to Waterloo, Iowa. Here he at once devoted himself to his profession, and soon secured a good business.

Upon the organization of the city, in 1868, he was elected City Attorney, which office he held for two terms.

In 1875 he was elected Mayor, and has since filled that office three terms by re-election.

That he is a popular and efficient officer is manifested by the fact that he has been connected with the city government since its first organization, though not really in sympathy with the political party controlling the elections.

Holding advanced ideas, he has taken an active part in the educational interests of the city, serving a considerable portion of the time as a Member of the Board of Education.

In politics Mr. Lichty was raised in the Whig belief, but upon the demise of that party acted with the Democratic organization up to the time of the war, since which he has been what might be called a conservative, looking to principles rather than party politics.

He was married to Miss Henrietta C. Bennett, in May, 1862, in the historic Town of Winchester, Virginia. She died at the residence of her husband in Waterloo, Sept. 10, 1873, leaving three children to mourn her loss.

Mr. Lichty has won, by industry and integrity, an enviable position in life; for, whether as a servant of the public, or an individual member of society, he is respected and honored by all who know him.

J. L. CHASE.—The subject of this sketch is one of the early settlers of Mitchell County. He came here in the year 1856, and has since resided at Osage.

Mr. Chase was born at Limington, Maine, October 27, 1823. When two years old his father moved to Scarborough, in the same state, where our subject passed his early life, and resided until 1852, when he moved to Portland, and from thence, two years after, to Saco, Maine. From this last place he moved directly to Mitchell County, Iowa, and settled at Osage, where he at present resides. During the war he was deputy Provost Marshal, then appointed postmaster of Osage, which he held eight years. In 1865 was appointed deputy United States Revenue Assessor, and served until that position was abolished by act of Congress.

In 1874 he commenced dealing in farm implements and farm machinery supplies at Osage, and still continues.

In 1845 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Johnson, of Standish, Maine. Mr. and Mrs. Chase have a family of seven children, five of whom are living: Annie A., Alice M., Emma E., Moses Albert and Edith V.; Moses Herbert and Mary E. died in infancy.

S. B. CHASE, M.D.—Prominent among the early settlers of Mitchell County, the name of Doctor S. B. Chase, of Osage, may be mentioned. Prominent among the most enterprising and liberal spirited of its citizens, continued mention of his name may be made. In all matters of interest pertaining to the development, prosperity and welfare of Osage and Mitchell County, he has not asked others to lead that he might follow, but has lead while others have followed—true followers they have been, coequal in earnestness and enterprise with the leader—and the writer means no disrespect to them, but in every case involving public spirit some one must lead, and can succeed only when supported by determined and energetic followers. Particularly has he been prominent in the establishing and building up of the City of Osage. He was one of the first to discover the feasibility of planting a village here—was ever confident, and his confidence was not misplaced, that this could be made the most populous town in the county, by a proper and well directed effort—yet it has required a succession of efforts—but owing to his untiring zeal, and that of men of his ilk, it has become one of the pleasantest and most promising of the towns of Northern Iowa—made prominent and highly prized for its religious, educational and business advantages.

Doctor Chase was born October 4, 1821, in Limington, Maine. With his father and mother, Moses and Mary Chase, he went to Scarborough, Maine, at the age of four years, where he lived until 1849. His father served in the War of 1812, though but fifteen years of age.

He is emphatically a self-made man, having labored on his father's farm until 1842, at which time his father died. Enjoying only the advantages of the limited education afforded by a few months country school, his first effort was to prepare himself for teaching, at which he succeeded.

He taught school as a means of educating himself, and fitted for college at Parsonsfield Seminary and Limerick Academy. He read medicine with Doctor Larrabee, a distinguished physician of Portland, and graduated from the Medical Department of Bowdoin College, in the Spring of 1840, and entered upon the practice of his profession in the City of Portland, Maine, in June of the same year, where he remained in the enjoyment of a large practice until September, 1855, when he moved with his family to Decorah, Iowa.

He remained at Decorah during the opening of the United States Land Office, and moved to Osage—then little more than a prairie—in January, 1856, which, in February following, for himself and others, he laid off and platted what has grown to be the beautiful City of Osage.

He was appointed postmaster of Osage in the Spring of 1856; held the office until September, 1857, when he was appointed Register of the United States Land Office, which position he held until September, 1859, when all the public lands having been sold, the office was closed.

In the Summer of 1860 he moved to Des Moines, and there entered upon the practice of his profession, but at the urgent solicitation of friends—especially his aged mother and only brother—returned to Osage and resumed his practice there, in which he still continues.

He was married Sept. 3, 1840, to Miss Almira B. Cobb, of Limington, Maine. Mr. and Mrs. Chase have four children living, two sons and two daughters. They lost one child—a son—at Osage, in 1856. One daughter is married to Doctor Whitley, and resides at Osage; the other daughter is unmarried. One son, Doctor Frank W. Chase, graduate of Rush Medical College, married to Miss F. C. Babcock, and practicing medicine at Shenandoah, Iowa. The other son, a recent graduate from Ames, now reading law.

Honorable EDWARD G. MILLER, present State Senator from Black Hawk County, Iowa, was born on the 3d day of September, 1840, at Cornish, York County, Maine. His father, who was a tanner and leather dealer, removed West in November, 1851, and settled on a farm in Dane County, Wisconsin, where the subject of this sketch spent his youth, laboring on the farm during the Summer, and attending district school for a few months each Winter, until he was eighteen years of age, when he entered the preparatory department of the University of Wisconsin. Here he pursued his studies for nearly three years, paying his own way, when, in response to the first call of the government for troops, he enlisted as a private in the 1st Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, on the 17th day of April, 1861. This regiment was attached to General Patterson's army, was engaged in the battle of Falling Water, Virginia, and discharged the first gun fired by Wisconsin troops in the War of the Rebellion. His term of service expiring, he returned home in the Fall, and again pursued his studies until May, 1862, nearly completing the sophomore year, when, receiving a commission as a recruiting officer, with rank of first lieutenant, he raised a full company and became its captain. This company was mustered into the United States service at Madison, Wisconsin, on the 18th day of the following August, as Company "G" of the 20th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. The regiment spent the following Fall and Winter in Southwestern Missouri, and Northwestern Arkansas, under the command of General Heron, and were first engaged in the battle of Prairie Grove, Arkansas, in which they lost over two hundred in killed and wounded—more than any other regiment in the command. In the Spring of 1863 they returned to St. Louis, and were ordered to Vicksburg, where they remained until after the surrender of that city, when they accompanied the expedition up the Yazoo River and assisted in the capture of Yazoo City. They were then attached to the 13th Army Corps and ordered to New Orleans, where they remained until Fall, when as a part of General Dana's Division they were ordered to the Rio Grande. While on this expedition, during a revolution in the Mexican State of Tamanlipas, this regiment, with the 94th Illinois, was sent to Matamoras to protect the American Consulate there, which was the only instance in which our troops served on foreign soil during the war. Returning to New Orleans in 1864, they were immediately attached to General Granger's command in Mobile Bay, and took part in the capture of Fort Morgan, and the following Spring were engaged in the capture of Forts Spanish and Blakely, and in the subsequent occupation of the City of Mobile. The regiment was then ordered to Galveston, Texas, where it remained until the 14th of July, when it was mustered out of the service.

After returning home Captain Miller was employed as deputy clerk for some two years in the Circuit Clerk's Office of Dane County at Madison. In June, 1867, he removed to Black Hawk County, Iowa, and settled on a new farm in the southeast part of the county, where he still resides. In the Fall of 1869 he was elected County Superintendent of Public Schools, and in 1873 to the Upper House of the Iowa General Assembly, to which the importance of his county entitled him. He was assigned a place on the Committee on Railroads, Public Schools, Agricultural College, and several others of importance. Although a clear, forcible, speaker, his voice is seldom heard except when the public interest is in danger, or local wants demand his earnest support. A pure minded, honest, industrious man, he carefully guards the interests of his constituents, and is highly respected by his colleagues, and all who known him intimately and well. He early took an active part in the farmers' movement in this state, and assisted in the organization of most of the granges in this county, as deputy of the State Grange, and is an active member of Rustic Grange, number 83, of which he was the first master.

He was married in Wisconsin, June 17, 1867, to Miss Mary J. Klinefaller. They have two children living, a boy and a girl, having, in March, 1874, lost a little girl, their youngest.

J. F. WEBSTER, ESQ., was born in Richland County, Ohio, November 9, 1818, whither his parents had removed from Cayuga County, New York, and settled ten miles west of Mansfield, when the country was a wilderness.

In 1834 they removed to Will County, Illinois, near Joliet, where they resided two years, and then went to LaPorte County, Indiana, where Mr. Webster completed his education in thirty-two days in a log school-house, in 1837. He has never attended school a single day in any other than a log cabin. He was married in 1842 to Miss Eliza J. Carlisle, and continued to live in LaPorte County until April, 1857, when he removed with his family to Howard County, Iowa. He was elected Treasurer of Howard County in 1865, serving two years.

In 1867 he removed to Cresco, where he now resides, and of which town he is the present mayor, having been elected to that office in 1874, and re-elected in 1875.

He is the proprietor of the Webster House.

Mr. Webster has a heart filled with sympathy for his fellow men, and is always ready to do his utmost to relieve the distressed and unfortunate wherever met.

JAMES D. BOURNE, a prominent and well known citizen of Clinton County, was born in Prince William County, Virginia, December 27, 1811. The following sketch of his life will show how and with what success he has since struggled for the mastery of circumstances. In the Spring of 1813 his parents emigrated to Shelby County, Kentucky, where they remained until April, 1824, at which time his father placed the family and their entire stock of worldly goods into an old-fashioned "keel" boat, and set out for Missouri. He landed at Hannibal in that state, on the 24th of August, 1824, and from there proceeded to Lewis County, where he permanently located. James D. remained at this home with his father till the Spring of 1832, when he procured a pony, saddle, bridle, etc., and with $40 in his pockets started for the Galena lead mines. This was the year of the "Black Hawk War," and young Bourne, after a day's travel, learning that the Indians were taking scalps in Northwestern Illinois, he concluded that "discretion was the better part of valor," and so returned home where he remained until the Fall of that year, when he again struck out for the lead mines. His route lay along the east bank of the Mississippi River. He arrived at Galena just in time to cast his first vote for the great statesman, Henry Clay. Mr. Bourne was one among others who built the first log furnace for smelting lead ore that was constructed in "Snake Hollow" (now Potosi) Grant County, Wisconsin. It was built in the Winter of 1832-33.

In June, 1833, he crossed the river into Iowa, and begun mining operations in the hills back of the present site of the City of Dubuque.

Under the treaty of peace made at Rock Island, in the Fall of 1832, emigrants were prohibited from settling on any lands of the "Black Hawk Purchase," until June 1, 1833. Then Iowa first became open for legal settlement. It was attached to Michigan for judicial purposes.

Mr. Bourne continued mining until September, 1836, when he quit the business and settled on section 6 T. 80 R. 5 now in Eden Township, Clinton County. There had been a trading post kept by the American Fur Company at this point, but was deserted at the time of which we write. He remained at this place until the location of the county seat was made at DeWitt, when he took up his residence in the village, where he has since resided. Mr. B. has been the owner of many thousands of acres of land in Clinton, Cedar, Marshall, and other counties of the state; he has, at present, one of the finest stock farms in Clinton County. Was married to Christiana Dennis, at DeWitt, Iowa, in the year 1842, and has raised and educated a family of nine children.

Mr. Bourne was the first settler in Clinton County, also the first postmaster and sheriff. The latter office he held for four terms. He has also held the offices of recorder and treasurer of the county, and represented it in the Lower House of the General Assembly in the Winter of 1838-39. He was admitted to the bar by Judge Dillon among the last acts of his authority as Judge of the District Court.

DR. CLARK JOSLIN was born in Bricksville, Cuyahoga County, Ohio, April 2, 1816.

The family is of Welsh origin in the paternal, and in the maternal line, English.

His great-grandfather served through the Revolutionary War, and his father served in the war of 1812, under General Wm. H. Harrison, and drew his land warrants for 160 acres; and Mr. Joslin still owns one of the forties bought by said warrant.

The following is a sketch of Dr. Joslin's father, as furnished by him to the press in Anamosa:

"ANAMOSA, IOWA, Jan. 2, 1869.

"Editor Eureka—I promised to furnish you a brief narrative of my father (John G. Joslin); his nativity, travels, etc. He was born Oct. 6, 1794, in Pittstown, Rensseaer County, New York. His father and mother both died and left him a poor orphan boy at about six years of age, after which he lived with one of his uncles for a time, and then with other relatives, until he was fourteen years old, when he went into Ontario County, New York, and remained until Nov., 1811. He then left his relatives in the East and went into Huron County, Ohio, and articled with a man for a piece of timbered land, on which he commenced clearing off the timber for the purpose of making him a farm; but in some way failed in making payments on the land, and finally lost it, together with all the labor he had done on it; mostly in consequence of the great change that was taking place at that time in money matters, on account of the approach of the war with Great Britain, which commenced in 1812. He then enlisted in the service of the United States; first in Captain John Dibbell's company of infantry, serving about three months, when said Dibbell was, for some cause, discharged the service. My father soon after went into Captain J. R. Reed's company of infantry, as a substitute for another soldier, and served about six months in said Reed's company, which was stationed at Fort Meigs, and under the command of General Harrison; and while there he helped to build Fort Meigs; and on leaving the service he received an honorable discharge, upon which the General Government granted him a bounty land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land.

"After peace was declared between the United States and Great Britain, he went into Cuyahoga County, Ohio, and soon after married and settled on a farm in the Town of Bricksville, sixteen miles south of Cleveland, where he carried on farming up to the Fall of 1827, when he moved his family (then consisting of four sons and one daughter, besides himself and wife) to Washtenaw County, Michigan, and settled down on eighty acres of wild land one and a half miles east of the Village of Saline, remained there about a year, sold out and moved to the west side of the Town of Saline, about a half a mile distant from the town, and stopped there about a year, during which time he and myself (being his eldest son) went into St. Joseph County, Michigan, and took up a claim on the west side of Big Prairie Round, about one and one-half miles from the west side, east, and out in the naked prairie, and broke up about twenty or thirty acres of the land with the intention of moving on to it the next Spring. But something so happened as to prevent, and he then sold out this claim with improvements, and bought two hundred and forty acres of timbered land five miles west of Saline Village, on which he settled and cleared up about seventy acres. Remaining there until the Summer of 1837, he sold this farm and emigrated to Jones County, Iowa. (His family then consisted of six sons and two daughters, besides himself and wife.) Here he bought a large quantity of prairie and timber lands, and settled his family around him nearly as he had always wished to do, and made his permanent residence about four miles south of Anamosa, in Fairview Township. He was one of the first to settle in Fairview, and he and his sons helped to raise the first saw mill built in Jones County, on the Buffalo Creek, by Honorable George Walworth and G. H. Ford, Esq. And he was also a Member of the first Grand Jury that sat in Jones County, of which he was made foreman.

"The District Court at that time convened at Edinburgh, about nine miles east of Anamosa, the present county seat, and Judge T. S. Wilson presided on the bench.

"He attended the first public land sales in Dubuque, in 1840, and was an acting justice of the peace at that time, having been elected to that office at the spring election of that year. In 1850, he, with two of his sons, Daniel and Thurston, fitted up teams and started on the 13th day of May an overland trip to California, arriving in Georgetown, California, on the 7th day of Oct. following. He and his sons prospected over a good portion of the gold mining country open at that time, sharing privations and hardships in common with others in search for the golden treasure, and without meeting with very good success, and becoming somewhat discouraged, after a stay of about one year, and he being quite out of health, together with his sons, started for home from Sacramento City, May 28, 1851, by steamer via San Francisco, and around by New Orleans and up the Mississippi to Muscatine, Iowa, arriving home sometime in July following.

"They then turned their attention again to farming. My father's health remained quite poor for one or two years after returning home; but he finally gained it again so as to be able to do considerable labor up to within two or three years past, when it began again to fail, on account of senile enlargement of the prostate gland—a common disease among old men, and proving fatal sooner or later with most subjects, as after a long and tedious illness it did with him, as he sank and died of this disease Aug. 25, 1868, and was buried in the cemetery at Anamosa on the 27th inst., his funeral sermon being preached on that day by Rev. N. B. Homan, at the Baptist church in Fairview. At my father's death his age was seventy-three years ten months and nineteen days.

"He was a firm believer in the religion of Jesus Christ, and had been a member of the Baptist Church from my earliest recollection. He was strong in the faith to the end of his days on the earth."

Dr. Joslin was educated in Ohio and Michigan, and gave his attention to the study of medicine from his sixteenth year till 1833, when he entered the office of Dr H. Wright, and subsequently that of Dr. Moses Rider. He continued his studies for three years under these physicians, and commenced the practice in Michigan, where he first settled, and then in St. Joseph County, where he subsequently moved.

On leaving Michigan he came directly to Jones County, Iowa, and commenced the practice of medicine, and has continued ever since, and is now the oldest medical practitioner in the county. He has had an office in Anamosa ever since the town was laid out, and is a member of the Jones County Medical Society.

He married, first, M. L. Wolcott, of Michigan, April 25, 1837, and by her had MARY L., born Oct. 27, 1837, married C. H. Bingham, and has Ralph, Frederick and Charles.

Mrs. Joslin died, and Dr. Joslin married, secondly, Jan. 20, 1842, Elizabeth Hale, of Linn County, Iowa, and has had by her five children.

I. WILLIAM CULLEN, born Dec. 25, 1842, married Mary A. Caffrey, daughter of James Caffrey, and has two children, viz., Clark and an infant.

II. MARY ANN I., born July 20, 1845, married David Ellis, and has three children, Charles, Edwin and Emma Elizabeth.

III. JAMES M. D., born Jan. 1, 1848. He is a physician, and graduated at Keokuk from the "College of Physicians and Surgeons," in the class of 1874-5. He is a promising young man, and will no doubt meet the expectations of the community.

Dr. Joslin's two children, who died in infancy, were named, Henrietta, born Oct. 1853, and Elizabeth, born Aug. 20, 1856.

The Doctor is a quiet unassuming man, free from ostentation, social and genial in disposition, and is well worthy the esteem in which he is held by his fellow-citizens.

BARRETT WHITTEMORE was born in Fitz William, Cheshire County, New Hampshire, Feb. 26, 1806.

His grandfather was Josiah Whittemore, who married and had the following family. His wife's maiden name is not remembered.

JOSIAH WHITTEMORE and MISS —— ——, parents.

Children.

I. WILLIAM SNOW, born July 26, 1774.
II. JOHN, born Oct. 17, 1775.
III. SALMON, born July 17, 1778.
IV. MARY, born Sept. 28, 1780.
V. LUCY, born July 28, 1783.
VI. JOSIAH, born Oct. 28, 1784.
VII. LEVI, born June 12, 1786.
VIII. CEPHAS, born Dec. 2, 1787.
IX. OTIS, born Aug. 8, 1789.
X. BETSEY, born Sept. 26, 1793.
XI. CEPHAS (2d), born April 26, 1797.
XII. ZENAS, born Sept. 15, 1798.
XIII. PATTY, born April 1, 1800.
XIV. SALMNAS, born Aug. 19, 1803.

Mr. Whittemore's father was the oldest son of Josiah. He married Polly Locke. The following is his family:

WILLIAM SNOW WHITTEMORE and POLLY LOCKE, parents.

Children.

I. SOPHRONIA, born Aug. 12, 1801.
II. HARRIETT, born Oct. 31, 1802.
III. WILLIAM LOCKE, born May 15, 1804.
IV. BARRETT, born Feb. 26, 1806.
V. MARY, born April 12, 1808.
VI. REBECCA, born May 27, 1811.
VII. WILLIAM, born Jan. 14, 1814.
VIII. OTIS, born March 5, 1816.

We have inserted the above families for the purpose of preserving the record of the two previous generations, that their posterity may be able to trace their descent from them.

Mr. Whittemore, the subject of this sketch, was educated in the Common Schools of New Hampshire, attending occasionally the High School in the vicinity where he lived, which was taught by graduates of Amherst College.

He aided his father on the farm during his minority, and remained at the old homestead until he was about twenty-four years of age, and then went to Bureau County, Illinois, where he remained one year—from there to Galena, in the same state. Here he engaged in mining and smelting lead, and continued in that business until about the year 1831, when he went to Dubuque, Iowa, where he followed the same business for a while.

During his first winter in Dubuque he taught the second school ever taught in that city.

Subsequently he engaged in a saw mill near Durango, Dubuque County, where he remained till he went to Bowen's Prairie, in Jones County, in the year 1838. Here he took up about 120 acres of land, and has ever since made it his home. His first residence was a log cabin, which stood near the site of his present house.

In 1841 he opened the first school in Jones County, on Bowen's Prairie.

In 1842 he returned to his old home in New Hampshire, where he made an extended visit of about eighteen months, and then brought back his brother Otis and family, and J. H. Eaton, who settled near him, on Bowen's Prairie.

He continued teaching and farming until 1846, when he once more visited the scenes of his childhood, and the friends of former days, and was successful in persuading Miss Louisa Blodgett to return as a "help meet" to his home in the far West. In sharing his toils, in prosperity and in adversity, she has ever been the true and faithful wife.

In 1844 Mr. Whittemore was elected Clerk of the Board of County Commissioners, the duties of which office included both that of the Clerk and Auditor of the present day.

In 1858 he was elected the first County Superintendent of Schools, of Jones County, and served about two years. During the past ten years he has served the public as Justice of the Peace, Township Collector, District Secretary, etc., and, in every position, has discharged the duties of his office with fidelity and precision.

During his early settlement in this state, he aided in breaking the ground for the first capitol at Iowa City. The first election in Jones County was held in his cabin, and the whole number of votes cast for Territorial officers was eleven. He was in the Black Hawk War, and was active on the side of the Government during the exciting times of the Rebellion.

It would be easy to fill a volume, detailing the incidents of the life of Mr. W., but our space will not admit of a more extended notice. For the past fifty years he has served the rising generation as a teacher, and, at the age of sixty-nine, his school last winter was a success.

Mr. Whittemore is a good writer, and his sketches of the early settlement of Bowen's Prairie, etc., published in the Monticello Express, a few years ago, were read by the people of the county with increasing interest.

Honorable J. C. TRALT.—This gentleman, who is the oldest living settler now residing in Vinton, is a native of Knox County, Ohio, where he was born September 7, 1825. His early education was received on a farm and at the district school until he was sixteen years of age, when he was apprenticed, and served three years and six months at the tanning and currying business. He removed to Iowa in November, 1845, settling near West Liberty, in Muscatine County, where he remained most of the time until March, 1848, when he removed to Cedar Rapids, and read medicine for two years with Dr. M. Merrith; and was married, November 4, 1849, to Miss Marcia W. Ferguson. In August, 1851, he settled in Vinton, where, for a number of years, he practiced medicine, in connection with various other business enterprises. In February, 1856, with other parties, he established the first banking house ever opened in Vinton, which he has since managed and is still carrying on in connection with his brother, Honorable J. W. Tratt. Politically, he was an old-time Whig; opposed to the adoption of the Constitution of 1846; assisted in the organization of the Republican party in 1856, and has ever since been an active Republican. Was elected Clerk of the District Court in 1852, and served two years; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1857; admitted to the bar in 1858; and elected Mayor of the City of Vinton in 1871, and re-elected in 1872.

WILLIAM H. HARTMAN.—There are but few newspaper men in the state who have so long and faithfully occupied one editorial chair as has William H. Hartman, the founder and one of the present editors and proprietors of the Waterloo Courier. He is a native Pennsylvanian, having been born at Allentown, in that state, August 27, 1838. When he was two years of age his parents removed to Tiffin, Ohio, where he lived until he was fourteen, receiving what educational advantages the common schools of Ohio afforded at that time. In 1850 he came to Iowa with his parents, who located at Anamosa. Soon after they arrived in Iowa, the Anamosa News, the first paper ever published in Jones County, was established, and young William was employed as junior devil, rolling the first edition ever published in that county. He remained in that office for several years, and then, starting on a tramp, he worked in Delhi, Dubuque, Tiffin (Ohio), and other places, arriving at Waterloo in March, 1858, finding employment for the first four or five months in the office of the Iowa State Register and Waterloo Herald. He then went to Cedar Falls, and attempted to instil new life into the Banner, which had previously suspended. After working hard for several months, he became convinced that it was not a paying institution, and in company with George D. Ingersoll purchased the office, removed it to Waterloo, and, January 18, 1859, issued the first number of the Waterloo Courier, which, after passing through many struggles in its early existence, has now become one of the best paying newspaper offices in the interior of the state, and is blessed with a liberal and constantly increasing patronage.

Politically, Mr. Hartman has always been an earnest, able defender of the Republican party and its principles, personally and through the columns of the Courier rendering material aid to the party in the county. In March, 1873, he was appointed and commissioned postmaster at Waterloo, and has since performed the duties of that responsible office to the general satisfaction of the public, not excepting those on the east side, who were bitterly opposed to his appointment.

W. S. BOYD, M.D.—A little more than twenty one years ago the subject of this sketch, Dr. W. S. Boyd, then a young, well read and enthusiastic physician, came to Vinton and tendered his services as a medical man to the citizens of that community. He had at that time been practicing his chosen profession nearly five years, being a native of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, where he was born June 20, 1814. Being raised on a farm in a sparsely settled portion of the state, his early advantages for receiving an education were none of the best, his instructions being limited to the commoner English branches. At twenty he entered the Washington Academy, and remained two years, making the best possible use of the time and opportunities thus afforded him. He studied medicine for three years and six months with Dr. Thomas Brinker, at Pleasant Unity, Pennsylvania, and then attended three courses of lectures at the Cleveland (Ohio) Medical School, graduating in the Spring of 1840. He then opened an office and commenced the medical practice at West Salem, Wayne County, Ohio, where he remained until the Fall of 1851, when he located at Vinton, Iowa, and was the first regularly educated physician that settled in Benton County. Since his residence in Iowa he has had a large and extensive practice, meeting with uniformly good success, and doing a large amount of charity work. He has performed many difficult surgical operations, which entitle him to the reputation he has well earned, of being a bold, skillful and successful operator.

Dr. Boyd has been married three times, his first wife living only about one month after they were married. He has four children living, his oldest son being married and practicing medicine in Clinton County, Iowa, where he is gaining quite a reputation in his profession

ANDREW J. FELT, editor of the Waterloo Courier, was born December 27, 1833, at Victor, Ontario County, New York. Attended common school until he was fifteen, when he entered Hamilton Academy, which he attended summers, teaching during the winter. When eighteen, commenced reading law at Rochester, New York, and afterwards read with Judge Alfred Nichols, of Madison County. Arrived in Iowa October 10, 1855, with three dollars in money, and taught a four months' school, in Clayton County, that Winter, for fifty dollars. Clerked in a store during the next Summer, and in the Fall entered the office of the North Iowa Times, at McGregor. In May, 1857, established the Cedar Valley News, at Bradford. In June, 1858, was admitted to the bar, and practiced law for about two years. During the Lincoln and Douglas campaign in 1860, he was associate editor of the McGregor Times; and in June, 1861, enlisted as a private in Company B, 7th Iowa Infantry Volunteers; was captured at Belmont, Missouri, November 7, 1861, and remained a prisoner within the rebel lines eleven months and twenty days, enduring privations and hardships from which he will never fully recover. He was paroled, and taken from Libby Prison Hospital to the Navy Hospital at Annapolis, where he remained under the surgeon's care until the Spring of 1863, when he returned to the regiment, at Corinth, Missouri. Was appointed a sergeant, and soon after discharged for disability.

In 1864 he established the Public Record, at West Union, which he sold in the Spring of 1866. In May, 1867, he founded the Nashua Post, which he disposed of in February, 1874, and purchased a half interest in the Waterloo Courier, which paper he has since ably conducted.

HIRAM. H. HUNT, M.D.—Among the medical men who are now dispensing relief and comfort to afflicted humanity in Buchanan County, there are none who, by long practice, have so thoroughly identified themselves with the people as the subject of this imperfect sketch.—Dr. Hiram H. Hunt, who for nearly a quarter of a century has untiringly devoted the best energies of his life to the practice of the healing art, enduring the storms and rigors of an extreme climate, and all the privations and hardships of frontier life. Reared in the less severe and more indulgent climate of Maryland, in the grand old City of Baltimore, where he was born on Independence Day, 1823, he has never shrunk from the severe hardships and privations incident to the practice of his chosen profession in a new country, where the Storm King of Winter sweeps the unobstructed prairie with terrific grandeur. His father, Rev. John N. Hunt, was a Baptist clergyman, who, though in comfortable circumstances, could not afford young Hiram many of the luxuries enjoyed by the more fortunate city-bred youths. He remained in Baltimore, attending public school most of the time, until he was thirteen years of age, when he removed with his parents to Belmont County, Ohio, where he made his home till 1853, when he removed to Iowa. After locating in Ohio, he entered ——— Seminary, then under charge of Professor N. R. Smith, where he remained for several years completing his academic education and supporting himself, aside from the little voluntary aid tendered him by friends. He read medicine in the office of Dr. John T. Mackle, at Barnesville, Ohio, completing his studies and entering into practice in 1848. As he was about leaving for the West, in 1853, he received, without solicitation, from his preceptor and other eminent medical men of his acquaintance, highly flattering certificates of character and professional ability.

He landed at Independence, Iowa, October 22, 1853, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession, soon securing, by his success and skillful management of difficult cases, an excellent reputation and a large practice, which he has continuously held up to the present time, excepting the three years he was in the Union army. At some seasons he has been compelled to ride night and day, requiring seven horses to do his work, always doing a large amount of charity practice, to which he gave the same care and attention as to his wealthiest and best paying patients.

Being a strong Republican and an earnest supporter of the Government, he did not wait for a commission or an advantageous appointment, but as soon as he could arrange his business, so as to leave without pecuniary loss, enlisted as a private soldier, August 15, 1862, in Company H, 27th Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers. He was soon detached as hospital steward, in which capacity he served for some eight months, when he was—June 6, 1863—appointed and commissioned Assistant Surgeon of the 21st Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers. He remained with this regiment until the close of the war, and was mustered out with them at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, July 15, 1865, having been promoted to Surgeon of the regiment a short time before. He served mostly in the Department of the Gulf, seeing all kinds of duty, in hospital, field and campaign, rendering efficient service and acquiring an experience in surgery and other difficult practice that has been of great benefit to him in later years.

An earnest, enthusiastic Republican, Dr. Hunt has never sought—in fact, has ever refused—political office, never holding any but that of coroner, which he has acceptably filled most of the time for the last fifteen years.

He was married, December 9, 1852, at Brainerd's Mill, Ohio, to Miss Almira Salters, by whom he has had seven children, only four of whom are living. The oldest daughter is married.

MATT. PARROTT.—Among the various legitimate and necessary callings of life, there are perhaps none more exacting and thankless than that of the country editor, or newspaper man. His duties are exhaustive, irritating, and never ending, while he is, in a measure, subject to the humors and caprices of a changing and fickle minded public, expected at all times to have a pleasant word and smile with which to accompany the matured opinion he may at any moment be expected to give concerning law, politics, religion, or metaphysics. As a good example of this class of men, may be mentioned Matt. Parrott, the able and accomplished editor of the Iowa State Reporter, who was by birth a New York Yankee, being a native of Schoharie, Schoharie County, in that state, where he was born May 11, 1837. His childhood was passed like that of many others, not being marked by any peculiar circumstances worthy of mention. Educated mostly at the common school and academy in his native village, the last of which he attended some two years, at the age of thirteen he entered the office of the Schoharie Patriot, where he remained one year, making unusually rapid progress in acquiring a knowledge of the printing art. At the end of the year his father took him out of the printing office and sent him back to the academy, intending to fit him for the legal profession, but young Matt having become infatuated with the printing business, made such slow progress, that at the end of one term his father reluctantly consented that he should abandon school and again enter the printing office, since which time he has supported himself entirely by his own exertions. He remained in the Patriot office some two and a half years, when in the Spring of 1854 he went to Troy and worked for a few months on the Troy Tribune, but soon returning to Schoharie, found employment in the Republican office, where he remained until the Spring of 1855, when he went to Utica and held a case on the Morning Herald for one year. In August, 1856, he started for the West, working for a few weeks in Chicago, when he came to Iowa and commenced work in the office of the Davenport Daily News. The following Spring he went to Burlington, and secured a position in the office of the Daily Hawk-Eye, where he remained until December, 1857, when he came to Anamosa, the county seat of Jones County, and entering into partnership with C. L. D. Crockwell, began the publication of the Anamosa Eureka, which is still published, and is the oldest and best paper in the county. In March or April, 1863, he was persuaded by the flattering inducements offered him by the Republicans in Grundy County, Illinois, to sell his interest in the Eureka, and establish the Advocate at Morris, in that county. After running it for some three months, and failing to receive the promised support and encouragement, he discontinued its publication, and returning to Davenport, worked during the summer on the Rock Island Daily Union. The following Fall he secured the position of foreman in the large job and publishing establishment of Luce, Lane & Co., where he remained until February, 1869, when, with Honorable J. J. Smart, he purchased the Iowa State Reporter establishment, at Waterloo, of which paper he has since, most of the time, had charge. Improvements and additions have been made to the office from time to time, so that now the Reporter has one of the best, most complete and desirable newspaper and job offices in Central Iowa, having a good bindery, and occupying a large and commodious building, erected especially for its accommodation. It is a handsome, six column, quarto sheet, ably edited, and admirably managed and arranged, presenting the neatest and best typographical appearance of any paper in the state.

As a newspaper man, Mr. Parrott is thoroughly competent in all branches of the profession, having filled every position, from that of office boy and "junior sub.," to foreman and editor-in-chief. He is a good writer, has marked ability, and with his large experience possesses great advantages in making up the various contents of a readable weekly newspaper, such as the Iowa State Reporter has the reputation of being.

Honorable E. MATT. STEDMAN.—Among the young men of Vinton who may be classed as early settlers, there are none more deserving of mention in the Historical Atlas of Iowa than Honorable E. Matt. Stedman, who represented his county in the House of Representatives of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth General Assembly of Iowa. He is a Buckeye by birth and education, being a native of Chester, Meigs County, Ohio, where he was born March 2, 1838. His ancestors were among the early settlers of Ohio, his grandfather, Rev. Eli Stedman, having removed there soon after the organization of that state. On his mother's side he is a direct descendant of General Yates of Revolutionary fame. The rudiments of his education were received at district and select schools, which he regularly attended until he was fifteen, when he commenced a regular course of study at Marietta College, but on account of the death of his mother and some unfortunate business matters, he was compelled to abandon it in order to earn means for his own support and future education. He afterwards attended the Ohio University at Athens, where he remained until the close of the Fall term of 1854, where he secured a school, and taught one term, closing in March, 1855. Immediately after closing his school he removed to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he remained variously employed until the Fall of 1856, when he came to Vinton and secured a clerkship with Olmsted & Vanhorn, with whom he remained some four years, when the firm failed and he was employed by the assignee to close out the business. In March, 1860, he bought a small stock of groceries and commenced business for himself, with a cash capital of $250. By working hard and attending close to business, has succeeded far beyond his expectation, his sales frequently reaching above $50,000 per annum. Having been so long a resident of Benton County, and by his fair dealing and close attention to business, secured such a large circle of friends and acquaintances, he was urged in the Summer of 1871 to become a candidate for Representative upon the Republican ticket, and was nominated and elected by the popular vote. Upon taking his seat in the House, he conducted himself in such a manner as to receive the warmest commendations from the leading members of that body; secured without a dissenting voice an appropriation of $70,000 for the enlargement of the Iowa College for the Blind, situated at Vinton, and made a large number of warm friends among the leading men of the state. He was re-elected in 1873, by an increased majority, and refused to be a candidate for re-election in 1875.

Mr. Stedman has been married twice; first, December 15, 1859, to Miss Eva A. Hoke, who died in August, 1864, leaving one son. He was again married December 25, 1865, to Mrs. Julia McLaughlin, a resident of Meigs County, Ohio, and a playmate of his childhood.

Honorable D. D. HOLDRIDGE.—Among the younger men who have during the last few years taken a somewhat prominent part in the political and business interests of Independence and Buchanan County, may be mentioned Honorable D. D. Holdridge, who is a New Yorker by birth and education, being a native of Nelson, Madison County, where he was born September 3, 1838. Young Eldridge's early life was passed like a majority of the sons of well-to-do eastern people, by first attending the common school, then the Academy, and finally entering Onida Conference Seminary, at Cazenovia, New York, where he pursued the regular course, graduating in 1857, when in his twenty-first year. The following Spring he entered the law office of Honorable D. W. Cameron, as a student, where he remained two years, when he attended a full course of law lectures and examinations at the Albany Law School, at the completion of which he received the degree of D.D.B., as a member of the graduating class of 1860, and was immediately admitted to practice by the Supreme Court of the State of New York. Instead of at once entering upon his professional life, he returned to Cazenovia, and was persuaded to take charge of the Union Schools in that city, which he conducted in a very satisfactory manner during 1861.

Finding that most of the desirable eastern towns were overstocked with the legal profession, he determined to seek a home and a fortune in the West. Reluctantly leaving the scenes of his youthful joys and aspirations, he landed in Independence, Iowa, in March, 1862, and being well pleased with the place, he decided to hang out his shingle and begin the earnest practice of his chosen profession. He soon secured a good business, and by his honest, straightforward manner of proceeding, made many warm and firm friends. In about eighteen months after arriving in the state he was nominated for and elected to the Lower House of the Iowa General Assembly, in which body he served, during the session of 1864, as a member of the judiciary and other important committees, making many friends among the able and leading men of the state. After returning home in the Spring of 1864, he received the appointment of Quartermaster of the 46th Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, with the rank of first lieutenant, which he accepted, and served with the regiment till the close of the war, when he was mustered out, and returning home has since applied himself closely to the practice of his profession.

In the Fall of 1874 he was brought forward by his friends in Buchanan County as the Liberal candidate for Congressional honors in the Third District, and received the hearty and enthusiastic support of his own county and a large number of votes from the adjoining ones, but failing to secure enough to obtain the nomination, he at once went to work for his more fortunate competitor, and rendered material aid by his influence and judicious campaign work in securing his election, as the only opposition member from Iowa. Although his adopted city, Independence, is strongly Republican, Mr. Holdridge was elected Mayor in March, 1875, in opposition to a regular Republican nominee, leading his own ticket about one hundred votes; showing that, although acting with the minority, he has many warm friends in the Republican party.

He was married at Cazenovia, New York, March 16, 1859, to Miss Louisa A. Loomis, which union has been blessed with four children.

Reverend JOHN L. GOSKER was born on the 18th day of July, 1833, at Groninger, Holland, where his boyhood and youth were spent in attending the common school of his native country, and in assisting his father who was engaged in the mercantile business. He however received much of his early education from private tutors, who instructed him in the rudiments of the ancient and modern languages, for which he early developed a peculiar taste, and in which he made rapid progress. He commenced studying the English language when he was twelve years old, and had made himself thorough master of it long before emigrating to this country, which he did when twenty-two years of age. He entered the University of Groninger and pursued his studies for some time, when his mother needing his services, as she was carrying on the mercantile business, his father having died some time previous, he left school, and devoted himself with the characteristic energy which has marked his whole life, to the management of his mother's establishment, which he carried on with success until 1855, when he disposed of it, and moved with his mother to this country, and located at Keokuk in this state. Here he was engaged a portion of the time in mercantile pursuits, but devoting considerable time to reading and study.

While crossing the Atlantic, he first thought of entering the priesthood of the Catholic Church, and after remaining at Keokuk about one year, fully determined to do so. In order to fit himself for the life work he had chosen, he removed to Bardstown, Kentucky, and entered the St. Thomas Seminary, where he remained three years, completing his study of the languages, and thoroughly mastering the ancient classics, and rendering himself more familiar with the English, French, Belgian and German languages, all four of which, with his native tongue he now speaks with fluency. Having completed his clasical studies, he entered the St. Vincent Theological Seminary, at Cape Girardeau, Missouri, where he remained three years.

He was ordained at Dubuque, Iowa, by Bishop Smith, on the 24th day of November, 1862, and came to Independence the 18th of the following December, and immediately took charge of the Catholic Churches in the Counties of Buchanan, Delaware, parts of Fayette, Bremer, Black Hawk and Butler, his duties often calling him outside of these counties, as far north as the Minnesota line, and west as Iowa Falls. The field of labor he occupied was large, the membership of the church scattered, without organization, rendering the duty devolving upon him one not easy of performance, and requiring great energy and ability to execute with success. That he possesses these qualifications in an eminent degree, it is only necessary to state, that in the territory placed under his control, he has organized and built eight churches, five of the number he erected without outside aid, besides established the Convent of Notre Dame, and the St. John's Parish School, both of which have been under his immediate charge. Although Mr. Gosker is an enthusiastic and earnest believer in the Catholic Church, he is not a bigoted zealot, but stands upon the broad platform of American individuality, conceding to every man the right to hold and maintain his own opinions, so long as they do not interfere with the rights of others. He is an earnest worker in the church, and a strong advocate for Catholic schools for Catholic children, as he says, "believing that it is the true church, the children should be educated in it."

JOHN R. CAMERON one of the pioneer settlers of Black Hawk County, and now a resident of Cedar Falls, Iowa, was born in Clark County, Ohio, on the 25th day of February, 1829 where his life was spent until he was seventeen years of age. His education was received on the farm, and at the common district school, which he regularly attended during a few months each winter, until the Spring of 1846, when, receiving his father's consent, he left the paternal roof, bade farewell to the scenes and associations of his childhood, and started out to seek his fortune alone and unaided in the world. In June of that year he entered the drug store of his uncle, R. H. McCall, at Canton, Ohio, as a clerk, where he remained actively engaged for nearly a year, when his uncle fitted him out with a large four-horse wholesale drug and yankee notion wagon, with which he made regular trips over that portion of the state, building up a large trade. When twenty years of age he left his uncle's employ and entered that of Joseph Cracraft, of Poland, Ohio, running a yankee notion wagon for him through the western portion of Pennsylvania. This he followed for about one year, when becoming dissatisfied he determined to seek a home in the then far distant West. Taking what money he had been able to accumulate, about eight hundred dollars in gold, he started for Iowa, and landed at Vinton, Benton County, on the 4th day of December, 1851. Here he remained during the most of the Winter, purchased some lots, and made several exploring expeditions with the view of finding an eligable place to locate. Having been attracted by the beauty of the country, the richness and fertility of the soil, and the magnificent water-power, he came to Cedar Falls in the following May, purchased a full block on Main Street, which is now covered with fine buildings, and entered a half section of land in the immediate neighborhood. He was the first purchaser of town lots sold for cash in Cedar Falls, or in fact in the county. In the Spring of 1853 he built the first frame store ever erected in the county, assisted to plant corn on the present site of the residence portion of the now beautiful City of Cedar Falls. The same Spring he bought a breaking outfit, commenced improving his land, and did some breaking for others. Since then scarcely a season has passed in which he has not been more or less engaged in improving wild lands. In 1854, he secured a license and constructed the first ferry across the river at Cedar Falls, which he operated until a short time before the building of the bridge in 1858. In the Spring of 1863, he opened a real estate office and successfully carried on a large business, selling an immense amount of land in Black Hawk and the adjoining counties. He closed up this business in 1869 or 1870, and has since devoted himself entirely to agricultural pursuits, constantly opening new farms, and carrying on old ones. He is now operating five improved farms, and fencing and breaking a large tract of wild land in Cerro Gordo County.

Mr. Cameron was elected in 1853, the first assessor for this portion of the county, and in 1857, was a Member of the first City Council for the City of Cedar Falls. He is a large-hearted, generous, truly public spirited man, and has often done more than he was able in encouraging improvements and advancing the general interests of his adopted town. He was one of the original projectors of, and a director in the C. F. & M. R.R., and contributed liberally in time and money to advance its interests. He also aided the Iowa Central project, and assisted in securing the completion of the B. C. R. & M. R.R. Schools, churches, and all other public enterprises that give reasonable promise of success, never fail of receiving such encouragement and support from him as their merits deserve.

In politics Mr. C. has always been a Democrat, from principle, though he is no politician, and has never taken part in the personal strife and vituperations so common during political campaigns. He was married at Cedar Falls, on the 15th day of April, 1856, to Miss Mary E. Knapp, daughter of Rev. Solomon Knapp, of Illinois, by whom he has had seven children, all now living.

JOHN PORTER.—The subject of this brief sketch, was born May 14, 1822, near Colchester, Vermont, at a point on Lake Champlain called "Porter's Point," where his childhood and youth were spent. He received a limited common school education, and was by his own choice apprenticed when quite young to the carpenter's trade. As soon as he had mastered that he commenced work for himself, running for some time a sash and door factory in his native state. He removed to Chicago, in 1844, when that Garden City of the Lake was a small village, and worked at his trade in connection with the saw mill and lumbering business, running the first patent bevel siding machine ever in that city.

He was married July 4, 1846, to Miss A. Boomer, at Amesville, Illinois, now Garden Prairie, where he embarked in the mercantile business and remained about one year; when he returned to Chicago and engaged extensively in erecting business houses and dwellings, which he readily sold at a large advance above cost. From Chicago he went to Waukegan, Illinois, and remained some four years, employed mostly in the same business, when he located at Bellevue, Iowa, in the boot and shoe trade, and after remaining about one year, sold out and removed to Delhi, Delaware County, Iowa, where he still resides. Here he put up several fine buildings, and successfully carried on an extensive real estate business, until the financial crash of 1857, when he was carried down, having endorsed a large amount of paper for other parties, and had nothing left but twenty-three hundred acres of wild land, which it was impossible to dispose of, or even give away. During 1856, and a part of 1857, he owned and managed a large agricultural implement store in Dubuque.

His health having been greatly impaired by constant and close application to business, he determined to turn his energies to the more quiet and congenial occupation of nurseryman. For a time he cultivated fruit trees chiefly, but his taste soon led him to drop that part of the business, and devote himself exclusively to raising evergreens and ornamental trees, which branch he has since carried on with marked success. He now has forty acres of choice land lying contiguous to Delhi, which exhibits a high order of taste, skill and care. Fourteen acres of this he has devoted to ornamental purposes, and has a plan that he is carrying out year by year, which will, when completed, render his place, already one of the finest in the state, beautiful in the highest degree. His evergreens are unequaled in Iowa, while his grounds exhibit originality of thought, taste, and perfection of execution, seldom found even in large cities. His design embraces a pleasant game and driving park, with an artificial lake, that for beauty and utility of design is a perfect gem, set in the midst of a smoothly shaven lawn, and shaded by the rich dark foliage of evergreens, among which are rustic seats, croquet grounds and rare and curious specimens gathered from all parts of the Northwest.

SAMPSON C. BEVER was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, in the year 1808. His paternal grandfather was a native of Germany, but emigrated to this country in the year 1777, joined the Revolutionary Army, as a private at Morristown, New Jersey, under General Washington. His maternal grandfather was a native of Scotland and emigrated to America during the Revolutionary War, locating in Washington County, Pennsylvania. His father, James Bever was a small farmer on the banks of the Ohio River, at the time of Sampson's birth, but in 1809 he moved west to the "New Purchase," in what is now known as Holmes County, Ohio, where he died in 1811. Sampson never saw the inside of a school-house until he was nine years of age. When fifteen years of age he left home and went to Brownsville, Pennsylvania, going the entire distance, one hundred and fifty miles, on foot, where he engaged in a store for five years. At the expiration of this time he engaged to take charge of the Glass Works of Bowman, Sweetzer & Bowman, one mile from Brownsville. He shortly afterwards bought out the firm's interest, they giving all the time he wanted to pay them. He however by hard work, perseverance and energy, at the end of two years paid off all his indebtedness to them, and had a good profit.

On the 8th day of August, 1833, Mr. Bever was married to Miss Mary Blythe, daughter of John Blythe, Esquire, a farmer near Cookstown, Pennsylvania.

At this time being convinced that the war carried on between Andrew Jackson and the United States Bank must bring about a financial crisis, sold out his glass works. In the Fall of 1836, he formed a co-partnership with G. H. Bowman, one of his old employees, and engaged in merchandising in Coshocton, Ohio, where he remained for ten years. Closing up the partnership business, he removed to Millersburg, where he again engaged in merchandise successfully for six years. Having sold out all his possessions there, on the 1st of April, 1851, he started in his own private conveyance in search of a new home in the West. After wandering over several Western States he, selected Cedar Rapids, Linn County, Iowa, as his resting place Here he bought several large tracts of land in the vicinity of the town, and returning to Ohio, removed with his family on the 1st of March, 1852, to his new possessions. In the Fall of the same year he again embarked in the mercantile business in Cedar Rapids, in which he continued for seven years. During this time he became identified with the construction of the Chicago, Iowa & Nebraska Railroad, the first successful railroad enterprise in Iowa, and with which he is still identified as a director. In 1859 he disposed of his merchandise, and engaged in private banking with his oldest son, James L. Bever, under the firm name of S. C. Bever & Son. On the passage of the National Banking Law the bank of S. C. Bever & Son was merged into the City National Bank of Cedar Rapids. Mr. Bever has made many valuable contributions to the permanent growth and prosperity of Cedar Rapids, and is now enjoying the fruits of a long life of business activity and solid prosperity, blessed with a green old age, the companionship of the wife of his youth, and surrounded by his sons, daughters and grandchildren. His life has been a busy but successful one.

Colonel JOHN H. PETERS.—Like most of the enterprising and successful men who, by their nevertiring industry and thrift, have transformed the wild beauties of the western prairies and forests into the most wealthy and attractive portion of our country, the subject of this sketch was born and reared amid the barren rocks and dashing streams of New England. His natal day was the 2d of February, 1829; and his birthplace Litchfield County, Connecticut. His early education was received at the district school and academy of his native village, and completed at Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, where he also received the rudiments of a military education, which proved of great service to him in after life. Soon after leaving college he entered the office of Hon. Truman Smith, since United States senator from that state, where he remained as a law student until 1852, when he removed to Freeport, Illinois, and was soon after admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of that state, at Springfield, by examination. After remaining here about one year, he removed to Delhi, the county seat of Delaware County, Iowa, and immediately commenced the practice of his profession, showing marked ability and energy, and, although a young man, soon took a prominent position among the leading members of the bar of Northern Iowa. Such was his reputation as a clear thinker and able lawyer, both at home and abroad, that in 1856, when only twenty-seven years of age, he was elected to the responsible position of delegate to the Constitutional Convention, and took an active part in framing the present Constitution of the State of Iowa.

In August, 1861, when the late War of the Rebellion had assumed such gigantic proportions as to awaken in the breast of every loyal man a desire to aid our country in its hour of peril, he raised a company in Delaware County, and with it joined his fortunes with the 4th Iowa Cavalry. Here his early military education proved of great value, as, being well versed in the tactics of this branch of the service, he immediately went to work with his usual intense energy, training and drilling the sturdy farmer boys who composed the regiment, into soldiers. He refused to have his men mustered into the state service; and plainly informed all who seemed to hesitate, that if they desired to return home and withstand the taunts and jeers of their neighbors and friends, they were at liberty to do so. Quite a number took advantage of the proposition, and the result was that Captain Peters soon commanded one of the finest and best drilled companies of cavalry that entered our army from the Northwest.

As a brilliant, dashing and successful cavalry officer, Colonel Peters had few if any superiors in the Western army, and successfully led many a perilous expedition which, though necessary, required an officer possessing cool judgment, bravery and indomitable pluck to execute. A universal favorite among his associates and companions in arms, he was nevertheless often considered reckless and foolhardy, although he never failed to prove by his oft-repeated successes that he was led by judgment rather than impulse. Such was his popularity with the soldiers of the command, that he could always secure more volunteers than he wished to accompany him on any extra hazardous expedition, no matter how dangerous or hopeless it might seem.

Among the numerous incidents of the war which deserve a place in the history of our nation, and in which Colonel Peters took an active part, is the following:

The Federal lines, under command of General U. S. Grant, were thrown around the rear of Vicksburg on the 18th day of May, 1863, and on that evening he found himself in command of about sixty thousand men,—in reality cut off from supplies, and his rations almost exhausted. The fortifications of Haines' and Snyder's Bluffs on the Yazoo River effectually cut off all communication between the right flank and the supply boats on the Mississippi, consequently the only way remaining to secure supplies must be by land transportation for some nine miles on the Louisiana side of the river, then transferring across to the left flank, near Warrington, where General Price and his army occupied a position on the west side of the river, rendering this land transportation exceedingly difficult and altogether impracticable. On the evening of the 18th of May, General Grant held a consultation with his officers, and determined to send the cavalry to reconnoitre in the direction of Haines' and Snyder's Bluffs, and if possible open communication with the gunboats on the Yazoo River. The 4th Iowa, being the only full regiment of cavalry in the command, was ordered on this expedition, and started early on the morning of the 19th, but moved very slowly, as they were constantly picking up the foot-sore and disabled soldiers of the rebel army that had escaped from the battle fields of Champion Hill and Black River Bridges; and by two o'clock P.M. they had only made about twelve miles, reaching a point where the Brownsville road crossed the one on which the column was marching. The reports received from captured soldiers and negroes, placed a command of some four thousand rebels a short distance up the Brownsville road, and estimated the garrison at Snyder's Bluff as four thousand more, which would make it extremely hazardous for a small command to cross the Brownsville road. At this juncture Colonel Swan, commanding the regiment, hastily called a consultation of officers, and after fully discussing the situation, it was unanimously voted to return. Seeing the regiment reversed and marching back was the first intimation Captain Peters received of the determination to return, as he had been momentarily absent from the command. He immediately hastened to Colonel Swan, and endeavored to dissuade him, justly arguing that they could not return and make a satisfactory report, without at least attempting to execute the instructions. Finding he could not change the colonel's determination, he offered, and persistently urged, to be allowed to take his old company and make an attempt to look into the Rebel fortifications. His offer was at first refused, and the proposition looked upon as wildly desperate and reckless; but after moving back for a mile or two the colonel finally consented, agreeing to throw his regiment into line, await his return, and render what assistance the occasion might require. Captain Peters then rode to Company "B" and called for volunteers, when the whole company, to a man, turned out. He then made his selections, taking only such horses as in his judgment would carry their riders ten miles at a fast gait, and found but twenty-three men, his two lieutenants and Lieutenant S. P. Kelly, of Company "A," who volunteered to take his place in the ranks and accompany the expedition. They started at the gallop, and in twenty minutes came upon a convalescent camp, containing some two or three hundred Rebel soldiers. The surrender and acceptance of this force was made without halting the column. They next surprised and captured an Irishman, in citizen's dress and well mounted. The captain charged him with being a Rebel soldier and belonging to the fortifications, and offered him his liberty and a free pass to St. Louis if he would conduct him into the fortifications by a route that would avoid the Rebel pickets. This proposition was accepted, and as the column had all the time been riding at a fast gallop they were soon at the foot of Snyder's Bluff. The guide here pointed out a by-path, through the brush and timber, capable of the passage of troops in single file. Entering this path, the guide taking the lead, the party soon arrived at the top of the bluff, and came out upon a broad military road leading into the fortifications. Here the guide claimed his reward, and was placed in the rear, under guard. As the men came out upon the road they formed in a column of fours, and at a sharp gallop turned the corner leading into the fortifications, sloping from their feet gradually down to the Yazoo River. The guard left by the evacuating Rebels endeavored hastily to form a line across the road, but the column of cavalry swung into platoons, charged down upon them so suddenly that not a single shot was fired, and in an instant threw down their arms and surrendered. The cavalrymen were immediately dismounted and dispersed in every direction, in squads of threes and fours, so that in less than thirty minutes the whole rear guard of evacuating Rebel forces were moving, disarmed, towards the landing on the Yazoo River. An unsuccessful attempt was then made to signal the gunboat "De Kalb," lying some four miles down the river. After a few moments, Captain Peters ordered Lieutenant Clark and two men to go down the river and communicate with the gunboat, and, directing Lieutenant Parsons to look after the prisoners, he took three men and started for Haines' Bluff, situated some three miles up the river. Here he found no troops, and after counting the guns and making general observations until dark, he returned to the landing at Snyder's Bluff. The gunboat De Kalb had arrived, the prisoners were received on board, the cavalrymen were eating their supper, the first "square meal" for fourteen days. Against his desire and protestation, Captain Peters was taken from the saddle and carried to the officers' deck, where a sumptuous repast was awaiting. After eating supper—in regular gunboat style—and directing an orderly boat to communicate the capture to the transports on the Mississippi, he and his men remounted and started back to join their command. The rode rapidly until reaching the place where they had left the regiment a few hours before, but found it gone. They then took the walk, and moving back arrived at two o'clock A. M. at the camp they had left the previous morning. Here he learned that Colonel Swan had reported to General Grant the failure of his expedition, and that Captain Peters and his small command had been either killed or captured. He immediately mounted a fresh horse, rode to General Grant's head-quarters, and, calling the general up, reported the true state of things, and by daylight in the morning the mule-teams were bringing army stores from the Chickasaw bayou to feed the sixty thousand hungry soldiers.

Judge of the surprise of Captain Peters and those engaged with him on this expedition, to read, a week or ten days later, in the St. Louis Democrat, the report of Rear-Admiral Porter, occupying several columns of that paper, in describing the capture of Haines' and Snyder's Bluffs by the "Mississippi flotilla, under Acting Rear-Admiral Porter." This unjust claim of Admiral Porter has since caused considerable ill feeling on the part of General Grant and other officers, as well as to call forth many severe criticisms through the press.

Immediately after the siege of Vicksburg, the Governor of Iowa promoted Captain Peters to the rank of major; but as he had already been acting in that capacity, and a higher one, most of the time since his enlistment, and as the Governor had, on account of his democratic proclivities, previously prevented his promotion when urged by nearly every officer and man in the regiment, and by a large delegation of friends at home,—he refused to accept, and returned the commission to the Governor. He was subsequently commissioned lieutenant-colonel, which he also at first refused, but finally yielding to the wishes of his friends, was mustered in that rank in October, 1863. He was engaged in the battles of Jackson, Canton, Cold Water, Lupelo, Old Town Creek, and many other minor engagements, rendering valuable service to his country. In the first Sturgis expedition from Memphis, in May, 1864, he led his brigade in advance during nearly the whole expedition, and with it alone drove General Price's forces from Boliver, before General Sturgis knew that his advance was engaged. With his regiment alone he gained a signal victory over the entire brigade of Rebels near Montebello, Georgia, on the 31st day of March, 1865, and on the following day took part in the battle of Ebenezer Church, and the next day led the charging column into the City of Selma, Alabama. He participated in the conference held over the surrender of the City of Montgomery, and took a prominent part in the capture of Columbus, Georgia, which battle was fought on the evening of the 16th day of April, 1865, and was the last engagement of the war.

Soon after peace was restored Colonel Peters removed to Memphis, Tennessee, where he entered the practice of his profession, and in a short space of time secured a very large and lucrative practice, but owing to the entire failure of his health he was compelled to abandon it and return to Delhi, where he soon recovered both health and practice, and still enjoys a large business and the reputation of being one of the best lawyers in the district. He is a public-spirited man, always ready to assist with time and money any enterprise that promises to be of advantage to his town and county. The Davenport & St. Paul Railroad, running through Delaware County, is an enterprise of which he may be said to be the father, as its successful completion is due more to his energy, judgment and perseverance than to any other one cause.

SAMUEL SHERWOOD, ESQ.—This gentleman, who is one of the earliest settlers of Independence, where he has resided for nearly thirty years, and who was formerly known throughout Northern Iowa, as one of the most accomplished practical jokers in the West, is a native of the Green Mountain State, where he was born in the Town of Fairfield, October 18, 1820, which makes him at the present time in the fifty-sixth year of his age. The incidents of his childhood did not differ materially from those of many other active, wide-awake Yankee boys whose after lives have fully sustained the peculiar traits of character for which the descendants of New England have become somewhat notorious. His education was received at the common district school in his native village, which he attended a portion of the time after he was seven until he became of age, receiving, as he says of himself, "more marks of honor and appreciation from his teachers than any other boy in school," as he was very often allowed to occupy that conspicuous seat known as the "dunce block." He also claims to have made more rapid progress in mechanics than his associates, owing to the fact that he was more familiar with, and better understood the practical working of the master's "experimental rule," which was thoroughly calculated to sharpen his ideas in circular work, obtuse angles, etc., as well as to give him a practical knowledge of the power of the lever, and the necessity of avoiding unnecessary friction.

When he was twenty-one he determined to make a practical use of his mechanical turn of mind, and commenced learning the millwright's trade, putting himself under the instruction of T. B. Hill, with whom he worked most of the time for four years, thoroughly mastering every detail of that rather difficult trade. Becoming dissatisfied, and desiring a larger field of operation, he concluded to try his fortune in the West, and locating at Janesville, Wisconsin, he remained some two years working at his trade, and assisting in fitting up some of the largest and best mills in Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois. In the Winter or early Spring of 1847 he was induced by S. S. McClure and others to remove to Independence, Iowa, and take charge of the erection of a dam and saw mill on the Wapsipinicon River at that point, After completing these he built a flouring mill with two run of stone, just below the saw mill, which stood for many years doing excellent work.

After coming to Iowa he became acquainted with Dr. Edward Brewer, who had been in the county a number of years, and was then engaged in the somewhat novel enterprise of catching wild deer, elk and buffalo, and training them for New York market. Mr. Sherwood was greatly interested in the experiment, and it is generally understood invested something in a race horse to be used in assisting to catch the valuable game. The experiment proving a failure, owing to the low market price of this kind of stock, he concluded not to invest further.

Mr. Sherwood has a pleasant family, consisting of a wife and four children, is the principal stockholder in the Independence Mill Company, and always keeps a good shot gun, a number of well trained pointers, and other hunting paraphernalia, with which he frequently takes a day's sport, seemingly enjoying it as much as in his younger days when the country was new and game more plenty, while he has not lost any of his appreciation of a "good story well told."

Honorable ANDREW T. JONES, one of the first merchants and the first Mayor of McGregor, was born near Flemingsburgh, Fleming County, Kentucky, December 13, 1818. He emigrated with his parents to near Springfield, Illinois, where he was brought up, and attended school, sometimes walking a distance of four miles to secure the meagre advantages which country schools afforded in those days, till his father removed to the "Lead Mines," as Galena and vicinity was then called — in 1827. Here he worked with his father carting lead ore from Plattsville, Wisconsin, to Galena, for about a year, when his father died, and he worked in a store and at mining, and attended school as he had opportunity, from ten to sixteen years of age. He then took charge of a stock of goods, at half interest, with his brother-in-law, J. R. Vineyard, at British Hollow, near Potosi, and after selling the same, went into mercantile business on his own account at Plattsville, Wisconsin.

Near the close of 1839 he was married at Plattsville to Miss Elizabeth Cheeseborough, formerly of Stonington, Connecticut.

In 1845 he settled in Benton, Wisconsin, and soon after formed a partnership with George L. Bass and James Day, in general merchandise, the firm being A. T. Jones & Co., continuing one year, when Mr. Day sold his interest to Jones and Bass, who continued the business till the Fall of 1849.

At the last mentioned date, Mr. Jones came to McGregor and commenced the erection of a store building, leaving Mr. Bass still in charge of the business at Benton. On landing at McGregor he found three families in the place, those of Alexander McGregor, L. Bigelow and Andrew Teats, the latter operating the ferry for Mr. McGregor. A young man by the name of V. R. Miller had a tin shop, and H. D. Evans had opened a store in the basement of McGregor's house. In November, two months after his arrival, Mr. Jones had his store completed, and commenced selling goods. The firm was Jones & Bass. They continued with various changes, successes and reverses, till August, 1851, when their building and contents, along with valuable papers, were entirely consumed by fire. Having a kiln of brick, with the consent and assistance of friends they soon put up another building, and in November purchased another stock of goods, and went on till July, 1856, when they sold their business to Merrill & Barron. From this period till 1866, they were engaged in produce business and forwarding. At the latter date Mr. Jones engaged in the boot and shoe business with his son, T. O. Jones, and continued till September, 1874, when they sold out to Messrs. Pearsoll & Baird. At the present time Mr. Jones is engaged in settling up the business of the company, which has been transferred to Faribault, Minnesota.

Mr. Jones' career has been an eventful one, he having lived from childhood amidst the changes and vicissitudes of frontier life, and been one of those strong and earnest characters to whom the West is so much indebted for extending the boundaries of civilization into new and unsettled territory.

In his political proclivities he has been an unchanging and uncompromising Whig, having been born in a Henry Clay district, and strictly educated in the Whig faith. He commenced voting the Whig ticket as soon as he was legally qualified, and hence the transition was easy in 1856 into that second edition of the Whig party — the Republican. Often solicited to accept offices of responsibility and trust, he has uniformly declined, on account of the preference given to his own private business, never accepting any but a few minor offices, though always actively public-spirited.

Honorable GEORGE L. BASS. — Few men among the early settlers of the West have been more noted for their versatility than Honorable George L. Bass, of McGregor. The few facts which we have been able to gather of his life fail to present an adequate idea of the changes he has passed through, and the number of different things he has done. Born in Brooklyn, New York, on the 23d of June, 1824, he commenced learning the painter's trade at the age of ten years. After working two years at that, he went to Wayne County, New York, and there devoted his time alternately to working on a farm, tending saw mill, carding machine and cloth factory, till eighteen years of age.

He then started for the West, arriving in Chicago in June, 1842. After paying his stage fare for Galena ($3.50) to the agent of the famous Frink & Walker's line of stages, he had but "five shillings" left, and with that in his pocket he started for the lead mines. He well remembers how he felt like one "out at sea" on rocking over the prairies for the first time in a stage-coach. From Galena to Plattsville, where he had some relations, he went on foot, a distance of twenty-five miles Arriving there, he went to work "as well as a homesick boy could." He made rails, built fence, carried on mercantile business, mined, bought and carted lead ore, ran a furnace, and got married, June the 13th, 1848, to Miss Ann Moore. On the way home from the wedding, with his wife, one of the irons connecting the thills with the axletree of his buggy broke, and he stopped at a blacksmith shop by the side of the road and welded it himself. He left the mines at Benton, Wisconsin, with his wife, his oldest child being then a babe in its mother's arms, in the Spring of 1850, and arriving at the Mississippi River, crossed in a skiff to McGregor, among the first settlers.

Here he began life as a merchant, in partnership with Andrew T. Jones, a former acquaintance at the mines, the firm being Jones & Bass, the first firm in the Town of McGregor, though Mr. Evans had opened a store before them the same year. On the 3d of August, 1851, their entire stock of goods and store were burned. Their business, however, suffered but a few weeks' suspension; a new store was erected, and their friends furnishing them with all the goods they needed, they went on more prosperously than before.

April 15th, 1852, with the first boat from McGregor, Mr. Bass left for California. He returned in July, 1854. During the time he was absent he was water agent in the mines, ran drifts, managed a trading post, bought gold dust, ran water wheels and handled a pickaxe, which was all lost time to him so far as making money was concerned.

In August, after his return from California, he went to New York and purchased a stock of goods, and started in business again at McGregor, continuing till the Fall of 1856, when he sold out to Merrill & Barron, and busied himself with other pursuits till 1859, in which year he formed a partnership with Robert Grant, under the firm name of Bass & Grant, in the produce and commission business, which continued till 1861. The firm was then dissolved, and Mr. Bass formed a partnership with Mr. F. F. Elmendorf, the firm being Bass & Elmendorf, in the produce, forwarding and commission business.

In the Fall of 1861, Mr. Bass was unanimously elected to represent his county in the State Legislature, as a Union man, and served during the regular and special terms. He was one of the second Board of Trustees of McGregor, and was elected mayor of the city in 1859 and 1860, but resigned before the expiration of the latter term. He was interested in the first brick yard, the first saw mill, the first school house, the first church, and indeed the first of almost every thing, in getting started in this new country. If the streets wanted grading, he could hold a plow to do it as well as any man on the corporation. He made himself generally useful, and was full of public spirit. He was an ardent advocate of the Mississippi River improvement, and attended the convention in that interest at St. Louis in 1868.

Without the advantages of an education, and thrown early in life upon his own resources, Mr. Bass has been a man who by his own energy, natural abilities and force of character, has made his way successfully in the world. By his integrity and genial disposition he has been able to attach men to him, and consequently has never been in want of friends. By his versatility he has adapted himself to every thing which the exigencies of self support in a new country demanded, and upon the whole has achieved a creditable degree of success.

ALEXANDER McGREGOR, the founder of the city which bears his name, was one of the early pioneers of the territory west of the Mississippi, and is remembered with interest by many of the "Old Settlers," and with esteem and even affection by a large circle of surviving friends. To perpetuate the memory of such men in the annals of the state, is not only to gratify the wishes of many living contemporaries, who shared with him the hardships and privations of frontier life, but also to confer a blessing on posterity.

Alexander McGregor was a descendant of the old Scotch family of McGregors, his immediate ancestors having emigrated to the United States and settled at Wilton, Saratoga County, New York, where he was born May 23d, 1804. Of his early life we have been able to gather little information, except that his education was of that meagre sort furnished by the common schools, such as they were at an early day in the country where his parents settled. But his native energies were such that he overcame in a great measure these disadvantages in the school of experience and self education.

He emigrated to Chicago in 1832, where he could have purchased at that time a future fortune for a mere trifle, had he foreseen what Chicago was destined to become. But that was hidden from the most sagacious observer in the sunken, miry and unpromising aspect which the future great city then presented. Prairie du Chien was then attracting considerable attention, and to this point he removed in 1835. During the following year he established a ferry from Prairie du Chien to the mouth of Coolie de Sioux, now the foot of Main street, McGregor, which, in consequence, soon became known as McGregor's Landing.

The boat which Mr. McGregor first used was an old fashioned river craft known as a flatboat, and was propelled by poles. In the Spring of 1840 the United States Government commenced the building of Fort Atkinson, about fifty-five miles northwest on Turkey River, and established a military road from a point opposite Fort Crawford to Fort Atkinson. As that road had to pass through the Coolie de Sioux, the present site of McGregor, it being the only accessible point for crossing the river and reaching the high table land to the west of it, the landing became a place of considerable importance. Ground was leased by the Government, and a warehouse erected on the river bank at the foot of what is now Main Street, Mr. McGregor having located his claim at this point. The flatboat ferry established in 1836 did not prove exceedingly remunerative, but when the Government commenced work on Fort Atkinson, business increased to such an extent that a horse ferry was established in 1841.

In 1847 Mr. McGregor moved across the river with his family, and occupied a log cabin at the foot of Main Street. This house, a Government store house on the opposite side of the street, and a few shanties on the river bank occupied by soldiers, were all the buildings on the site of the present city of McGregor at that time.

During the year 1856 (twenty years from the establishment of the first ferry), business had increased so considerably that Mr. McGregor found it necessary to exchange his horse ferry boat for one more powerful and rapid. Consequently a new steam boat of 300 tons burden was purchased at Cincinnati for $12,000. This boat was christened the "Alexander McGregor," and arrived here November 13th, 1856. It was dedicated the following day by the citizens of McGregor and Prairie du Chien in an excursion to Clayton, twelve miles below on the Iowa side.

In 1853 and 1854, the demands of immigration increasing, he established also a ferry at the mouth of the Wisconsin River, crossing at a point about two miles below McGregor, where he built a road at his own expense.

It would be interesting, as well as just to the memory of one so intimately identified with the history of this section of Iowa, to treat the eventful life of Mr. McGregor in greater detail, had we the data at our command; but little has been furnished us beyond what we have thus briefly recorded..

Mr. McGregor was married April 23, 1843, to Miss Ann G. Gardner, of Saratoga County, New York. By this marriage he had four children, namely, the following, in the order of birth: Chester, Gregor, Gardner and George, of whom Gregor and Gardner are living.

Gregor McGregor is engaged in business in the City of McGregor, and has several times been elected to the mayoralty. He was elected in 1870 and 1871, and re-elected in 1874, holding the office at the present time.

Mr. McGregor died at the age of fifty-four years and seven months, on the 12th of December, 1858. His illness was long and painful, but he bore it with patient and heroic fortitude, and "died as calmly as if going to sleep." We can not do better, in closing this sketch, than to copy the following friendly tribute to his memory, written at the time of his decease by the late editor of The North Iowa Times, Col. A. P. Richardson, who knew him intimately:

"Alexander McGregor was our friend, and it would afford us a melancholy gratification to detail the difficulties and privations he encountered in the early settlement of this country, and the energy and manliness with which he met the responsibilities of pioneer life; but we are not furnished with the data, and hence this notice can not be historical, though the subject of it eminently merits and invites a minute biographic article. Knowing our deceased friend to have been a man of unquestioned integrity, averse to the application or the reception of flattery, we dare not insult his memory by the use of smooth terms of exclusive praise. In the estimation of the world, and doubtless of himself, he was not faultless, but whatever errors of life may be remembered against him, are properly attributed to a moral constitution that asked nothing but the right, and submitted to nothing that he regarded as wrong. The compromise of interest with principle was unknown to a nature that deliberately took a position believed to be correct, and inflexibly maintained it.

"Many men are said to have died unregretted; their conduct has been such that no eye, moistened with the tear of sorrow, looked upon the last sad office that frail humanity could render; no interest except that caused by the remembrance of their wrongs awakened in the heart of the multitude. Not so here — the inhabitants of the town will long regret his early decease; the friends and neighbors of many years will mourn the loss of a tried friend, while anguish unutterable will possess the hearts of his revered partner and her orphan boys, when the gentle voice and the eloquent eye of the departed one present themselves to the keenly searching eye and ear of memory.

"Alexander McGregor was a warm friend, an open foe, a kind husband, an indulgent father, a law abiding citizen, and an honest man. His sickness was borne and death met with a fortitude unexcelled in the records of earth's greatest heroes."

His funeral was the most imposing tribute of regard on the part of the citizens ever paid to a deceased fellow citizen in this part of the state. The cortege was half a mile in length, numbering from fifty to seventy-five teams, and carrying nearly a thousand people. The hotels and business houses were closed and draped in mourning, and a general sadness was exhibited by all.

HENRY S. GRANGER. Esq., is a native of Geauga County, Ohio, where he was born on the 23d of April, 1821. His early life was spent on a farm. He had the advantages of a good common school education, to which was added subsequently a study of some of the higher branches in select schools, and a few years' experience in teaching. At the age of twenty-three he engaged in mercantile business at Auburn, Ohio, which he continued there and elsewhere about five years.

In the Spring of 1850 he came west, stopping a short time at St. Paul, and arriving at Garnavillo, Clayton County, Iowa, in July of that year. He spent the following two years in reading law with Honorable Samuel Murdock, of Garnavillo, then the county seat, and was admitted to the bar at the October term of the District Court in 1851.

In the Fall of 1852 he returned to Ohio, and was married on the 22d of October to Miss Mary Sanford. Returning west again, he purchased at Chicago an outfit for the first printing office established in Iowa between Dubuque and St. Paul, and on his arrival at Garnavillo commenced the publication of the Clayton County Herald, the oldest newspaper in Iowa north of Dubuque, and which is still conducted at Elkader under the name of the Clayton County Journal. The materials purchased in Chicago for this paper had to be hauled overland from Rockford, Illinois.

On arriving at what is now Dunleith, with his wife, Mr. Granger was obliged to cross to Dubuque, or return to Galena, as it was late in the season, and there were no accommodations at that time in Dunleith — only one log shanty. The ice was running thickly in the river, and crossing was perilous. Few ladies would have had the courage to undertake the hazardous experiment of crossing; but such seemed to be the urgency of the case that Mrs. Granger concluded to try it. The crossing was effected by skiffs, managed by Frenchmen, which they propelled as best they could through the rushing and crashing masses of ice, which almost literally filled the river. After seeing one boat cross in safety, Mr. Granger and his wife set out. The skiff was heavily loaded, and occasionally a jam of ice would crash against the frail boat, threatening in a moment to engulf all on board; but they finalsy reached in safety the opposite shore.

Mr. Granger continued to publish the paper about two years. In the Spring of 1853, he was elected School Fund Commissioner — an office, in those days, of considerable responsibility, as the interest accruing from the sale of school lands were paid in gold, and sometimes accumulated to a considerable amount in the hands of the Commissioner. There were no safes in the country in those days, in which to make the deposits of personal and public funds secure. They had to be deposited in shot bags and boxes, and hidden away in secret places. Such were some of the trials and perplexities of a responsible public servant in the days when Mr. Granger filled the office of School Fund Commissioner for Clayton County.

Upon the removal of the county seat to Elkader, Mr. Granger left Garnavillo, and in connection with other parties went into banking and real estate business at McGregor. The financial crash of 1857, which prostrated business generally throughout the country, so crippled them that they were obliged to close in June, 1858 — not, however, till a full and satisfactory settlement of the banking business had been made.

From the Spring to the Fall of 1860 he spent in prospecting among the gold mines of Colorado. Returning home on the 3d of November, he was elected on the 6th to the office of Clerk of the District and Circuit Courts, having been nominated by his fellow citizens in his absence without his knowledge or consent. He, however, accepted the office, and discharged its duties to the satisfaction of all concerned, and by successive re-elections held the office consecutively for twelve years.

His election to the clerkship of the Courts necessitated his removal to the county seat, and accordingly he settled in Elkader in December, 1860, where he has ever since resided.

He is still in the regular practice of his profession, in which he has acquired the reputation of a thorough, reliable and accurate attorney. His character for honor and integrity in all his business and professional relations stands high in the estimation of all who have known him during his long career of public service in this country.

His active interest in the public schools has been taken advantage of by the citizens of Elkader, who are determined to reward him by throwing upon him the chief responsibility in his capacity as President of the Board of Education, He is also one of the Directors of the First National Bank of Elkader.

Captain A. W. TALLMAN.— Although not an old resident of Osage, or Mitchell County, the circumstances of Captain Tallman's life, and his official and business connections with Osage, guarantee for him a place in this department. Captain Tallman, a son of Captain Elias Tallman, was born in Castile, Wyoming County, New York, September 26, 1842. His early life was passed on a farm, and when of sufficient age and accomplishment, earned money to give him an academic education by teaching, and graduated at Perry Academy, New York.

In August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in the 130th Infantry, New York Volunteers. At first his regiment went to Suffolk, Virginia, which was supposed at that time to be the key to Richmond, and participated in the siege, and repulse of General Longstreet. Immediately after the battle of Gettysburg the 130th joined the Army of the Potomac. In the Summer of 1863, it was ordered that the 130th Regiment should be mounted, and Captain Tallman, then a sergeant, was sent home on recruiting service. The regiment was recruited to 1200 strong, in September mounted, armed with seven-shooting carbines, and known thereafter as the First New York Dragoons. Their first engagement was in the battle of the Wilderness; and on the fifth day of the fight 15,000 select cavalry were ordered to report to General Sheridan, and of this number Captain Tallman was a participant, and was connected with that bold left flank movement around Lee's army which has become a matter of history. One incident of this raid may be mentioned. A negro guide was employed, which led them to the "Meadows," three miles from Richmond, when only by great courage of officers and bravery of troops in incessant fighting, they built bridges, charged and cut their way through rebel lines to a place of greater security. This regiment remained with the Army of the Potomac under Sheridan until August, 1864, when General Sheridan led them in his celebrated raid through the Shenandoah Valley. At Winchester he saw and participated in the heat of the fray when his regiment captured three battle flags and 1,500 prisoners, and saw afterward, in the afternoon of the dreadful battle at Cedar Creek, that incident of Sheridan's coming into the fight —

"From Winchester, twenty miles away."

In September, 1864, he was made Sergeant Major; when in the next Spring the expedition to Texas was being fitted out, two hundred men were selected from the Dragoons to join it, Mr. Tallman was chosen one of that number, promoted and commissioned Captain by Governor Fenton. In August, 1865, the regiment was mustered out at Rochester, New York, after serving three years, and witnessing and participating in the most severe campaigns of the late dreadful and bloody war.

February 4th, 1867, he was married to Miss Cynthia Howard, of Buffalo, New York.

In 1867, Captain Tallman came to Osage, Iowa, and settled to a mercantile line of life, and is at present a senior partner in business carrying on a large retail grocery trade at Osage in company with R. A. Howard. He was appointed Postmaster of Osage in September, 1871, which position he held until April, 1875.

EDWARD P. RANDS was born in Lincolnshire, England, March 20th, 1821. In 1832 his family emigrated to the United States and settled in Vermont. In the Spring of 1846 Mr. Rands went to Bureau County, Illinois, and was there married to Miss Jane Campbell, August 6th, 1850. In 1856 he moved to Stacyville, Mitchell County, Iowa, and settled on the farm where he at present resides. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Rands has been blessed by the birth of eight children, seven of which are living — Jennie E., Edward M., Martha L., Temperance L., Clarence A., Ernest P., and Harold A. Frederick died April 10th, 1871.

G. S. JOHNSON. — Mr. Johnson was one of the pioneer settlers of Northern Iowa, and has been prominent as identified with the educational and other interests of his town and Mitchell County. He was born at Whitestown, Oneida County, New York, November 22, 1814. He graduated as a civil engineer at Rensselaer Institute, Troy, N. Y., after which he served as an engineer during the enlargement of the Erie canal for five years, and was afterward employed as engineer of the construction of the Great Western Railroad through Canada. In 1855 came to Iowa and settled in Mitchell County. Was one of the first residents of Stacyville — before it was named — saw its beginning, and has observed the steady growth and development of Mitchell County. His present residence is Stacyville.

Colonel WILLIAM TUCKERMAN SHAW was born September 22, 1822, at Steuben, Washington County, Maine. The military names of his native town and county are but talismanic words in the character of Colonel Shaw.

The family is of English origin, and came to America in the early days of the colonies, and an account of the first generations may be found in Savage's Genealogical Dictionary of New England. The earliest name in the lineal descent which we shall mention is that of Colonel Shaw's great-grandfather, Francis Shaw, of Boston, Massachusetts, a wealthy merchant, who was engaged in extensive business, and was noted for his intelligence and enterprise. His third son, Samuel Shaw, was born in Boston, October 2, 1754; was educated in the public schools of that city, and entered the Latin School, under the tuition of that excellent linguist and teacher James Lovell. This Samuel was Colonel Shaw's grandfather; and as a memoir of his life, by the distinguished Josiah Quincy, one of Massachusetts' most eminent statesmen, is furnished the author of this sketch, he deems it expedient to transfer a few items to these pages, as being worthy of preservation.

Samuel Shaw was destined for commercial pursuits, and he soon quitted the Latin School for the counting room, and almost as soon left the counting room for the exciting scenes of camp life, under General Washington, in our national strife for liberty. He applied to Washington for a lieutenancy in the train of artillery, and although there were competitors of influence, he was accepted. His letters to his friends and relatives, from his enlistment at Cambridge December, 1775, to his final disbandment at West Point, January, 1784, describing almost every important event in the war, written at the moment of victory or defeat, amidst poverty and privation, manifest an unconquerable spirit, and will be read with fresh interest, not only by succeeding generations of the Shaw family, but by every lover of his country. These letters are published in the "Memoirs," and their chief charm is not the classic English of its distinguished author, but the natural, easy grace of the letter-writer, and the thrilling events which he describes during the seven years' struggle.

He was soon promoted for meritorious conduct, and became a member of General Knox's staff; was in a large number of the severest battles of the Revolution; was present when Washington took his final leave of the officers of the American army, and received the following testimonial from the Commander-in-Chief for his own services and merits at the close of the war:

[L. S.] "By His Excellency George Washington, Esq., General and Commander-in-Chief of the Forces of the United States of America:

"This certifies that Captain Samuel Shaw was appointed a Lieutenant of Artillery in the army of the United States of America in 1775; in the year following he was appointed Adjutant, and in 1777 was promoted to the rank of Captain-Lieutenant and Brigade-Major in the corps of Artillery, in which capacity he served until August, 1779, when he was appointed Aid-de-Camp to Major-General Knox, commanding the Artillery, with whom he remained till the close of the war, having been promoted to the rank of Captain of Artillery in 1780.

"From the testimony of superior officers under whom Captain Shaw has served, as well as from my own observation, I am enabled to certify that, throughout the whole of his service, he has greatly distinguished himself in every thing which could entitle him to the character of an intelligent, active and brave officer.

"Given under my hand and seal this third day of November, 1783.

"GEO. WASHINGTON.

"By His Excellency's command.

"BEN. WALKER, Aid-de-Camp."

Upon leaving the family of General Knox, he received the following certificate from that distinguished officer, in words following:

"THIS IS TO CERTIFY that the possessor, Captain Samuel Shaw, has borne a commission in the Artillery of the United States of America upwards of eight years; more than seven of which he has been particularly attached to the subscriber in the capacities of Adjutant, Brigade-Major, and Aid-de-Camp. In the various and arduous duties of his several stations, he has in every instance evinced himself an intelligent, active and gallant officer, and, as such, he has peculiarly endeared himself to his numerous acquaintances.

"This testimony is given unsolicited on his part. It is dictated by the pure principles of affection and gratitude inspired by an unequivocal attachment during a long and trying period of the American War.

[L. S.] "Given under my hand and seal at West Point, upon Hudson's River, this 5th day of January, 1784.

"H. KNOX, M. General."

After the war, he was offered the position of factor and commercial agent to China by an association of American capitalists, for the purpose of opening commercial intercourse between America and China. He returned in 1785, having accomplished his mission. He gave an account of the voyage to Mr. Jay, the Minister of the United States for Foreign Affairs, as "the first vessel that had been fitted out by inhabitants of the United States of America for essaying a commerce with those of the Empire of China," and received from Mr. Jay, by order of Congress, an expression "of their peculiar satisfaction at the successful termination of the enterprise."

The trade of the United States with China and India received his special attention; and he left, in manuscript, journals containing an account of the first and other early voyages from the United States to Canton, which may be found in the interesting volume above alluded to.

He was American Consul for the port of Canton, and represented the American interest on the occasion of the "Canton War." He was honored with the title of Master of Arts by the University of Cambridge, without his knowledge; and was elected a "Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences."

He married, August 21, 1792, Hannah, the daughter of William Phillips, Esq., of Boston, of a family distinguished for its virtues and its prosperity, and the following year he sailed from New York to Bombay, India, where he contracted a disease of the liver incident to the climate, which caused him to ship for the United States, but he died on board, near the Cape of Good Hope, on Friday afternoon (3 o'clock), May 30, 1794, aged 39 years 6 mos., leaving a broken-hearted family, a large circle of friends, and the principal men of the nation with whom he had associated, to lament his loss.

Colonel Shaw, the subject of this sketch, was the son of Colonel Wm. N. Shaw and Nancy Stevens his wife, of Steuben, Maine; and after receiving his education in the Maine Wesleyan Seminary, went to Kentucky as a teacher; but the war with Mexico breaking out, he enlisted in the 2d Kentucky Infantry Regiment, Colonel McKee, commander. He served till the close of the war, participating in that sanguinary battle at Buena Vista, being in the thickest of the fight on the hill slope and in that ravine where it raged with the greatest fury. Colonel McKee and Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Clay, Jr., were both killed in this battle.

After the declaration of peace he aided in clearing our south-western borders of hostile Indians, who were annoying the border settlers.

Having obtained a reputation for noble daring, he was chosen, in 1849, as the leader of the first party which crossed the plains to California, leaving Fort Smith, Arkansas, via Santa Fé. The party consisted of thirty-six men, from New York, Kentucky, Louisiana and Arkansas.

After returning, he made another trip, starting from Council Bluffs, and at this time he had but a single associate, but made his journey in safety.

In 1853 Colonel Shaw became a resident of Jones County, Iowa, settling at Anamosa, where he still resides.

In 1861, at the breaking out of the Rebellion, he raised a regiment, and was elected colonel October 24 of that year, and marched to the field of action. His regiment—the 14th Iowa—distinguished itself in every battle in which it was engaged; and the 2d Brigade, 3d Division, 16th Army Corps, which was subsequently commanded by him, gained the name of the "Iron Brigade," from its power of endurance and unflinching bravery in battle. At Fort Donelson and at Pittsburg Landing the fighting of this regiment—the 14th—was fearfully sublime, and gained the admiration and applause of both friend and foe. Beauregard said: "We charged the center five distinct times, and could not break it." The 14th held the center at Shiloh.

The 2d Brigade, composed of the 14th, 27th and 32d Iowa, and the 24th Missouri, commanded by Colonel Shaw, saved the army of General Banks from defeat and capture at the battle of Pleasant Hill, Louisiana. The fighting here was terrific, and the colonel bore himself and fought his men with a desperation never excelled by the fiercest Roman cohort. The name given the colonel, and which has passed upon the records and into history, was that of "Grim Fighting Old Shaw."

Our space will not admit of the mention of the capture of Fort De Russy and other battles fought by the "Bloody Old Fourteenth;" other books furnish their history.

After the return from the Red River expedition, Colonel Shaw, in command of the 2d Divison 16th Army Corps, went into Missouri, in quest of General Price, who was finally driven from the state.

His term of service having expired, he was relieved by the following order:

HEADQUARTERS RIGHT WING 16TH ARMY CORPS,
HARRISONVILLE, MO., Oct. 29, 1864.

Special Order, No. 132.

I. Colonel W. T. Shaw, Fourteenth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, is relieved from the command of the Third Division Sixteenth Army Corps, and will forthwith rejoin his regiment at Davenport, Iowa. The quartermaster will furnish transportation for himself and authorized servants.

II. In relieving Colonel Shaw from the command of the Third Division, prior to his being mustered out, it is but an act of justice to an energetic, thorough and competent officer, to say that for the last fifteen months he has been in this command, as commanding a post, brigade and division, and in every position has performed the incumbent duties faithfully and well; with an ability that few can equal; with courage, patriotism and skill above question. The service loses an excellent officer when he is mustered out.

By order of Major-General A. J. SMITH.

J. HOUGH, A. A. G.

When Colonel Shaw was about to take his leave of his compatriots in arms, the officers of the division which he had commanded presented him with a costly sword and scabbard—one of the most beautiful and tasteful weapons ever made.

He returned to Anamosa, Iowa, and has ever since been engaged in farming, banking, railroading, and real estate business. He engineered the Dubuque & Southwestern Railroad through his own county; and by his energy, skill and perseverance the Iowa Midland Railroad was carried to a completion. He is also President of the Iowa & Minnesota Railway, which bids fair to be of some importance when completed.

The above is a very brief sketch of Colonel Shaw, but our space forbids a more extended notice. The Shaw family have rendered, in every time of trial, their country service, for which succeeding generations may well be proud. Colonel Robert Gould Shaw, who was killed at Fort Wagner, South Carolina (a son of Francis G. Shaw), and who commanded the first colored regiment, and to whose memory a monument is erected, was a cousin of the subject of this sketch.

CHARLES CLINE, Auditor of Jones County, Iowa, was born in the City of Philadelphia, July 17, 1819.

October, 1855, he went to St. Louis, Mo., thence to Muscatine, Iowa, thence to New Orleans, where he remained until April 11, 1861, thence to Chicago, thence to Iowa in 1862.

His grandfather was a soldier under General Washington, and died at Valley Forge.

Mr. Cline is an elder in the Methodist Church, and is an active worker in the Sabbath school.

ROBERT DOTT, Mayor of Anamosa, was born in Scotland, September 9, 1824; came to America in 1844, stopped in Canada for three years, moved thence to Illinois, in DeKalb County, making the tour of the States. He finally settled in Anamosa in 1854, and since 1856 he has made it his permanent residence.

In 1857 he was elected Mayor of the town, succeeding Colonel Shaw, who was the first mayor.

In 1861 he enlisted in the Union Army, in the 14th Iowa Regiment Infantry, was taken prisoner at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, and kept six and a half months.

On account of ill-health he was honorably discharged in 1863; returned to Anamosa and served a few months as deputy provost marshal.

In the Spring of 1864 was appointed justice of the peace, to fill a vacancy, and has been repeatedly elected ever since. He was elected the first mayor of the city after its incorporation, and still holds that office.

Mr. Dott married Sarah J. Peters, of New York, April 12, 1857, and has three children, Richard Millard, born April 12, 1858; Robert Thomas, born October, 1859; and George Meredith, born November 10, 1872.

G. W. HUNT, Editor of the Jones County Liberal, was formerly Associate Editor and Proprietor of the Wyoming News, which was established by him November 19, 1873. He was also the predecessor of John Blanchard, the present Editor of the Monticello Express, and conducted that paper with energy and success.

The Liberal, his present paper, was established September 19, 1872, and is the leading organ of the Liberal Party in Jones County.

Mr. Hunt is a man of great experience in the newspaper business—knows how to cater to the wants of the people in an intellectual and political point of view, and is fearless and outspoken in his views on any subject.

EDMUND BOOTH was born in Chicopee, Mass., August 10, 1810. Chickopee was, until about thirty years ago, a parish of Springfield.

Having the spotted fever at the age of four, he lost his hearing almost entirely, and at eight totally. He aided on the farm until he was seventeen, and then went to the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Hartford, Ct.; graduated at twenty-one, and remained a teacher seven years in the institution.

1839 he came to Iowa Territory and stopped at the "Buffalo Forks of the Waubisipinecon," as the old maps had it.

In the Spring of 1840 a brother-in-law, Colonel David Wood, and family, arrived from Springfield, Mass. These men built the first house in "Dartmouth," now Anamosa.

In August, 1840, he married Mary, sister to Geo. H. Walworth, one of the proprietors of the mills in that locality. Colonel Wood died the following Winter, and later his widow married Gideon H. Ford, to whom Mr. B. sold the new house, and removed to Fairview, and engaged in farming till 1849, and was three times elected recorder.

In 1849 he went to California, worked in the mines, sent home his earnings to his wife, who bought ground in Anamosa and built a house; returned in 1854 and went to farming near Anamosa. In 1856 the Eureka was started by C. L. D. Crockwell, John E. Lovejoy, of Scotch Grove, a printer, and brother of Elijah P. and Owen Lovejoy, being editors. In three weeks, he and family being sick, he abandoned the paper and returned home. Crockwell solicited Mr. Booth to become editor; he did so for eighteen months, then bought one-half of the concern for $1,000. Matt. Parson's, now of the Waterloo Reporter, buying the other half. December 11, 1862, Mr. B. bought out the other half for $1,000, and in 1868 associated his son, Thomas E. Booth, in the editorship.

Mr. Booth is one of our most substantial men, and is honored by all who know him.

He says there are only two editors in the state who were such when he commenced in 1856. They are Junkin, of the Fairfield Ledger, and John Mahan, of the Muscatine Journal, the rest all dead or retired. There were not then 100 papers in Iowa—now over 250.

FRED. STUART DUNHAM was born in Hartford, Connecticut, on the 19th day of December, 1832.

His ancestry is of English and Scotch origin, and came to America before the Revolutionary War and settled in Connecticut. His father emigrated with his family to Pennsylvania when Mr. Dunham was but an infant one year of age. At the age of fourteen he moved to Iowa, where he arrived ——, 1846.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion he enlisted in the Union Army, enlisting as a private. He was promoted as lieutenant of Company L, 2d Iowa Cavalry—subsequently received a captain's commission—and after serving three and a half years he was honorably discharged. In 1865, at the expiration of his term of service, he moved to Monticello and opened a hardware store, in which business he still continues, commanding an extensive trade from the surrounding country.

He married, in 1857, Phebe A. McCloy, daughter of Joseph and Phebe S. (Bellows) McCloy. She was a lineal descendant of Col. Benjamin Bellows, of Bellows Falls, New Hampshire, and was born January 18, 1839, at Dubuque, Iowa. When she was three years of age her parents moved to Maquoketa, Jackson County, Iowa, which has since been their home. She was sent to Massachusetts to be educated, returned to Iowa, and here for many years has been an energetic worker in the Temperance cause.

Mrs. Dunham was appointed by the Iowa Board of Centennial Managers to gather group No. 27, "Photographs of Iowa Men and Women, and Iowa Scenery," and the wisdom of the board is exhibited in her appointment. She is an intelligent, energetic and efficient person, and will, without doubt, honor the position.

They have the following family:

I. MARY, born July 2, 1858.
II. PHEBE N., born March 28, 1869.
III. IMOGENE J., born September 15, 1871.

JOSEPH HUNT FISHER was born February 16, 1804, in Chester County, Pennsylvania.

The family is of English stock, and came to America long before the Revolution, and settled in Germantown. His grandfather was a Quaker, and carried money from Philadelphia to Fort Pitt for the use of the army, at the request of Washington, and for this act he was disowned by the Friends. His father, Israel Fisher, was Washington's errand-boy during the Revolution; he was also in the war of 1812. He married Esther Hunt, a relative of the celebrated Quaker preacher, and had a family of eleven children. One of them—George—was editor of a Cincinnati paper and clerk of the court.

Mr. Fisher remained in Pennsylvania till twenty years of age, engaged as a miller, and then moved to the Little Miami River, and continued his business till the Spring of 1843, when he came to Iowa, and settled in Iowa City. Here he was employed by the Land Office in selling warrants and locating settlers; then opened a boarding-house for members of the Legislature; afterwards came to Jones County, established a carding machine on Buffalo Creek, ran it two years, purchased the land at Fisherville, built the town and kept a store for fifteen years, trading in all kinds of farm produce, aiding settlers and opening the country generally.

Where Anamosa now stands he owned 160 acres at one time; built a large brick hotel, which still bears his name; laid out a part of Anamosa; and engaged in dealing in cattle, horses and hogs. He has been one of the most thoroughgoing business men of the country. He is now engaged in introducing an improved open ditching plow, for sloughs and fence making; it runs through wet and dry ground equally well.

Mr. Fisher married, first, Mary Carter, of Ohio, and by her had ten children—Israel, Margaret and Darius only living. He married, thirdly, Lucy A. Hoyt, of Pennsylvania. Sine pavole.

Israel Fisher is now owner of the mill which his father built on Buffalo Creek. All of Mr. Fisher's children are married, and live in Iowa.

Doctor EDWIN BLAKESLEE was born in Franklin County, Massachusetts, November 29, 1831.

His ancestors came to America from England before the Revolution. The story of the original emigrant is a sad one indeed. The ship which brought him to this country was lost at sea, and all on board perished but a little boy whose name was Blakeslee, and he is the founder of the family in America. He first settled in Connecticut, married and had a family. His son Jacob—grandfather of the doctor—was in the revolutionary war, and at its close settled in Massachusetts, married and had a family. His son, Jerrold Blakeslee, married Mary Knowlton, and had two children, of whom the doctor is the only one surviving. His father died in Massachusetts when Edwin was four years age.

He was educated in the public schools and at East Hampton Academy, and attended at Woodstock, Vermont, and Pittsford, Massachusetts, receiving his diploma from "Berkshire Medical College," Massachusetts; after which he was appointed Assistant-Physician at the "Retreat for the Insane," at Hartford, Connecticut.

In 1855 he moved to Iowa, and settled at Anamosa; opened an office and commenced practice, and has remained there ever since. In 1871 he was elected Mayor of Anamosa, and held the office of School Director for five years. In 1874 he was appointed Physician for the State Penitentiary, which he still holds.

He is a member of the U. S. Medical Society, the District Medical Society which meets at Cedar Rapids, and is Vice President of Jones County Medical Society.

He has opened a medical and electrical institute, for the treatment and cure of nervous and chronic diseases, at Anamosa; and his electrical iron bath and electro-thermal bath are deservedly popular. This, we believe, is the only institute of the kind in the State.

Dr. Blakeslee married, September 4, 1858, Elizabeth Scott; and has three children, Edwin C., Mary E. and George.

GEORGE SAUM was born in Highland County, Ohio, April 22, 1814.

The family is of German extraction, and came to America and settled in Virginia in the Shenandoah Valley, and engaged in agriculture.

His great-grandfather was in the revolutionary war under Washington, and aided in establishing our national independence. His grandfather, Nicholas Saum, was born, married, lived and died in Virginia. He was thrice married, his second wife being a Miss Deupes, the grandmother of the subject of this sketch. He was in the Indian wars that afflicted the early settlers of Virginia, and suffered the perils and hardships incident to pioneer life in a wilderness of savages. His father, Jacob Saum, left Virginia when he was twenty-six years of age, and moved to Highland County, Ohio. He had previously married Barbary Mowrey, of Shenandoah Valley, and had a family of nine children, four of whom died young. The names of those living are as follows: 1st, Nicholas; 2d, Polly; 3d, George; 4th, Lucinda; and 5th, Anna.

I. NICHOLAS married Keziah Russell, and has a family of seven children, all still living. He is a farmer, and resides in De Kalb County, Illinois, engaged in raising blooded stock, cattle, horses, etc.

II. POLLY married Mr. Starry, of Virginia, in Warren County, Indiana; had a family; moved to Jones County, Iowa, where she still lives a widow, Mr. Starry having died some years ago. Her living children are Jabez, Daniel, Jacob, Lewis, Elizabeth and Polly. She resides in Rome Township.

IV. LUCINDA married a Cronkhite, of Indiana, and moved to Jones County, Iowa, about 1839. She has a family of seven children. She is a widow, and resides in Rome Township.

V. ANNA married Mr. Kisling, and had two children, and died in Warren County, Indiana.

Mr. Saum, as we have stated, was born in Ohio, and spent his childhood and youth in that state, and in 1829 he moved with his parents to Warren County, Indiana, and remained there ten years, and in 1839 emigrated to Iowa, stopped awhile in Lee County, and finally located in Rome Township, in Jones County, where he still resides.

During several years he has been engaged in farming and stock-raising with good success.

He married Susannah Stingley, of Warren County, Indiana, and has the following family:

I. JACOB D. married Anna Hangher, of Jones County, Iowa, and with Ira, Elvey and Mary, their children, reside in Cedar County, at Clarence.

II. NICHOLAS married Philena Duey, and has four children—Luna, Amber, Cora and Ray—and resides in Rome Township.

III. POLLY A. married Robert Johnson; has Frank and Alma; resides in Rome Township.

IV. JOSEPHUS married Charlotte Miller, of Rome; has Arthur and George; resides in Rome Township.

V. HIRAM married Emily Zimmerman; resides in Rome.

VI. ELIZA married William Peet; resides in Rome Township.

VII. MAHALA married Henry Hines, and has two children; resides in Rome.

VIII. GEORGE M. is unmarried; resides in Cedar County.

IX. SUSANNAH P. married Lewis Parsons; has one child; resides in Fairview Township, Jones County, Iowa.

Mr. Saum has not been an office seeker, and still has served the people in various positions, as they have demanded his services,—not shirking the responsibilities that are imposed by citizenship. He has held, among other offices, that of justice of the peace for many years.

Politically, Mr. Saum has firmly held and believed the old Jeffersonian faith, and has always voted the Democratic ticket.

When he first came to Iowa the country was a wilderness, with here and there a settler, and he knows what it is to endure the trials and deprivations of border life. Wolves were numerous; deer and elk were to be seen in large numbers; and his neighbors were like angels' visits—few and far between.

Anamosa at that time had neither a local habitation nor a name, and the nearest place to market and to mill was many miles away.

He places these facts upon the record, not to gratify personal vanity, but that his children and grandchildren, and so on for generations to come, may know what their ancestors had to endure in order to furnish them a home.

Mr. Saum is a friend of education, and aids cheerfully any literary enterprise, like this, in order that the facts of the early settlement of Iowa may be perpetuated.

HON. DAVID KINERT is a native of Perry County, Pennsylvania, and was born Dec. 4, 1817.

(The name is spelled differently by different branches of the family—some Kynett, as the Secretary of the M. E. Church Extension of Philadelphia, others Kinard, as in Pennsylvania.)

His grandfather and grandmother were from Germany, and came to America soon after the conclusion of the Revolution, and settled in Adams County, Pennsylvania, and engaged in agriculture. They had a family, of whom was Jacob Kinert, the father of the subject of this sketch. He resided in Pennsylvania till 1834, and then moved his family to New Carlisle, Ohio, where he died and is buried.

He married Mary Beals, of Pennsylvania, and had a family of four boys and four girls. The mother died in Dubuque County, Iowa, about 1870.

Mr. Kinert moved with his father to Ohio, where he remained eight years, and then with his mother, brother and two sisters, he moved to Randolph County, Indiana, and engaged in the milling, wool carding and mercantile business for about ten years. Thence he moved to Iowa, and finally settled in Anamosa in 1853, and engaged in the mercantile business, having brought a stock of goods from his old residence in Indiana.

In 1855 he was elected to represent Jones and Jackson Counties in the Lower House in the State Legislature. The legislation was characterized by the passage of what was called the "Maine Law," or the "Prohibitory Liquor Law," and it was a stormy time. The law was finally passed, and has never been repealed.

An extra session was called in 1856, to accept the land grants made by Congress to the railroads of Iowa. The Legislature filled the Supreme Court Bench, for the first time in Iowa, with Republican judges, and what was better, they were temperance men. The members of the Legislature at that time were chiefly young men, but the laws they enacted have met the approbation of the people. In 1856 Mr. Kinert was elected to fill the unexpired term of the Clerk of the District Court, and in 1861 he was elected Sheriff of Jones County, and held the office six years. Since that time Mr. Kinert has been engaged in the furniture business in Anamosa, also in the manufacture and sale of furniture and house furnishing goods and carpets.

He married, in Indiana, Addie C. Cunningham, formerly of Adams County, Pennsylvania, and his children are Alonzo, Carrie and Frank.

JAMES S. PERFECT was born in Delaware County, Ohio, July 4, 1828.

His father was born in Kentucky, and was of English origin; his mother was of German descent. They moved to Ohio about 1810, and engaged in agriculture.

Until twelve years old Mr. Perfect aided his father on the farm, and then learned the merchant tailor's trade, and followed that business for about twelve years in Ohio and Illinois.

He moved to Anamosa in February, 1857, and engaged in clerking for C. H. Metcalf, in which capacity he continued till 1861, and then was appointed Deputy Treasurer and Recorder of Jones County, and in 1864 was elected to the office of Recorder and served two terms, and then entered into partnership with C. H. Lull in the mercantile business, which continued till 1875, when in company with his brother, L. J. Perfect, he opened a grocery store on Main street, opposite the Fisher House, in Anamosa.

Mr. Perfect married Susan M. Graham, daughter of John Graham, of Virginia, and Otis L., William G., and May N. B., are the names of his children.

WILLIAM BRAZELTON was born in Sangamon County, Illinois, near Springfield, Dec. 31, 1821.

His father, Benjamin Brazelton, was born 1795, in East Tennessee, married in 1816 Alice Moore, in Ohio, migrated to Illinois in 1817, and moved to Vermilion County in 1828. In 1832 he volunteered in the Black Hawk war in Capt. Jesse Brown's company of Rangers, and died August, 1832, of cholera, at Rock Island.

His mother was born in South Carolina in 1799, and died in western Iowa in 1856.

Mr. Brazelton came to Iowa in 1840, located in the west of Linn County, where in 1843 he married Kate Winton. In 1845 he moved to Bowen's Prairie, Jones County, and in 1850 to Independence, and built the first store, school house and hotel in that place. He returned to Bowen's Prairie in 1853, where he still resides. He married Ruth Minton.

His family is as follows:

I. GEORGE, born Dec. 15, 1844, married, 1865, M. E. Crucenberry; she died 1874. He married, 2dly, Alice Byers in 1875. Resides at Bowen's Prairie.

II. JANE, born Oct. 1, 1846.

III. ELLEN, born Oct. 25, 1848, married Alex. Lewis 1865; resides at Monticello.

IV. OLIVE, born Feb. 10, 1851, married, 1873, George Rice; resides on Bowen's Prairie.

V. OWEN, born Aug. 30, 1853, married, 1872, Miss R. J. Wright; resides in Wright Co., Iowa.

VI. SARAH, born July 23, 1855, married Frank Dawson; resides in St. Louis, Mo.

VII. JEROME, born June 3, 1858.

VIII. PERRY, born June 20, 1861.

IX. NOEL, born June 30, 1863.

X. CHLOE, born May 25, 1866.

XI. RUBY, born Jan. 14, 1871.

Mr. Brazelton is a most worthy citizen, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

RICHARD O. PETERS was born in Johnstown, N. Y., May 1, 1824.

His ancestor in the paternal line came from England, and in the maternal from Germany, and settled in America before the Revolutionary war. On his father's side, being Quakers, they did not participate in the war for independence, but his grandfather on his mother's side served seven years—during the entire struggle—and at the conclusion would not accept a pension, and enjoined upon his children that they should not receive anything from the Government.

Near the close of his life Mr. Peters' father moved to Iowa—in 1859—returned East on a visit, and died at the old homestead, and is buried there.

In 1847 Mr. Peters moved to Illinois, stopped in DeKalb County, and engaged in farming, and in 1853 he removed to Anamosa, Iowa, where he has ever since lived. He opened a tin shop and hardware store when he first arrived here, and continued that business about two years.

Having learned surveying, he became a proficient in the science, and was first appointed Deputy County Surveyor, and was afterwards elected County Surveyor of Jones County, and has served many years in that capacity.

He is Land Agent, and was appointed Notary Public by Governor Carpenter.

He married Henrietta Crawford—her father being of the old Virginia stock, had moved north and settled in Ohio.

His family consists of Dora, Richard, Frederick and Philip, who reside in Anamosa.

Mr. Peters was engaged in the Government survey in Wisconsin, and he has also been employed extensively on the railroads of Iowa in engineering.

He was educated at Johnstown Academy, having for instructors Ramsey and Hardenberg, and graduated at that institution.

Mr. Peters is affable and genial in disposition, reliable as a man, and is highly respected by the community.

WILLIAM M. SKINNER, M.D., was born in Pompey, Onondaga County, New York, in 1825, studied medicine in Fulton, Oswego County, graduated at Woodstock Medical College, Vermont, in 1850, practiced in Litchfield, Herkimer County, New York, came west in the Fall of 1856, and settled at Anamosa. After a year's residence in Cerro Gordo County, he returned to Anamosa, and was in the Recorder's office as deputy. In 1860 he went to the Rocky Mountains—Pike's Peak—gold hunting; returned in 1861, bought a drug store, and has been in the business ever since, although frequently called to perform professional service.

His father came west two or three years before he did, settled in Fairview Township, and died there in the Fall of 1864.

His brother, Pratt R. Skinner, was one of the early settlers of Anamosa; was a surveyor and engineer, laid out Skinner's Addition to Anamosa, was Chief Engineer of the old Iowa Air Line Railroad, and of the Dubuque & Southwestern. He was in the service during the Rebellion, and as a business man he had few superiors.

He now resides at Portland, Oregon.

JAMES M. PEET was born September 1, 1821, at Solon, Cortland County, New York.

The family is of Welsh origin and came to America in the early days of the Colonies and settled at Stratford, Connecticut. His grandfather was in the Revolutionary War seven years, and was wounded by having his ear shot off.

Mr. Peet's father moved to Pitcher Springs, New York about 1793, and worked at blacksmithing. He married Abigail Wildman of that place, and the following is a list of their children: John, Burton, Cyrus, Gideon N., Daniel M., Julius A., James M., Truman J. and Huldah. About 1804 he moved his family to Solon, New York, thence in 1840 to Fairview, Jones County, Iowa.

Mr. Peet aided his father on the farm till he attained his majority, and then engaged with his brother in farming. Since then he has been extensively engaged in stock raising, and for the last nineteen years in "blooded stock." He was elected justice of the peace when twenty years of age, but refused to qualify, but when he was twenty-one he was re-elected and served four years. He married Anna Dallas, daughter of Robert Dallas, of Cedar County, Iowa, and has the following family: William G., Lorenda E., Robert M. and Ora D.

William G. married Eliza Saum.

When Mr. Peet first came to Iowa, he was obliged to go to Dubuque, fifty-three miles to market, or to Davenport over sixty miles, or to Bloomington (now Muscatine) for groceries and merchandise, and to "Cat Fish," fifty miles to mill—camping out on the way. For sixteen or twenty miles of the route there was not a house.

In 1844 Mr. Peet and his brother took two loads of oats to Dubuque, and sold them to Emerson & Shields—the only persons who would buy, for six and one-fourth cents per bushel, heaping measure, and could get nothing but dry goods in exchange; they refused groceries.

These were times that tried men's souls, and the present generation know but little of the hardships and sufferings their fathers endured. They are relieved from opening the country, breaking the soil—building the roads and bridges—erecting houses and barns, fencing etc. All these are furnished to their hands,—and do they not complain more than their forefathers?

Mr. Peet has been a successful farmer, and his blooded stock of short horns, and Poland China hogs, is as good as the State of Iowa affords.

M. M. MOULTON, is a native of Sandwich, New Hampshire, where he was born January 12, 1832. In obedience to that instinct natural to most young men born in the New England States, gifted with brains and an honorable ambition, Mr. Moulton joined the vast stream of emigration, which for half a century has been flowing unceasingly westward, and dropped anchor in Monticello, in the Fall of 1854. His natural shrewdness and foresight, together with the indomitable energy of his nature, made him, at once, a marked man in the small, but enterprising and rapidly growing community. He was appointed United States commissioner in 1867, was admitted to the Bar in 1869, and elected mayor of the town for two successive terms—1869 and 1870—making one of the most efficient and capable officers who has ever held the position. Since that time he has held various responsible positions, most of the time holding the office of justice of the peace, and all the time closely identified with the educational interests of the town. Indeed, it is universally conceded that Mr. Moulton has been more prominently and actively associated for the past twenty years, with every enterprise and interest designed to accelerate the growth of the town and promote its permanent prosperity, than any other citizen.

Monticello, in respect to its enterprise, rapidity of growth, and the broad and generous spirit of its people, is a typical western town, and as such is known throughout the state. And to no man more than the subject of this sketch, is the town indebted for the excellent character it enjoys. Mr. Moulton is yet in the zenith of his manhood, being only forty-three years of age. He has accumulated a fair amount of property, sufficient to maintain him in independence, and has a pleasant home, brightened by the presence of a genial and cultured wife, and children, such as any man might be proud of. In person, as will be seen by his portrait in another place, Mr. Moulton is a large, stout, somewhat corpulent man. He has a full, hearty, rosy face, brown hair, touched with frost, large head, inclined to baldness, shrewd gray eyes, an ample chest, and shoulders strong enough to bear the burden of life without fainting by the wayside. He is sociable and affable in manner, hearty and pleasant in his address. He is strictly temperate in all his habits, and the uncompromising foe of the liquor traffic. With ordinary care, and without accident befalls him Mr. Moulton has many yeaas of vigorous and useful life yet before him.

Honorable OTIS WHITTEMORE was born in Fitz William, Cheshire County, New Hampshire, March 5, 1816.

His grandfather, Josiah Whittemore, married Lucy Snow and had a family of fourteen children, most of whom married, and their descendants are widely scattered over the United States. The oldest son, William Snow Whittemore, was the father of the subject of this sketch. He was born at Lunenberg, Massachusetts, and married September 18, 1800, Polly, daughter of William Locke, of Fitz William, New Hampshire, and had a family of nine children, of which Otis was the youngest. (See genealogy of the Whittemore family.)

This William Locke (or Lock as it is sometimes written) at the breaking out of the revolutionary war, and after the battle of Lexington, was called to Cambridge to aid in protecting the government stores, and an old account-book still in the possession of Mr. Whittemore bears the record of that event. The families on both sides were active in securing our national independence in those exciting times.

Mr. Whittemore has in his possession another ancient book printed in 1617, by an ancestor, containing a genealogy of the families for two or three generations in America, a copy of which may be found in Barrett Whittemore's sketch in this volume. The work is kept as an heir-loom, and is an able and instructive exposition of St. Paul's Epistle to the Colossians, and is dedicated to one of the noblemen of Great Britain.

Mr. Whittemore was educated in his native town, and during his minority aided his father on the farm. He remained in New Hampshire until he was twenty-seven years of age. His youth was characterized by a strict and ready obedience to his parents, and a filial regard for them worthy of imitation. In 1843 he moved to Bowen's Prairie, Jones County, Iowa. Here he found a few cabins of early settlers, and pitched his tent on the best forty acres in that vicinity. He subsequently increased his domains to over two hundred acres, and after a few years built a good substantial farm-house which still stands. This was situated on the military road between Dubuque and Iowa City. The United States Government expended about $50,000 on this road, and in that early day it was frequently enlivened by the passage of government troops and munitions of war.

Mr. Whittemore erected the first frame house in the settlement, and afterwards built the first frame school house in the county that was built by tax, and was among the foremost in erecting a church within a few rods of his door. He and others, in 1844, built a church at Cascade where he at first united and held his standing until one was built at Bowen's Prairie.

His farming operations at first consisted of grain raising, but subsequently he engaged in cattle raising. He also worked at the carpenter's trade, carrying on both occupations for a period of about fifteen years.

In the year 1854 he laid out the Town of Bowen's Prairie which was duly recorded in the clerk's office, and sold a number of lots, but like many others in a new country he was doomed to disappointment—his town did not grow to be a city.

The same year he engaged in merchandising, and continued in that business about five years.

The first temperance society in Jones County was organized on Bowen's Prairie, and Mr. Whittemore has always been one of the most active members in carrying on that cause from 1844 to the present time.

Mr. Whittemore's house has always been open to strangers, and frequently resembled the oriental caravansary. Many a family of the first settlers to this region have enjoyed his hospitality until they could erect their own cabins. Ministers always found a hearty welcome and regarded his residence as "the home of the prophets."

Mr. Whittemore was conscientiously opposed to the system of American Slavery, and his first presidential vote was cast for James G. Birney, the anti-slavery candidate in 1840. He always held the sentiment of the equality of human rights, and in honor of his consistency and firmness in the cause of universal freedom of all classes of men without caste or color, he was elected in 1861, to represent Jones County in his adopted state, and took his seat in the House of Representatives in January of the following year.

It was during the exciting times of the breaking out of the Rebellion, and the country North was full of Southern sympathizers and spies; the legislation consequently in the Iowa Legislature was earnest, decided and exciting. Mr. Whittemore was always at his post, and his votes will be found on the right side of every question that pertained to the crushing out of the Rebellion—by protecting the soldiers in the field, and supplying their families at home—and in aid of every bill that had for its object the amelioration of mankind. He was an earnest advocate of the benevolent institutions of our state—the Insane, the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb—and voted liberal appropriations for their support.

And when the great moral question arose, and the debate waxed hot his voice was not silent. An effort was made to repeal the prohibitory liquor law by a forty feet petition signed by men who never saw it (!) and, overdoing the matter by false friends, but it was adroitly defeated by a timely exposure of the hydra-headed monster, much to the discomfiture of the enemies, and to the satisfaction of the friends of temperance.

Mr. Whittemore exemplified the words of England's great poet—

> "Honor and fame from no condition rise, > Act well your part, there all the honor lies."

At the extra session of the legislature called for the purpose of giving the soldiers the privilege of voting in the field—an act of pure justice—and also to carry out and legislate in regard to an act of Congress pertaining to the establishment of an agricultural college, Mr. Whittemore took an active part. He was always vigilant and faithful to the trusts imposed in him by his constituents, and never allowed personal profit to swerve him from the path of duty and strict justice.

About 1870, Mr. Whittemore having secured a competence, and desiring to abandon the severer labors of an agriculturalist, purchased a lot, and built thereon a convenient house in Monticello, moved thither the same year, and will probably make it his permanent home.

The view from his balcony is beautiful in the extreme. The surrounding country, dotted with villages and interspersed with fine farm residences, lies spread out like a vast amphitheater, and when spring spreads her carpet of green over the earth, and decks the forests with emerald and the trees in white and pink, a more magnificent landscape can scarcely be found in any country.

Mr. Whittemore married August 31, 1841, Miss Harriet M. Eaton of Fitz William, Cheshire County, New Hampshire. Her father was John Eaton, a native of Lancaster, Massachusetts. They have had no issue, but have adopted several children, giving them a home, and educating them until they were able to care for themselves. Some of them are married, and are well settled in life.

Mr. Whittemore has for many years been an active member of the Congregational Church, and has manifested a lively interest in the Sabbath school cause, contributing of his means for the spread of the gospel and the evangelization of the world.

HUGH BOWEN came from Ohio to Jones County in 1836, and settled at a place which he named "Bowen's Prairie."

He was a bachelor, and erected his cabin in the edge of the timber, near where Barrett Whittemore now lives.

He took the first census of Jones County in 1839–40, was the first sheriff of said county, and afterwards held the office of assessor.

At the beginning of his political career he was a whig, but afterwards became a democrat.

He finally went to Colorado, where he died about 1869.

Doctor BENJAMIN F. ROLFE.—Doctor Rolfe was born at Chelsea, Orange County, Vermont, September 8th, 1821. When twenty years of age determined to adopt the profession of medicine, and in 1845 graduated at Castleton Medical College, Vermont. Went to New York City, and for a time was Junior Walker of the New York City Hospital. In May, 1847, went to Troup County, Georgia, and commenced the practice of his profession. In 1849 went to California, and remained there until December, 1853, when he returned to the States, and for a year visited Texas and Louisiana, returning to Vermont in 1854. In the Fall of that year came to Beloit, Wisconsin, where in 1855 he was married to Miss Mary J. Button, of Kenosha, Wisconsin. In 1856, after a short stop at Elkader, came to Stacyville, where he has since resided. In the Spring of 1857 his wife died, leaving one child, Alice M. In January, 1863, he married Miss Sarah M. Addington, of Stacyville. By his present wife has had two children, Paul and Edith.

The Doctor is at present carrying on a large farm and practicing his profession.

ROBERT ASHURST RYNERSON was born in Mercer County, Kentucky, December 28, 1823.

Of his ancestors, the first emigrant to America came from Holland, and settled in New Jersey, before the Revolution, and some of his descendants participated in that war.

His grandfather's name was Barney Rynerson, who married Anna Banta and had twelve children. He left New Jersey and was among the early pioneers who followed Daniel Boone into Kentucky, and settled in the same vicinity.

Mr. Rynerson's grandfather, Ashurst, on his mother's side, came from Virginia to Kentucky, and settled at Bryant's Station, near Lexington, a place rendered memorable by the siege which its inhabitants sustained in August, 1782, by the Indians under the outlaw and renegade, Girty. A large number in the stockade were members of this family.

Second Generation.

Barney Rynerson (or Reynerson—German spelling, Aeynerson), had the following family:

I. ABRAHAM married a Miss Dommaree.
II. ISAAC, twin with Abraham, married and had a family.
III. JACOB, born Aug. 11, 1788, in Kentucky, married Mary (or Polly) Ashurst about 1809 or '10, and had thirteen children. He was a farmer and Baptist preacher, and preached in Kentucky, having the charge of several churches; and when he moved to Indiana he continued his labors in various churches. He was an acceptable speaker, and a man of power and great natural eloquence in the pulpit, and always attracted large audiences. He never received a salary, nor any compensation for his services.

He was drafted in the war of 1812, and participated in the battle of New Orleans under General Jackson. He died at New Winchester, Indiana, May 26, 1857, greatly beloved and lamented by the community. His wife survived him. She was a devoted mother, and performed well her duties amid the trials of pioneer life. Her constant labors and exposures induced a disease that made her an invalid for fourteen years, and she finally died in Kansas and is buried in Osage County, at Burlingame.

IV. ANNA, married a Boswell.
V. RACHEL, married a Mr. Tarhoon.
VI. SAMUEL, married and had a family.
VII. JANE, married a Millegan.
VIII. HENRY, unmarried.
IX. CHARITY, married a Keller.
X. JOHN, married a Cunningham.
XI. PETER, married a Lillard.
XII. CHRISTOPHER, married a Wasley.

There were probably two more in this family, names not remembered.

Third Generation.

Jacob Rynerson, the third son of Barney and father of the subject of this sketch, had the following family:

I. JACOB, born May 11, 1811, married Mary Miles and had two children; resides in Kansas and experienced some hard times in the early settlement.

II. JOEL H., born Nov. 18, 1812, married first, Nancy Dunlap; second, Mrs. Lane; resides in Missouri. He was in the Union army during the Rebellion.

III. ISAAC N., born Oct 4, 1814, married Mary Harrison and had one child, Ellen. He was a physician, and graduated at the Medical College at Indianapolis, Indiana. He was also a member of the Legislature of Indiana, and held other offices. As a member of the Baptist church he was a great worker in the Sunday school, and his essays and addresses were of a high order. Some of them were published in the Associational Minutes in Illinois, whither he had moved, and where he died April 14, 1873. In an essay on "The Effect of Sunday School Training of Children on the Character of a Nation," some of his sentences are worthy of preservation. That "the laws of a nation are but reflections from the national conscience;" that "they can not rise superior to its theology;" that "the national conscience is but the aggregated, fixed ideas of the people," are thoughts worthy of our noblest orators.

IV. SARAH, born Nov. 5, 1816, married Larkin Campbell; has two children; resides in Kansas.

V. JANE, born Aug. 16, 1818, married Peter long; has two children; resides in Kansas.

VI. ELIZA, born July 23, 1820, died young.

VII. MARY E., born April 4, 1822, died aged 17.

VIII. ROBERT A., born Dec. 28, 1823, married, Oct. 27, 1853, Rachel J. McVay, who was born Sept. 25, 1837. They have had seven children. At the age of nine he moved with his parents from Kentucky to Indiana (1832), where he remained until he attained his majority, and then migrated to Jones County, Iowa, and located on Bowen's Prairie in 1845. At that time the country was new, and he took up several tracts of land—one where the town was laid out—but sold them again. His design was to establish a nursery in Iowa and to introduce choice fruit, and he opened the first nursery of grafted fruit north of Davenport in that state. At present he has about 100,000 trees of the best varieties. He also carries on farming—is a friend of education, President of the School Board, and an advocate of political and religious freedom. His family is given below.

IX. JAMES H., born Feb. 7, 1826, married Charlotte T. Duckworth; has six children. He was in the Union army during the Rebellion.

X. HENRY, born Jan. 7, 1828, died young.

XI. WILLIAM H., born Oct. 9, 1829, married Ellen Tichnor; has five children; resides in Illinois.

XII. MARTHA L., born April 11, 1832, married Ruben Johnson; has two children; resides in Kansas. Her filial devotion to her mother, and her watchful care over her during a protracted illness, is worthy of all praise.

XIII. FRANCIS MARION, born Feb. 8, 1835, was in the Union army, and died at Memphis, June 28, 1863.

Fourth Generation.

ROBERT A. RYNERSON married RACHEL J. MCVAY.

Children.

I. ISAAC E., born Sept. 27, 1854, died young.
II. THOMAS J., born March 27, 1856.
III. FRANCES A., born Nov. 6, 1857.
IV. LAURA C., born March 8, 1860.
V. CASSIUS C., born Oct. 8, 1861.
VI. MARY J., born Oct. 19, 1863.
VII. EDITH A., born Oct. 19, 1869.

Honorable GEORGE W. LOVELL, State Senator of Jones County, Iowa, was born in Windham County, Vermont, December 9, 1818.

His ancestors came from England to America before the revolution.

He was the son of Willard Lovell, a substantial farmer of Vermont, and Zaviah Taft, his wife, of Uxbridge, Massachusetts, whose mother was a Rawson, a family of well known reputation in New England.

Mr. Lovell was educated in the public schools of Vermont, and was well versed in the common English branches, natural sciences, surveying, geometry and the higher mathematics.

In 1835, while in his seventeenth year, the family moved to Kalamazoo, Michigan, and engaged in farming. Upon attaining his twentieth year his father died (1839) and he was left in charge of the home farm, and continued in that business as long as he remained in Michigan.

He was elected Supervisor of Kalamazoo about 1844, and held that office five or six years, and in 1852, was elected a member of the House of Representatives in that state, and was re-elected in 1854, holding the office four years, and performing its duties to the satisfaction of his constituency.

The same year he purchased land in Jones County, Iowa, and in 1870, settled in Wayne Township, where shortly after his arrival he was chosen supervisor. He subsequently moved to Monticello and engaged in the banking business.

In 1871 he was elected mayor of that city and was re-elected in 1872.

The same year he was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Judge McKean in the Senate of Iowa, and in 1873 he was re-elected for the full term of four years. His unprecedented majority in his own city, under the circumstances, was an ample attestation of his popularity in both political parties. His watchfulness and success in conserving the interests of his constituents has always been characteristic of his public services.

Honorable REUBEN NOBLE, Judge of the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District of Iowa, is a native of Mississippi, born in Adams County, near Natchez, April 14, 1821. His father emigrated to Jersey County, Illinois, in 1833, where the subject of this sketch remained, receiving his early education at the common schools, till 1839, when he formed the resolution to more completely educate himself, and accordingly, with the permission of his father, left home to attend a mutual labor school, under the charge of Dr. Nelson, near Quincy, Adams County, Illinois. Here he attended school and read law as he had opportunity till 1842, paying for his board by working mornings, evenings and Saturdays. During this period he was obliged to practice the most rigid economy, the sum total of his finances not exceeding fifty dollars, thirty of which he earned by working on a farm, and the balance was loaned him by his brother. He read law with Edward H. Buckley, Esq., of Adams County, Ill.

In May, 1842, he removed to Fairplay, Grant County, Wisconsin, and commenced the practice of law, having been admitted to the bar at Mineral Point, Iowa County, Wisconsin. He practiced law in Grant County till the Fall of 1843, when he removed to Iowa, and settled at Garnavillo, then Jacksonville, among the earliest settlers of that place. The county seat had just been removed from Prairie La Porte, now Guttenburg, to Jacksonville, and a man by the name of John Banfil had gone over from Prairie du Chien and erected a hotel at the new seat of justice for Clayton County. Mr. Banfil and Mr. Noble constituted at that time the entire population of the place. A law office was at once added to the hotel, being a room in the same, which Judge Noble occupied in the practice of his profession for about one year.

The summer previous to his arrival a temporary court house had been erected and fitted for the District Court and county business. On the first Monday in October, 1843, Hon. T. S. Wilson, of Dubuque, then district judge, held the first court in the new court house at Garnavillo, at which term Mr. Noble appeared and enrolled his name on the records as an attorney and counselor at law for Clayton County.

At that time the County of Clayton was bounded on the south by Dubuque and Delaware, east by the Mississippi, north by British America, and west by the Rocky Mountains. Through the whole of this vast territory there were several forts garrisoned by United States troops, and in the vicinity of which were Indian Missions, for the purpose of educating and civilizing the various tribes around them, while the American Fur Company had its trading posts scattered at every available point, to traffic in peltries and furs. All along the Mississippi, the Turkey and the Yellow Rivers, and the belts of timber that skirted these rivers and their tributaries, were little groups of settlements, and from all these, at the October elections, after Mr. Noble's arrival, the county was able to poll one hundred and fifty votes.

Among all these settlements and people quite a large traffic had sprung up in dealing in claims, mining, boatwood, farming, supplying corn, beef, oats and hay for the forts and missions, and in whisky, blankets and ponies for the Indians. Here money was plenty in proportion to the population, and as might be expected, all these various branches of business would furnish the courts both with civil and criminal business, and enable a lawyer with ordinary economy to make a living. The United States paid all the courts and all the legislature in those territorial days.

Such was the state of things under which Judge Noble began his career, as a lawyer, in this county over thirty years ago. He has practiced law continuously in this county ever since, thus furnishing an example of a man who has stuck steadily to his profession or business for almost a third of a century, through all the fluctuations and temptations to change incident to a new country. As the early settlements increased, and new counties were formed, he gradually extended his practice to them, until it was probably the largest of any attorney's in the state.

For more than thirty years he has traveled from county to county, across trackless prairies, encountering the most intense cold and the driving storm, only to perform on his arrival at the courts whole days and nights of the most intense labor, without rest or sleep; and in all his cases ever true and faithful to his clients.

Like many others of his profession, Mr. Noble took an early and decided stand in state and national politics, and although earnest and outspoken in his opinions, was never in his life a strong partisan. Prior to 1850 he was elected prosecuting attorney for the county, which office he held but one term, refusing a re-election. In 1854 he was elected as a Free Soil candidate to the State Legislature, and upon its organization was elected Speaker of the House, and re-elected Speaker at the extra session of 1855. His impartial conduct while Speaker of the House won him many friends throughout the state, and from that to the present he has stood in the front rank of the principal and able men of Iowa.

In 1855 he was chosen with General Warren one of the Republican Electors of the State at large, but declined the nomination on the ground that he did not feel able to bear the expense and burden of a state canvass, to the neglect of his private affairs.

During the same year he was strongly urged by the Republicans of this congressional district to accept their nomination for Congress, which had he done, he would have been triumphantly elected; but he declined and gave the weight of his influence to the late Honorable Timothy Davis, who was elected.

During the Rebellion he always maintained a strong and decided feeling for the preservation of the whole Union, and contributed liberally both in time and money to raise means for the support of the army. But towards the last of the war, feeling that it had been unnecessarily prolonged for purposes of gain and speculation, and being at all times opposed to the shedding of human blood, he thought the matter might be compromised and the Union saved. For this spirit of philanthropy, so excellent before and since the war, but which the nation could not tolerate in that struggle, he suffered disfavor in the minds of some.

In 1867 he was nominated by the Democrats as their candidate for this Congressional District, with Honorable William B. Allison as his competitor. He took the stump and made a able and vigorous campaign, but was defeated in the election.

The terrible financial revolution which came upon the country in 1857, found him with a large amount of unproductive real estate on his hands, and largely in debt for the purchase money. This large debt was enough to discourage any living man, and drive him to despair, ruin and bankruptcy; but he only redoubled his energy, enlarged his practice, worked more hours, and by these efforts he has saved his honor, paid every dollar of his large indebtedness, and has to-day a nice little property that he can call his own.

Judge Noble has always been an active man in public affairs throughout his whole professional career; and has an acute, studious and well furnished legal mind, which has done much to shape the jurisprudence of the country. He has always been bold and outspoken in the expression of his opinions on all questions relating to public interest, and as a representative of his profession has stood in the front rank in this section of Iowa.

As a compliment to his high standing and eminent qualifications as a jurist, the citizens of the Tenth Judicial District elected him to the office of district judge in the Fall of 1874 by a majority of about two thousand, in a district largely Republican. A friend writing of his election, says: "He comes to the bench with the vote of every member of the bar in this county, without regard to politics, and by a vote in his county and district unheard of in the history of political elections. He has therefore no friends to reward, and no enemies to punish. He brings with him a world of experience in the law and a life-long knowledge of men, and these coupled with his high sense of honor and his discriminating powers of right and justice, will make him an impartial judge and a discriminating public servant."

Judge Noble was married in June, 1844, in Jersey County, Illinois, to Miss Harriet C. Douglas, of that place, by whom he has had seven children, five of whom are living. Although attending to the duties of his office he resides on a farm about five miles northwest of McGregor.

Honorable LAFAYETTE BIGELOW, proprietor of the Bigelow House, McGregor, was born and brought up in Chenango County, New York, and moved to Iowa in 1849, among the first settlers of McGregor. He was then a young married man, having married at Ithaca, New York, in June, 1849, Miss Lucinda Ford, and with his young wife set out to seek his fortune in a new country.

He arrived at M'Gregor's Landing on the 18th day of June, 1849. At that time there were only two or three buildings in the place. He bought out a man by the name of Gould, then occupying a part of the McGregor House, and opened the first hotel in the place, which he continued to keep about fifteen months.

In 1851 he purchased a quarter section of land in Giard Township, now known as the Bigelow farm, and entered three hundred acres adjoining, which he improved and built a house upon, and occupied till 1864, when he removed to Chicago and engaged in the grocery business.

In December, 1864, Mrs. Bigelow died in Chicago, and the following year he sold out, and with his children, went on a visit to his father's in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, where he remained and took care of his parents till 1867.

In January, 1867, he was married to his second wife, Mrs. Julia Swan, relict of the late M. C. Swan, of Blossburg, Pennsylvania, and daughter of Honorable L. B. Smith.

In August, 1867, he came with his wife to Elkader, Clayton County, and began life there by opening the Boardman House, and commencing hotel keeping. In 1870 he purchased the house of H. D. Evans & Co., and carried it on successfully for six years, when he sold out to Wade & Day. Removing to McGregor in August, 1874, he purchased of the same firm the hotel known as the Straw House, now the Bigelow House, and refitting and furnishing it entirely anew, opened it as a first-class hotel, which he is now conducting to the satisfaction of the traveling public generally.

As a landlord he is peculiarly adapted to the situation, sparing no pains to accommodate his guests, and being of that courteous and obliging disposition which pleases and wins customers. Both in public and private life he has won a high degree of confidence and esteem.

He was elected to the Legislature on the first Republican ticket of the county, with Honorable Reuben Noble, in 1854, and re-elected in 1856, serving two consecutive terms as a member of the House.

His two and only children, by his first wife, are both living. His daughter, Stella, now Mrs. William G. Sears, resides in Milwaukee; his son, Lafayette, Jr., still lives with his father at McGregor.

Honorable CHARLES T. GRANGER, Judge of the Tenth Judicial Circuit of Iowa, was born in Monroe County, New York, October 9, 1835. He removed with his parents to Ohio when he was a small child, and was brought up near Cleveland and in that city till the age of thirteen. He then removed to McHenry County, Illinois, where he remained till twenty years of age, and was there married to Miss Sarah H. Warner, of Antioch, Illinois. In November, 1854, he came to Allamakee County, and taught school that Winter, returning to Lake County, Illinois, in August, 1855. He remained there, attending school, teaching, and reading law as he had opportunity, till 1860. In March, 1860, he returned to Waukon, and entered the law office of Hatch & Wilber; and in October, 1860, was admitted to practice under Judge E. H. Williams, District Judge. From October, 1860, to October, 1865, he resided in Mitchell County, Iowa, two years of which he was engaged in teaching, and was elected County Superintendent of Schools.

Mrs. Granger died in Mitchell County, on the 2d day of June, 1862.

Mr. Granger aided in recruiting a company of volunteers, of which he was chosen captain. The company was organized as Company K, 27th Iowa Infantry; and Captain Granger served till the close of the war, doing good and faithful service to his country.

On the 17th of November, 1865, he entered into partnership in the practice of law with his former preceptor, Hon. L. O. Hatch, at Waukon, and continued three years, during which time Mr. Hatch was elected District Attorney for the Tenth Judicial District, and served two years, resigning on the first day of January, 1869, when Judge Granger was appointed by Governor Merrill in his stead; served out the appointment; was then elected for one year, and re-elected for the full term of four years, without opposition, in 1872. In the Fall of 1874 he was the nominee of the Republican party for Congress, but was beaten by 59 votes.

He was married to his second wife (formerly Miss Anna Maxwell, of Waukon) on the 15th of April, 1868, and by this marriage has two children.

Honorable HENRY DAYTON, Representative from Allamakee County, is a native of Saratoga County, New York, born September 3, 1836. Brought up in his native place till twenty-one years of age, he received his education at the New York Conference Seminary and at Fort Edward Collegiate Institute, and read law at Batesville, Arkansas, and at Decorah, Iowa, and was admitted to the bar in 1862. In that year he settled at Lansing and engaged in surveying, as County Surveyor, etc., which he continued about eight years—till 1870, in which year he removed to Waukon, and commenced the practice of the law, which he has ever since continued.

In the Fall of 1872 he was elected to the State Legislature, and re-elected in 1874. He was elected to the Legislature on the Democratic ticket.

Mr. Dayton was married in Waukon, May, 1874, to Miss Mary M. Wilcox, formerly of Washington County, New York.

Honorable SIMEON S. POWERS was born in Chautauqua County, New York, April 7, 1836, where his early life was spent till the age of nineteen in attending the common schools and working on a farm, one year of which was spent in studying the higher branches at the academy in Jamestown. In 1857 he commenced the study of the law at Panama, New York, with Hon. W. L. Sessions, member of Congress from the Thirty-third District of New York from 1872 to 1875. In 1859 he entered the Law College at Cleveland, Ohio, graduating therefrom in 1860. He then removed west, to Kent's Station, Indiana, where he practised law two years, and in 1862 recruited a company for the military service, but, on account of ill health, was rejected by the examining surgeon.

In the Fall of 1862 he came to Iowa, settling in Clayton County, where he worked on a farm and taught school, with a view to the recovery of his health, till 1870, when he removed to Postville and opened a law office, since which his success has been rapid and marked. Beginning with nothing, he has acquired in a few years a larger business than he can well manage, although his energies in his profession are untiring.

Mr. Powers is now Mayor of the town of Pottsville and President of the Board of Education. He has taken an active interest in Masonry, and is Master of Brotherly Love Lodge No. 204.

He was married January 2, 1859, to Miss Helen A. Farrand, of Panama, New York, and has three children.

Honorable JOHN S. MOTT.—This gentleman is an extensive lumber dealer at Postville, Allamakee County. He was born on the 21st of May, 1823, in Rockland, Sullivan County, New York, a mountainous region on the borders of the lumber district of the Delaware River; where, together with farming on a small scale, he was taught the lumber business in childhood. He had scarcely attained his sixteenth year when he began to pilot rafts down the tributaries of the Delaware, on their way to Philadelphia, where the lumber of that region chiefly found a market; and until 1865 he was engaged in lumbering and farming—following one as a winter and spring and the other as a summer occupation.

While in Rockland he represented his town several years on the Board of Supervisors. His health failing in 1855, he resorted to the water-cure establishment under Dr. Jackson, at Glen Haven, New York, and was greatly benefited by the treatment he received. Taking a deep interest in the Union cause during the late rebellion, and not feeling able himself to endure the hardships of war, he employed a substitute, to whom he paid $1,100 for enlisting in the service, at a time when the "draft" was not anticipated.

In 1865 he came to Iowa, and settled in Bloomfield Township, Winneshiek County, where he engaged in farming till 1867, when he removed to Postville, having built a house there the previous year. Postville was then just starting, and Mr. Mott is one of the oldest business men of the place. During that year he entered into partnership with Hayte & Burdick in the lumber business. He continued with them three years, when he bought out their interest. In 1872 he also bought out Seley & Shaw, another lumber firm, and thus had entire control of the lumber interest of the place till March, 1873. At that time another lumber yard was started. Mr. Mott has been very successful, and is still doing a large business in all branches of the lumber trade.

When the Town of Postville was organized, the citizens elected him the first mayor. In 1871 he laid out an addition to the town, and has since done considerable in dealing in real estate.

He was married February 16, 1853, to Miss Almina Dodge, of Rockland, New York, by whom he has had four children.

THEODORE W. BURDICK, Cashier of the First National and Savings Banks of Decorah, is a native of Pennsylvania, born October 7, 1836. He removed with his parents to Winneshiek County at the age of seventeen, having previously acquired a good English education, his father having intended him for a collegiate course at Oberlin. The removal to the West, however, interfered with that arrangement; and on their arrival at Decorah, in the Spring of 1853, he was employed as the first school teacher in the place, the first school house having just then been completed. The following Spring his father was elected County Treasurer, and he took charge of the office and also that of County Recorder, discharging practically the duties of both till he became of age in 1857. At the next election following he was elected County Treasurer, and filled the office in a most faithful and satisfactory manner till 1862, when he resigned to enter the army. He was commissioned Captain of Company D, 6th Iowa Cavalry, in which capacity he served three years—till 1865. Four brothers besides himself were in the army, and three of them lost their lives in their country's service.

On his return from the army, Mr. Burdick purchased an interest in the First National Bank of Decorah, of which he was elected cashier in February, 1866. During his connection with the bank the present elegant bank building was erected, at a cost of about $15,000. While engaged in banking, he is also operating quite extensively in real estate. Since the war he has held no public office, but has devoted himself exclusively to business. Both in his public and private relations, for a period of over twenty years, since he became a citizen of Decorah, he has been noted as a gentleman of honor and integrity, of good business talents and irreproachable character. Having a considerable taste for literature and private study, he has collected a library of about twelve hundred volumes, embracing the leading classical and standard works.

He was married in 1858 to Miss Nancy Graves, of Freeport, Winneshiek County, and has four children living.

B. O. DAHLY, the popular millinery merchant of Decorah, is a native of Norway. He was born on the first day of December, 1824. His parents gave him a good common-school education. In 1844 he immigrated to this country, and spent about nine years working as a mechanic in Chicago. His first venture in mercantile business was at Whitewater, Wisconsin, where he carried on business nearly two years with indifferent success. In 1854 he came to Winneshiek County, Iowa, and identified his interest for a time with the prospective town of Freeport, which, it was thought, had some prospect of becoming the seat of justice of the county. He erected a store, hotel and other buildings; but the county seat question being decided in favor of Decorah, Freeport declined; and Mr. Dahly, failing to see any prospect of success there, went to Minnesota and started business both at Preston and Rushford, in Fillmore County. At the former place, the county seat, he erected a store, but he had hardly got started when the financial crisis of 1857 proved disastrous to his enterprises, and in the Fall of that year he removed to Decorah. He was now without means, but full of energy and determination to succeed in business somewhere. Fortunately his last situation was well chosen, for Decorah, having conducted business on a sound and reliable basis, was comparatively prosperous throughout the panic. Here Mr. Dahly started a small millinery and fancy goods business, which, following with energy, tact and business enterprise, has proved a remarkable success. That small beginning has grown into one of the most extensive retail millinery establishments in the Northwest. In getting this business started, Mr. Dahly owes much to his first wife, whose good taste and practical acquaintance with millinery rendered him valuable assistance.

In 1858 he built a stone store east of the Winneshiek House, which he occupied with his business till 1866, when having finished his present building, he occupied it with the finest stock of goods ever opened in the place. He has continued to add to it from time to time, as the increasing demands of trade have required. Here can be found every thing in the line of millinery, straw goods, ribbons, flowers, plumes, silk, velvets, fancy dress goods, cloakings, shawls and all sorts of furnishing articles for ladies, children and misses. None but a truly energetic business man could make it pay to carry so large a stock of this class of goods outside of Chicago or Milwaukee. Some idea of the business may be formed from the fact that sixteen persons are constantly employed in the store. Mr. Dahly is purely a Yankeized Norwegian, and yet no man loves his native country better than he does. Whenever there is any celebration or any thing connected with his former home, you will be sure to find him at the head of it. We cordially ask all who visit Decorah to call at O. B. Dahly's emporium of fashion, and see for themselves if they do not say with us that it is the finest establishment they have seen west of the lakes.

Mr. Dahly's first marriage was in Chicago, in 1848, to Miss Margaret Knudson, of Milwaukee, who died in 1868, leaving one son. He was married the second time in Decorah, in 1871, to Miss Caroline Shuttleworth, and by this marriage also has one child.

Colonel WILLIAM THURLOW BAKER, of Decorah, is a native of Kent, England, and was born September 26, 1824. He is a son of Dr. John Baker, who was a surgeon in the British army and had a family of five sons, all of whom have been in the service in British India. One of them (John Baker) after receiving an education at King's College, London, came to this country in 1853, and during the war of the Rebellion served three years in the 1st Iowa Cavalry.

Four of the brothers are at present residing in Decorah, and engaged in business. The second brother, Edward, owns property in this vicinity, but is residing in India, where he holds an office in the British civil service.

Colonel Baker came to Decorah on a visit to his brother in 1864, and was so well pleased with the healthiness of the climate and the enterprise of this young and vigorous city, that he was induced to remain and cast in his lot with the citizens. He was then directly from India, where he had held important positions in the British service. At twenty years of age he was staff officer of a general of division, and afterwards received the commission of brigade major and assistant adjutant general; and, on the annexation of the Punjaub, was appointed assistant commissioner, invested with magisterial and judicial functions, under Sir John Lawrence, Governor General of India. During the Sepoy mutiny he raised and commanded a regiment, which he held till he finally retired from the service in 1864.

On first arriving in Decorah, Colonel Baker engaged in real estate and insurance business. In 1869 the Winneshiek Manufacturing Association was organized, and he became Secretary and one of the Directors. He is still Secretary, Director and Treasurer, though the name of the association was changed to The Decorah Woolen Mill Company, in 1873.

Captain CHARLES G. BAKER, brother of the above, and President of the Decorah Woolen Mill Company, was seven years in the British navy, and received the commission of captain in the military service. In the Peninsular and Oriental campaigns, where he served as second officer, he distinguished himself in volunteering to take a jolly-boat of the steamship, which was fast on the rocks off the cost of China, and to obtain assistance from Hong Kong, by which the crew and passengers were all saved, and was made the recipient of a valuable gold chronometer by the company and other valuable testimonials by the passengers, besides promotion to the position of chief officer.

In 1850 Captain Baker entered the service of the Honorable East India Company, taking charge of a squadron of cavalry attached to a regiment of Sikhs, who, proving loyal during the mutiny of 1857, rendered most valuable service; and it was for brilliant and gallant services in the defeat of a greatly superior force of the enemy that Captain Baker was decorated by Her Majesty with the Victoria Cross,—the prize most coveted by any British soldier.

Having lost his health during the mutiny, Captain Baker came to this country on furlough, after having been promoted to the command of his regiment and subsequently to the position of Deputy Inspector General of Police in the Bengal Presidency, and finally retired from the service to make his home in Iowa.

LEONARD STANDRING, Esq., is a native of Louville, Lewis County, New York, where he was born April 1, 1835. Receiving his education at the Louville Academy, he entered the Bank of Louville at the age of fourteen and remained in that situation six years.

In September, 1855, he came to Decorah, Iowa, and in that year, in company with the late William L. Eastman, former President of the Bank of Louville, and E. E. Cooley, Esq., established what is now the First National Bank of Decorah, then called the Decorah Bank. He remained in this business till 1859.

The year of the opening of this bank was noted in the history of Decorah as that of the establishment of the Turkey River branch of the United States Land Office in that place. It was a time of great excitement in land speculation. Crowds of eager land-buyers gathered here from all the country around, and money poured in in almost fabulous quantities. The office was opened on Christmas, 1855, and that occasion had induced a good deal of drinking and unusual hilarity on the part of the crowd, so much so as to make it necessary that a sober and trusty custodian should be selected to take care of the money and valuable papers in their possession. Mr. Standring was the man chosen to fulfil that arduous and responsible duty. But where should a safe deposit be found? A dry-goods box was obtained as the best substitute, and into this the motley crowd began to empty their treasures—warrants, money, belts of gold, shot-bags of coin—till all had been deposited; and over this Mr. Standring stood guard till the equilibrium of the crowd had been restored. Out of that box was counted the next morning over half a million dollars in money and warrants.

This incident furnishes a good illustration of the estimate placed upon Mr. Standring's integrity at that early day, when settlers in a new country were not always scrupulous as to the character of their acts. In all his public and private life Mr. Standring has maintained the same reputation.

In 1860 he commenced farming, on account of his health, purchasing at that time forty acres of land near the city limits. He has added to it from time to time, till his present farm embraces five hundred acres. Being a man of study and progressive ideas, he has applied the best practical results of his knowledge to improved methods of farming, and to furnishing his house with the appliances and comforts of the best social life in the city or the suburbs.

Mr. Standring was married to Miss Mary Protheroe, of Decorah, on the 28th of October, 1858, and has three interesting daughters.

FREDERICK ANDROS, M.D., was born in Berkeley, Massachusetts, September 14, 1804. His early life was spent in his native place, where, under the tuition of his father, Rev. Thomas Andros, he prepared for college, entering Brown University when in the fourteenth year of his age, being the youngest student in the institution, and graduating in 1822—from the Medical Department in 1826. Thus he finished his literary college course at eighteen, and received his medical diploma at the age of twenty-two.

In 1833 he came to the Territory of Michigan, which, at that time, embraced Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, the Territory of Dakota, and indeed all the Northwest to the Rocky Mountains and the British Possessions. Dubuque was the only point settled in Iowa. Here Dr. Andros made his first stand, opening an office for the practice of medicine in the Fall of 1833, and continuing till 1837,

At this period, in consequence of ill-health, he removed to Clayton County and engaged in farming. His nearest neighbor at that time was Robert Hatfield, who lived thirteen miles distant. He continued farming till 1845, when he removed to Fort Atkinson, then the military outpost of Iowa, under command of Captain Sumner, having received the appointment of Surgeon at the Fort, and also of Physician to the Winnebago Agency. Here he remained in the discharge of his duties till the Indians were removed and the Fort vacated in 1848, going thence with the command to Long Prairie, Minnesota. He resigned at Blue Earth, Minnesota, in 1854, and during that Winter was a member of the Minnesota Legislature.

In 1861 he settled at McGregor, where he remained in the practice of medicine till the Fall of 1874, when the river location proving unfavorable to his health, he removed to Decorah, where he has since practiced his profession in partnership with Dr. J. W. Curtis.

In this hasty outline we have failed to notice half the important incidents in the eventful career of one of the oldest and most highly respected pioneers of Northern Iowa.

While living in Clayton County, Dr. Andros filled for many years almost every office in the gift of the people. He was first Clerk of the District Court, Register of Deeds for the County, and a member of the Legislature at Iowa City in 1843. He is the father of five children, three of whom are living, having married Miss Eliza Bunker, his present wife, in Sherburne, New York, in 1830.

Honorable EZEKIEL E. COOLEY.—Born in Victory, Cayuga County, New York, January 12, 1827; brought up there till the age of thirteen, when he removed to St. Lawrence County, and there received an academic education. At the age of seventeen he commenced teaching school, which he followed as an occupation about five years; removing in 1847 to Cynthiana, Kentucky, where he taught and read law with Judge Trimble of that place, and was admitted to the bar in 1849.

Returning to Ogdensburg, New York, he read law another year with Honorable A. B. James, now one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of New York, and on the 2d of September, 1850, was admitted to practice in the New York courts, and commenced his professional career in the town of Hermon, St. Lawrence County. Soon after removing to Ogdensburg, he practiced there till October, 1854.

At the last named date, he removed to Decorah, Iowa, where he has ever since continued the practice of his profession, with the exception of one year spent in the army.

In the Spring of 1855 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Winneshiek County. On the incorporation of the Town of Decorah he was elected President of the Council, having been efficient in the matter of securing the town incorporation and the management of the business connected therewith.

In 1857 he was elected a member of the first legislature under the new state constitution, and served with marked ability in the house.

In 1861 he was appointed Postmaster at Decorah, and held the office till he resigned in 1863.

In September, 1864 President Lincoln appointed him Commissary of Subsistence in the cavalry department with the rank of captain.

In October, 1865, he was brevetted major by Andrew Johnson for gallant and meritorious services, and in November following was honorably discharged.

In civil life he has been engaged in all enterprises for the promotion of the interests of his city and county.

In 1868 and 1870, he was warmly supported by the Republicans of his county for the nomination to Congress, but the other counties of the district carried the majority for his competitor, who was duly elected.

For the past three years Mr. Cooley has been Counsel for the Board of Supervisors. He has also held the office of City Attorney. Few men in this section of Iowa have achieved more eminent success in the legal profession, or made for themselves a better public and private record than the subject of this brief sketch.

He was married at Dubuque, in 1856, to Miss Jane M. Rhodes, then of that city, and has two sons.

Honorable GEORGE R. WILLETT, of Decorah, was born in Lacadia, Province of Quebec, November 11, 1826. His parents were both Americans, though living in Canada at the time of his birth. He resided in Canada until twenty-six years of age, receiving his education under Rev. Joseph Braithwaite, a graduate of Oxford, England, and following manufacturing with his father and brother at Chambly, Province of Quebec.

In 1855 he commenced the study of law at Champlain, New York, and after further reading and attending the Law School at Albany, was admitted to the bar in that city in the winter of 1856–7. Returning to Champlain, he practiced till the Fall of 1857, when he came West and settled at Decorah. Immediately on settling here he commenced the practice of his profession, which he has continued ever since, with the exception of a short time spent in the army during the Rebellion.

The first company in this section, namely, Company C, Third Iowa Infantry, was raised mainly by his instrumentality. In the Fall of 1861 he was disabled by a gunshot wound in the knee, and consequently resigned and came home.

In 1864 he was elected County Judge of Winneshiek County, and held the office four years, till the expiration of 1868.

In 1872 he was elected to the State Legislature, for two years, to fill the unfinished term of Dr. Bulis, and re-elected in 1873 for the full term of four years. During the Winter of 1874 he was elected President, pro tem., of the Senate. He was Chairman of the Committee on Constitutional Amendments, and member of the Committee on the Judiciary, Railroads, Insurance and Judicial Districts.

In local as well as general interests, Judge Willett has always been active and public spirited. From 1868 to 1872, he was President of the Winnesheik Woolen Manufacturing Company. He was married at the age of twenty-one to Miss Olinda C. Kellogg, in Champlain, New York.

Colonel A. B. SMEDLEY, the present Master of the State Grange of Iowa, was born in Jefferson County, New York, in 1825. His boyhood was passed in the practical work of the farm. In 1849 he removed to Wisconsin, where he resided until 1862, when he entered the service of his country, serving with distinction until the close of the war.

In 1868 he removed to Cresco, Iowa, where he now resides. He is actively engaged in agriculture and horticulture, giving particular attention to the culture of fruit.

But it is in his connection with the Order of Patrons of Husbandry that Colonel Smedley has been brought most prominently before the people. Always taking a deep interest in agricultural pursuits and all that pertained to the interests of the industrial classes, he was among the first to enrol himself as a member of the Order; and rapidly rose to the highest position in the State Grange, being elected Master at its third annual session. Colonel Smedley is said to have given the unwritten work and the laws and usages of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry more careful study than perhaps any other person in the country. He has written two volumes on the subject of the Jurisprudence of the Order, copies of which have circulated in every state and nearly every county of the Union.

AUGUSTUS BEADLE, Esq., was born in Poughkeepsie, New York, in 1821, residing there until he was twenty-two years of age, receiving his education mostly under private tutors.

In 1843 he went to Kingston, as the Principal of the Princeton Academy, and during the next twelve years was engaged in teaching, lecturing, and literary pursuits generally, receiving, in 1854, the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Rutgers' College.

In 1855 he removed with his family to what is now Afton Township, Howard County, Iowa, where he had previously entered some Government lands, through an agent. Here he opened a farm of some seven hundred acres, a part of which he had purchased in connection with the Western Farm League, a colony which had been formed in New York City. Only about twenty members of this colony, however, made any settlement here. The nearest market was then McGregor, eighty-five miles distant, where Mr. Beadle marketed annually from 3,000 to 4,000 bushels of wheat. The year following he purchased about three thousand acres additional in Howard and adjoining counties, with the expectation that a railroad, then projected from Dubuque to St. Paul, would pass through this locality; but during the financial crash of 1857 the project was abandoned.

In 1861 he initiated a movement which resulted in the building of the McGregor Western Railroad, which was afterwards purchased by the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company, by whom it was completed to St. Paul. In 1864 Mr. Beadle purchased 640 acres of land, and laid out the town of Cresco, whither he removed and where he at present resides. From the starting of the town to the present time he has been closely identified with its interests, taking an active interest in every thing which would add to its advancement and prosperity.

ELISHA GALLUP was born at Melbourne, Sherbrook County, Lower Canada, August 22, 1820. He was raised on a farm. Education at public school limited. At the age of fifteen took sole charge of a flouring mill, and though without previous experience conducted it successfully, and continued at the same place for fifteen years. In 1843, May 8, was married to Miss Mary Lancaster, of Melbourne. In 1859 sold out in Canada and moved to Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, and lived there until 1865, when he moved to Osage, Mitchell County, Iowa, where he at present resides. Has a family of four children—two sons and two daughters.

Since his early youth his greatest study has been of bees, their workings, how to propagate them successfully; and in this regard, after publishing his biography, the Illustrated Bee Journal, published at Indianapolis, Indiana, July, 1870, speaks of him as follows:

"Our readers see in Mr. Gallup a self-made man, and to-day is recognized as the leader of apiculture, standing in the front rank, still advancing, learning some thing every day of his little pets. What a name has he made for himself! His letters have no doubt been read in every county in the United States. You can scarcely find a bee-keeper that has not heard of Gallup; he may be called the Huber of America.

"Gallup's name is known and spoken in every language wherever the little bee is known."

He has been a contributor to most all the leading journals of the United States on apiculture.

About twenty years ago he had occasion, by an almost miraculous cure by water-treatment in his own family, to investigate the merit of such treatment, and after a most careful study and a successful practice, without charges, for about nineteen years, curing the most difficult cases, he has established himself at Osage for the treatment of cases, at the urgent solicitation of numerous friends, some of whom are indebted to him for their lives and present good health.

Judge ARAD HITCHCOCK.—Judge Hitchcock is of a family of four brothers and four sisters; his ancestrage dating back to the early New England stock.

His career, from early boyhood, has been one full of incidents, both startling and amusing, varying from the rough experiences of pioneer life in the West to the comforts and luxuries attendant on a residence in the Puritan New England States. Being possessed of a large amount of vitality, a firm and compact physical organization, and a hardy constitution, in all trials and all circumstances his indomitable will-power, indefatigable energy, constant perseverance and industry combined have carried him through safely and successfully. To him the City of Osage and its citizens owe a debt that can be paid only by the lasting remembrance of the great services he has rendered in all matters of public interest tending to the growth and prosperity of the town. In all matters of benevolence none have given more largely, in matters of charity none more willingly, and in public enterprises has not only been instrumental in founding the proudest institutions of Osage, but to his energy and unsparing assistance they owe their completeness. To no one man does it owe more, if as much, for being the county town and for its business prosperity. Blocks he has built; business houses; founded financial enterprises; has been most influential in securing railroad communication; and been untiring in every effort to advance it; honorable in his connections, and unsparing of aid and assistance.

In fact, he has been one of the pioneer guard of enterprise and sterling worth that left behind the pleasant enjoyments and social comforts of the Eastern States to build up a prosperous country, a promising young city, and at the same time without injury or disregard to the rights and feelings of his fellow-men, accumulate a competency on which to comfortably retire and witness the fruits of his labors.

All this Judge Hitchcock has done, and retains the respect, confidence, friendship and deepest regards of his fellow-citizens of Mitchell County, and, as well, all Northern Iowa; and this department would be incomplete without his name appearing among the representative men that have built up to its present importance the great State of Iowa, and placed it in a position where its future will secure its development as one second to none in the Union.

Judge Hitchcock was born at Westfield, Orleans County, Vermont, October 21, 1811. He received a common-school education, and remained in Vermont until twenty years of age, when he struck out for the then "far West" alone, and settled for a time at Mount Vernon, Knox County, Ohio, where he taught school during the Winter, and during the Summer worked at his trade as a carpenter. In July, 1832, he performed a journey that well displays the disposition of the man, that, no matter how difficult a task he might have before him, his determination was to succeed. He traveled from Mount Vernon, Ohio, to Hennepin, Putnam County, Illinois, a distance of nearly six hundred miles, on foot, and completed the journey at the end of sixteen days. How would a man of twenty-one years at the present time contemplate such a journey? At Hennepin he worked at his trade, and built the first store in that town. He worked about Hennepin until October 28, 1832, when he took a steamer and went to St. Louis, thence up the Ohio to Mount Vernon, suffering severely with fever and ague. In the Winter of 1833 he taught in the same school house he had the Winter before, and in May he returned to Vermont, bought a farm and was there married to Miss Matilda Brown. Then for a time he made quite frequent changes for one of his character of determination and endurance. After a two years' residence in Vermont, he moved to Mount Vernon, Ohio; lived there two years; returned to Vermont; bought a farm. Three years after he went into a mercantile line of life and opened a hotel in Vermont, and three years after sold out and moved to St. John's, Lower Canada. There he conducted the hardware business for about a year and a half, when he sold out to his brother, returned to Westfield, Vermont, bought and settled on the old homestead. After a three years' residence here he sold out, went to Troy, Vermont, opened a store and conducted a hotel. At the end of one year sold out all his interests in Vermont, and in 1855 came to Iowa and settled at Osage, Mitchell County. In the Spring of 1856 his family arrived, and he settled on a farm three and one-half miles southeast from Osage, which place he still owns. Since his residence here he has held the office of County Judge one term, and in 1865 was instrumental in the organization of the Osage National Bank, of which he was for a number of years President. He has dealt largely in real estate and cattle, and continues in a vigorous and busy business life.

Honorable WILLIAM G. DONNAN, was born at West Charlton, New York, June 30, 1834; his early education was received on the farm at the district school, and at the Cambridge Academy; he attended Union College, New York, in 1853, and graduated in 1856. He removed in August, 1856, to Independence, Iowa, where he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1857; in August of that year he was elected Treasurer and Recorder of Buchanan County, and held the office by re-election until 1862, when he entered the Union Army as a private, and was promoted to first lieutenant, breveted captain and major for efficient service in the field, and served to the close of the Rebellion. He was a Member of the State Senate of Iowa from 1868 to 1870; was elected to the Forty-Second Congress as a Republican, re-elected to the Forty-Third, and then declined being a candidate for further re-election.

Honorable F. F. BUTLER.—This gentleman was born on a farm in Hillsborough County, New Hampshire, March 7, 1827. When ten years of age he removed with his parents to Chautauqua County, New York, where he received his early education on the farm, and at the common district school. In 1840 his father removed to Erie, Pennsylvania, where he immediately became a student in the Erie Academy, which he regularly attended for five years, and then taught one winter in the city public schools. The summer he was twenty he engaged in mercantile business, carrying on a trafficking trade with dealers in Buffalo, which he continued for about two years, when he sold out and commenced railroading as an employe of the New York and Erie, with which company he remained sixteen years, fourteen of which he lived in New York, and ran a passenger train in and out of that city.

The Summers of 1865–6 he spent in Wisconsin improving a farm he had bought a number of years previous in Dodge County, and in the Spring of 1867, removed, with his family, to Cedar Falls, Iowa, and located on a farm two and a half miles south of town, where he remained until 1871, when he bought, and moved on to the property in town where he now resides. In March, 1874, he was elected Mayor of the City of Cedar Falls, to which office he was re-elected in 1875, without opposition.

THOMAS WARDALL was born in Thedillethorpe, Lincolnshire, England, August 9, 1815. In 1827 his parents came to the United States and settled at Cincinnati, Ohio, where he served an apprenticeship as a cutler and was educated as a civil engineer, and also as a musician. He studied engineering under Dr. Ray, the author. He served as engineer of the Whitewater Canal in Indiana, for two years, then traveled one year in Europe, returned to the United States, and in 1841 was married to Miss Esther Aller, of Pennsylvania. In 1842 came to Rock County, Wisconsin, settled on a farm and remained until 1854, when he removed to Springfield, Illinois, but came to Mitchell County, Iowa, in 1855, and has since resided in this county. He built the first frame house in the Village of Mitchell, and buried the first white child in the county. Previous to his leaving Rock County, Wisconsin, Mrs. Wardall died, and he was married to Miss Martha L. Thomas, of that county.

Since his residence in Mitchell County, he has made a specialty in experiments in horticultural interests and fruit growing, which have resulted in the discovery of many facts, and if fully published would be of great benefit to the farmers of Northern Iowa; all of which will be given to the public over his signature in a short time. He has been a prominent citizen of the county since his first settlement and been as well a prosperous farmer.

When he went to Rock County, Wisconsin, his earthly possessions were sixty-three cents, and now he can be safely estimated worth more than twenty thousand dollars. Since his first beginning at farming in Mitchell County, he has kept a complete set of books between the farm, its different branches and himself, and finds at the present, on a trial balance an average accumulation of fifty-two cents a day since his commencement. He is planting an orchard of eighty acres, and his purpose is to prove that fruit can be successfully grown in the northern part of Iowa.

Honorable H. W. McNABB.—The subject of this sketch is one of the self-made men of the times. Starting for himself early, with the intent of making his an active business life, has held true to his course and succeeded; not by any stroke of good fortune, but by steady, practical, personal effort, honest dealing and fair and honorable deportment, economy and industry. Although starting for himself with little, by strict business integrity and as strict punctuality in all cases involving promise, appointment or obligation, has built up a high standard of credit, and lives in the possession of a competency well earned, which will be well used and the possessor can retire to private life with the assurance that his life has been judiciously led.

Mr. McNabb is of Scottish ancestry, but was born in Alleghany County, Pennsylvania, May 3, 1829. His early life was spent on a farm, but at the age of fourteen was indentured as an apprentice to the tailoring trade, and served five years. At the termination of his apprenticeship he went to Trumbull County, Ohio, and opened a farm which he conducted for a few years, then embarked in the jewelry business for a time, but in 1857 came to Iowa, and settled at Charles City, in the general dry goods trade, and continued there until 1855. During this time he had been dealing, more or less in real estate, but gave his particular attention to his store. In 1866, however, he came to the conclusion that Osage was the better place to live, disposed of his interests at Charles City, came to Osage and settled, where he has ever been a most respected and enterprising citizen.

Mr. McNabb has been a Republican since the organization of that party, yet has not aspired to political distinction, but has held various minor civil offices, and is the present Mayor of Osage.

He was married March 12, 1851, to Miss Wealthy A. Wright, of Vernon, Trumbull County, Ohio. He is quite largely interested in real estate in both Mitchell and Floyd in addition to his large mercantile establishment in Osage.

H. I. STACY.—Mr. Stacy was born at DeKalb, St. Lawrence County New York, January 9, 1820. He taught school for two years in his native county, went to Ohio and taught there in 1844, and in the Spring of 1845, at the close of his school went to Illinois, and the year following was married to Miss Amelia L. Donaldson, July 1, 1846, at Dover, Illinois. Engaged in mercantile business until the Fall of 1855, and then started for Iowa, traveled many portions of it, and finally in Mitchell County selected about twenty-seven hundred acres of land in the interest of his brother and for himself, and has since resided at Stacyville, which he laid out in 1856, and for him it was named. He has seen the hardships and trials attendant on a pioneer life in Northern Iowa, and now lives in the full enjoyment of a well-spent and successful life. He is at present engaged in carrying on a farm of seven hundred acress—four hundred acres under cultivation—and with his son—B. F. Stacy—a general country store at Stacyville.

S. M. COLE.—Mr. Cole has been not only prominent in settling Howard County, in witnessing its first organization, but has been a pioneer through all the once "Far West." He was born at Penn Yan, New York, April 17, 1815. Had the advantages of a common school education. He started for the West in 1833, passed through Chicago when there was not to exceed one hundred population, and located at Naperville, Illinois, in 1837, and remained there until 1853, when he moved to Freeport, Illinois, and the next year to Howard County, Iowa, New Oregon Township, and pre-empted the farm on which he at present lives. For many years he was agent for Walker's line of stages, and held the agency until the completion of the Milwaukee & St. Paul R.R. December 31, 1834, was married to Miss Susan Crawford, of Penn Yan, New York. He has a family of seven children.

Honorable GEORGE W. BEMIS of Independence, Iowa, was born at Spencer, Worcester County, Massachusetts, on the 13th day of October, 1826. He is a direct descendant of Joseph Bemis, who came from England in 1640, and settled at Watertown, Massachusetts, and from whom has sprung all who bear the name in that part of New England. Edmond Bemis, his great grandfather was a native of Spencer, Massachusetts, where he spent most of his life, and died in December 1810, at the advanced age of ninety. In 1745, he served as a lieutenant at the capture of Louisburg, and as a captain in the Crown Point expedition in 1755–6.

In 1837, when eleven years of age, he emigrated with his father, Eleazer Bemis, to Genesee County, New York, where his father died August 11, 1873, in the eightieth year of his age. Here he resided, being an only son, until after reaching his majority, working on the farm summers, and attending school during the winter months, finishing his education at Cary Collegiate Seminary, Oakfield, Otsego County, New York. Shortly after becoming of age he spent two winters teaching school in Wisconsin, and in 1854 removed to Iowa, and settled at Independence, where he still resides. He engaged in surveying, as county surveyor and otherwise, for several years, and was also actively employed in carrying on an extensive real estate and banking business in connection with Dr. Edward Brewer and Judge O. H. P. Roszell. He was elected a Member of Eighth General Assembly in 1859, and served in the Lower House during the regular session of 1860, and the extra war session of June, 1861, as Chairman of the Committee on State University, and a member of the Appropriation Committee. On his return home he received the appointment of postal clerk on the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad, in which capacity he faithfully served the government for about seven years. Upon the death of Albert Clark, one of the Commissioners of the Insane Asylum at Independence, he was appointed, by Governor Samuel Merrill, to fill the vacancy, and served as Secretary and Treasurer of the Board until his resignation in December, 1871. He was re-appointed, by Governor C. C. Carpenter, in April, 1872, and has since served in the same capacity. Being the only resident commissioner, a disproportionately large amount of work and responsibility have devolved upon him, which he has performed to the entire satisfaction of his associates and the criticising public. As treasurer he has received and disbursed $635,000 during the last five years.

In the Fall of 1871, he was elected from Buchanan County to the State Senate, and has since occupied an influential position in that body, as a member of several important committees, and chairman of that on public buildings. In his capacity as a Member of the State Senate, and one of the Board of Commissioners of the Northern Iowa Insane Asylum, he has rendered the state and his constituency faithful and valuable service, performing the responsible duties devolving upon him in such a manner as to reflect great credit upon the judgment of his friends, and honor upon himself.

Politically Mr. Bemis has always acted with the Republican party, sympathizing with and encouraging the anti-slavery movement when it was unpopular, he has always stood firmly and unflinchingly in the defense of right and justice, no matter what it might cost him. Although too truthful, frank and firm in his convictions, too outspoken and unpolitic in the expression of his opinions to secure that kind of popularity sought by modern politicians, yet, he has by his honest, fair and uncorruptible conduct in public life, won hosts of friends whom the most fastidious would be proud to acknowledge.

He was married, April 11, 1855, to Miss Narcissa T. Roszell, an accomplished lady and sister of Honorable Oliver H. P. Roszell, now a resident of Independence. They have a family of three children, two sons and one daughter.

Honorable JOHN M. BRAYTON.—Among those who have for the last twenty years been most prominently identified with the various interests, growth and development of Northern Iowa, there is no one more deserving of honorable mention than the subject of this brief sketch, the Honorable John M. Brayton, of Delhi, Iowa. He was born at Newport, Herkimer County, New York, on the 15th day of September, 1851. When fifteen years of age he was admitted to the Whitestown Seminary, Oneida County, New York, where he pursued his studies for four years, and in 1850 entered the sophomore class of Hamilton College at Clinton, in the same State. He completed the course and graduated from that institution with the highest honors of his class in 1853. Honorable J. E. Burke, of Waverley, Iowa, a classmate, says of him: "He was always exceedingly studious and industrious, and was conceded to be the best scholar in his class." Immediately after leaving college he entered the Clinton Law School, then under charge of Prof. T. W. Dwight, now of Columbia College, New York. Completing his law studies the next year, he was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of the State in the Summer or Fall of 1854.

The following November he left the home of his youth to seek a fortune on the western frontier. He came to Delhi, Iowa, and by force of circumstances, rather than by voluntary choice, located, entered upon the practice of his profession, and became one of its prominent and most honored citizens. His purity of character and worth as a lawyer and a man soon won for him numerous friends, and in February, 1855, he formed a law partnership with Hon. A. E. House. The firm receiving the confidence of the public soon secured a large business, and three years later admitted George Wattson into the partnership. In November, 1861, House retired from the firm, while Brayton and Wattson continued their business relations until the close of 1864.

In the Fall of 1863 Mr. Brayton was elected to the State Senate, which position he held during the tenth and eleventh sessions of the Iowa General Assembly, rendering efficient service to the state and his constituency as a member of the Judiciary and other important committees. In 1870 he was elected District Judge of the Ninth Iowa Judicial District, and took his seat on the bench January 1, 1871. His health becoming greatly impaired by the arduous duties of his position, and an unusually large amount of business devolving upon him, he resigned in July, 1872, and resumed the practice of law. During the eighteen months that he occupied a seat upon the bench he transacted a larger amount of important business than has ever before been performed during the same length of time, and by his fair, impartial and straightforward conduct won hosts of friends, who would now gladly honor him with any position within their power for which he might ask. He heard the noted cases of Richman vs. the D. & S. C. R. R., and Cobb, Blaisdell & Co. vs. the I. C. R. R., in which two cases alone he rendered judgments for nearly half a million of dollars, which judgments were sustained by the Supreme Court of the state.

Although as yet a comparatively young man, probably no lawyer in the state has been connected with a larger number of cases during the same period, many of which have involved new and intricate law points and large amounts of valuable property. During the year 1874 he obtained judgments amounting to over two hundred thousand dollars.

His practice has always been large and engrossing, requiring close application and untiring energy, while real estate transactions have occupied his attention from time to time, and he now owns a large amount of improved and unimproved land. Mr. Brayton is a public spirited, large hearted, generous man, and has done much to develop and utilize the material resources of his adopted country.

On the 4th day of May, 1859, he was married to Miss Helen M. Martin, which union has been blessed with two children, only one of whom is now living, the youngest having died in 1872.

Honorable JOEL BAILEY.—Probably the oldest settler now living in Delaware County, and who for forty years has been closely identified with its growth, development and present prosperity, is a native of Middlefield, Otsego County, New York. He was born January 6, 1814, and is consequently now sixty-one years of age. By the death of his last surviving parent he was left an orphan at the age of nine years. Five years later, when in his fifteenth year, he went to live with an older brother, who taught him the trade of making gun barrels. About this time he had an opportunity of studying surveying, which he gladly embraced, thus early securing a thorough knowledge of this valuable profession, which has been of great service to him through life. In the Fall of 1835 he left the scenes of his childhood's joys and sorrows, the dingy, smoky shop, where with blackened hands he had toiled many a weary hour, and traveling towards the sunset, landed in Milwaukee, when that now flourishing city was scarcely a respectable hamlet, and boarded during the Winter at the first hotel, which was the first frame house built in that place, and was kept by a half breed and his squaw wife. In the Spring of 1836 he attached himself to a party of Government engineers, and spent six months surveying on Rock River without seeing a single cabin, white settler or other sign of civilization. In the Spring of 1837 he came to Iowa with a party of Government engineers, and assisted in surveying the south half of Delaware County and parts of Dubuque and Buchanan, and in January, 1838, returned to Milwaukee. The following Spring, in company with John and Cyrus Keeler, who were from Delaware County, New York, he returned to Iowa, where they made claims and built a cabin on the banks of the Maquoketa River, near what is now known as Bailey's Ford. They "batched it," as it was then called, and broke some twenty acres of prairie, the first breaking of any considerable amount ever done in the county. Their only neighbor within ten miles was J. W. Penn, who had made a claim some four or five miles east of them.

Judge Bailey was active in the organization of Delaware County, was one of the committee who selected the location for the county seat and the present town of Delhi, and was the first county surveyor, which position he has repeatedly filled. In April, 1838, he married Miss Arabella Coffin, daughter of Judge Clement Coffin, of Coffin's Grove. This union was blessed with several children, their oldest, Clement James, being the first white child born in Milo township. In 1849 he was employed in the Government survey on the Shellrock and Cedar Rivers in Iowa. Becoming infected with the California fever in 1850, he made the overland trip with a four-horse team from Council Bluffs to the coast in seventy-five days. He remained in California about one year, and experienced the pleasures, privations, and various vicissitudes of changing fortune, which were the common experience of all who in those early days visited that fabulous land of gold. He returned to Iowa in 1851 by the way of Panama, Kingston, and New York. The next year he was elected School Fund Commissioner for Delaware County, and during his term of office sold most of the school lands in the county. In the Summer of 1845 he was engaged in the Government survey on Root and Canon Rivers in Minnesota, and in 1856 in the northern part of Wisconsin on the head waters of the Chippewa River. That same Spring he was commissioned postmaster at Bailey's Ford, then a stopping place on the stage line from Dubuque to Independence. Since then he has held the office of County Treasurer, Recorder, and County Judge, and has been twice elected Mayor of Manchester, where he now resides.

Judge Bailey is one of those genial, warm-hearted, noble men who are loved and respected by all who know them intimately and well. Two-thirds of his somewhat eventful life has been spent here, and could a more extended and minute account of his life struggle be written it would reveal many interesting incidents, and a pretty accurate history of the progress and growth of the county which has so long been his home, and where he has freely given the vigorous strength of his youthful manhood, and the more matured wisdom of advanced years in accelerating its development and securing its future prosperity.

CYRUS A. FARWELL.—It is a lamentable truth that men are seldom judged fairly in the age in which they live. Distempered animosities, and the strifes, turmoil and rancor of business warp the judgment and render impossible that dispassionate verdict which is awarded from a calm retrospective review of a life struggle past. Judging by the reverence with which the memory of the Fathers of our Republic is now cherished, it is difficult to believe that those men were once the subjects of such malignant assaults and base contumely as are now often heaped upon the best, most praiseworthy, and able men of the present time. Yet such was the case, as all who are conversant with the early history of our country well know.

But notwithstanding this hindrance to a just contemporary estimate of character, there are some men who are so obviously fitted by nature, education, and surrounding circumstances to well perform the life work they have chosen, that it is safe to anticipate in a measure the verdict of posterity. Such a man is the subject of this brief sketch, combining, as he does in a peculiar degree, the elements which constitute a successful business man, which he is in every fiber and instinct of his nature—a true type of those self-made men, who, emigrating from the rock bound coasts of New England to the broad prairies, rich valleys and woodlands of the West, have brought with them that sterling integrity of character and honesty of purpose which is as firm and unchanging as the granite of their native hills. Cyrus A. Farwell was born on the 7th day of September, 1832, and is consequently forty-three years of age. His birth place was Dorset, Vermont, where the first years of his life were spent among the sweet valleys and verdant hills of the Green Mountain State. His parents belonged to that class of worthy, honest, industrious, frugal yeomanry who, possessing little worldly means, are richly endowed with those more valuable traits of character and heart for which the descendants of New England's early settlers have so long been distinguished. When he was about five years of age his father removed to Wyoming County, New York, where he spent his boyhood and early youth assisting in the management of a small farm and in attending common school for a few months during the Winter, completing his education at Warsaw Academy, or select school, which he attended two terms. In 1850 he removed with his father to Westfield, New York, where he remained some two years mostly in the employ of the manufacturing establishment of F. Waters & Co., and where he supported himself and saved a little money. Becoming restless and dissatisfied with the slow progress he was making, he determined to leave the paternal roof and seek his fortune in the far famed Eldorado of the Pacific coast. Bidding adieu to his friends and early associates, he engaged passage in an Aspinwall steamer, and sailed from New York City in November, 1852. Arriving at Aspinwall he crossed the Isthmus on foot, thus avoiding the expense of a mule, and immediately took steamer for San Francisco, where he arrived about noon on the 17th day of December, 1852. With his natural restlessness, not immediately finding employment, he took passage on a steamer running up the Sacramento River at four o'clock the same afternoon, and while the boat stopped at Benicia lost his baggage, and arrived at Sacramento the next morning with about eight dollars in money and one suit of clothes, those he had on. This, however, did not in the least discourage him, but with that indomitable energy, pluck and ability to adapt himself to circumstances which has characterized his whole life, he immediately engaged himself as a restaurant waiter, it being the first thing that presented itself. After remaining a few days he made an engagement with a forwarding house to drive a four-horse freighting team engaged in hauling provisions to the mining districts at one hundred and forty-five dollars a month, with board. At the end of five months he had saved enough money, so that with the credit he could command he purchased four good horses and a freighting wagon, and commenced operating on his own account. The enterprise proved successful, and he cleared above expenses more than one hundred dollars a week. After following this for some eight months he sold out and engaged in the stock business. He was in Sacramento during the memorable flood of 1853, when the entire city was submerged and large amounts of property destroyed. After following stock dealing for some seven or eight months he was taken sick, and being unable to attend to business set out for the States, arriving at his old home at Westfield, New York, in August, 1854.

When he left California it was his intention to return in a short time, but his health continuing poor he was finally dissuaded by his friends, and remained in Westfield until early in the Spring of 1856, when he removed to Waterloo, Iowa, where he still resides. After remaining about six weeks he made an exploring trip through the western portion of the state, being absent about two months, when he returned fully satisfied that he had already found in Waterloo the most favored locality in Northern Iowa. The succeeding Spring he purchased two yoke of cattle and a breaking plow, for which he gave his note bearing interest at the rate of 40 per cent. per annum, secured by a chattel mortgage. He then began breaking prairie, following it as long as the ground was suitable, and then doing odd jobs of teaming during the rest of the year. At this time he hauled from Rock Island, Illinois, the water wheel, and from Iowa City the burrs for the first flouring mill ever erected in Waterloo. In the Spring of 1857 he made a pre-emption claim in Mitchell County, near the Minnesota line, and in 1859 commenced farming for himself, and put in fifty acres of grain. In the Spring of 1860 he commenced buying and shipping stock, which he carried on for some six years, making the first consignment ever forwarded from Jesup. In the Spring of 1861 he erected in connection with E. Johnson the first elevator built in Waterloo. The next Spring, Mr. Johnson retiring, Mr. Farwell assumed the entire business, which he successfully conducted for several years, owning and operating at the same time five elevators, besides carrying on an extensive lumber and coal business, loading over three thousand cars of grain, for which he paid the farmers raising it nearly nine hundred thousand dollars. In 1867 he commenced the banking business by opening a private bank, which he carried on until 1870, at which time, in connection with Edmond Muller and others, he organized the National Savings Bank, and took the management of it as its first cashier, which position he still holds. In February, 1874, he was elected cashier of the First National Bank of Waterloo, and has since had full management of that substantial institution, and is the largest and one of its original stockholders.

While Mr. Farwell has been carrying on the various enterprises enumerated above, he has also extensively engaged in many other large business operations, in all of which, when the management has devolved upon him, he has, by his ability, energy, and prudent judgment, been uniformly successful, and is well and favorably known to a large circle of business men throughout the Northwest. While his private business is very large and engrossing, requiring great natural ability and well directed and indomitable industry to manage with success, he has an ever-ready and willing hand to encourage and assist every worthy public enterprise. No man in the county has done more by erecting substantial improvements, encouraging and aiding with time and money the various schemes which have been set on foot to develop, improve and build up this section. Every enterprise that gives reasonable promise of being of present or permanent value to the community never fails to receive from him that encouragement its importance demands. He now owns near a score of dwellings adapted to the wants of renters, besides a public hall and numerous business houses, offices, etc.

Mr. Farwell is a generous, large hearted thoroughly public spirited man, with no miserly elements in his composition. A man of excellent moral and social qualities, one whose character and successful life can safely be pointed out to young men as a meritorious example worthy of imitation. Commencing life a poor boy with a limited education, he has steadily progressed, owing his present ability to humor his taste for fine horses, and such other luxuries as the generously wealthy can afford, to his own intense energy and untiring industry, coupled with sharp business sagacity, and an unswerving determination "to do what he does do well."

DEMPSEY C. OVERMAN.—This gentleman who was the first postmaster in Black Hawk County, and for more than a quarter of a century one of the prominent business men of Cedar Falls, Iowa, died at his residence in that city, October 19, 1874. He was born in Highland County, Ohio, March 13, 1820, and was consequently over fifty-three years of age at the time of his death. His early life was spent on a farm, which he helped to cultivate, attending school for a few months each winter. When he was twenty-two years of age his family removed to Muscatine County, Iowa, locating at a point on the Cedar River, since known as Overman's Ferry, where he engaged in farming, which he successfully carried on until February, 1848, when he removed to Cedar Falls, and with his brother, John M., and E. Bunn, a brother-in-law, purchased the water power and other claims embracing the original site of Cedar Falls, and some other adjoining lands. Here he immediately went to work with the characteristic industry and energy which has marked his whole life, and in a few months had a saw mill in operation, and was thus the first to tame the waters of the Cedar, and make them aid in the advancement of civilization. Two years later he erected and put in operation the first grist mill in the county, which, though a rude affair, the burrs being cut out of a granite boulder, proved of great benefit to the few settlers who came straggling in at that early day. In connection with his brothers and brother-in-law, with whom he was connected in nearly all of his business relations, he laid out and became one of the original proprietors of the town. With them he willingly spent his vast energy, and the best portion of his busy life, in building up and developing the natural resources possessed by the beautiful little city he had assisted in planting. They enlarged the mill-race in 1852, and then again in 1854 to its present size; built a new mill with two run of stone and the present dam in 1855, and the large, substantial stone mill, now standing, in the Summer and Fall of 1856; a large brick block, costing some $15,000 in 1857, and from time to time making various improvements, giving generous aid to every thing which seemed calculated to advance the general interest and prosperity.

In his private capacity as a friend and neighbor, Mr. Overman was an energetic supporter of home improvements, and many monuments of his enterprise and generosity are pointed out, which will long remain as exponents of a faithful friend and a valued citizen. He was ever ready to respond to the call of duty, though arduous and unpleasant, was beloved and esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, who will long cherish his kindly words, and many acts of friendship and benevolence. Though an unfortunate chain of circumstances greatly reduced his worldly means a few years before his death, he ever bore in his business relations the proudest name that can be applied to perishing mortals, that of an honest man, which is "the noblest work of God."

Honorable SAMUEL MURDOCK was born March 17, 1817, in Alleghany County, Pennsylvania. In 1828 his father moved into the State of Ohio, and settled on a farm near Cleveland. Here he was raised, working on the farm in the Summer and going to school in the Winter. He attended several terms at the old Brick Academy in Cleveland, and this, and such advantages as the common schools of Ohio then afforded, comprised all the education he ever received.

He taught school in several places in that state, and in 1838 emigrated to Kalamazoo County, Michigan, where he remained one summer; but ill-health caused him to leave that state, and he returned to Ohio. Here he remained till 1841, when he started for the West, and arrived in Johnson County, Iowa, in the Fall of that year, and entered the law office of Gilman Folsome, Esq., under whose tuition he was admitted to the bar of that county.

In 1843 he removed to Clayton County, and settled at the pleasant town of Garnavillo, where he commenced the practice of law, and in connection therewith has made a most beautiful farm, on which he now resides. He was the first lawyer who settled in the county, and the first who settled in the whole country north of Dubuque, including what is now the State of Minnesota.

He was married in 1845 to Miss Louisa Patch, daughter of Luther and Elizabeth Patch, whose family are among the oldest settlers west of the Mississippi River.

In 1845 he was elected from Dubuque, Delaware and Clayton Counties to the Territorial Legislature, and served during two sessions. While a member of that body he was instrumental in securing for Iowa her present northern boundary. Iowa provided that her portion of the 500,000 acres distribution of lands should be set apart for school purposes, and a large proportion of these lands fell within the limits of Clayton County.

In 1848 Mr. Murdock was elected School Fund Commissioner for the county, and held the office for nearly four years, during which time he sold the greater part of these lands. Having a large discretionary power in their sale, he managed to dispose of them all to actual settlers, and thus prevented them from falling into the hands of speculators.

During his term in this office many angry and violent disputes arose between persons claiming the right to purchase these lands; but all these disputes he adjusted and settled to the satisfaction of all parties, and he quit the office after a four years' service without leaving behind him a single enemy. During the time he held this office he would often have five or six thousand dollars in gold or silver in his house at a time, and these large sums he would hide in the potato bin in the Winter or cover up with earth in the cellar in Summer, and not a dollar of it was ever lost to the School Fund.

In 1845 Mr. Murdock was elected the first District Judge of the Tenth Judical District of Iowa, composed of the ten northeastern counties of the state. This office he held till the new constitution of the state took effect, when he returned again to the practice of law. During his term of office he organized several counties in his district, holding the first courts in them, and leaving behind him in all of them records that are models of neatness and style.

For several years he traveled twice in each year through all these ten counties, attended by the principal members of the bar of his district, generally on horseback, encountering all kinds of weather, wading sloughs and swimming rivers, and many an anecdote is still told among the members of the bar and the old settlers in regard to the judge and his trips through the district.

In 1869 he was elected a member of the Thirteenth General Assembly of the State.

Judge Murdock is now, and has been for several years, President of the Pioneers and Old Settlers' Association of his county. His acquaintance with the men and the history of Iowa is intimate and extensive. His name is inseparably associated with the history of the state, as well as with that of Clayton and other northern counties, and in this relation he will ever be remembered.

Although lacking the advantages of a liberal education, he has made up, in a great measure, by his eminent natural abilities and laborious and careful study, his deficiencies of learning. Few men are better informed than he in his profession and on general subjects; and he has an instinct for literary and scientific pursuits, in which he has made considerable proficiency, especially in the geology of the northern part of Iowa. He has devoted more attention, perhaps, than any man in the state to the investigation of the pre-historic race known as the Mound Builders, and has delivered some very able and carefully prepared lectures on that subject.

Honorable JOHN W. OVERMAN, the first mayor of Cedar Falls, and for the last twenty-five years one of its most influential and highly respected citizens, was born in Highland County, Ohio, on the 10th day of November, 1817. The first nineteen years of his life were spent on the farm where he was born, assisting in its management and attending the common district school for a few months each year, when in his twentieth year he completed his education by teaching one term, and was then employed in his father's saddle tree manufactory, carrying it on for himself the last two years before moving West. In 1842 he located in Muscatine County, Iowa, where he was engaged in farming, and in conducting a small hotel. In 1848 he removed with his brother, Dempsey C., to Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he remained six months, and then returning to the City of Muscatine, he ran a steam saw mill until the first of January, 1850, when he set out for California, going down the Mississippi River, crossing the Gulf to Point Isabella, then through the Mexican Republic to Masatland, and up the coast to San Francisco. Spending some six or eight months, mostly in the mining districts, he returned by way of Panama and New Orleans, arriving at Cedar Falls early in January, 1851, where he has since resided, thoroughly identifying himself with the growth and progress of the town.

Arriving here he immediately went to work with the restless energy of his nature, and in connection with his brother and brother-in-law,* was for years really the life and energy of that young, beautiful, and promising city. He was at the head of the mill company, which, besides carrying on an extensive milling and lumber trade, dealt largely in real estate. He always pursued a liberal policy towards every enterprise that offered advantages and needed assistance, encouraged emigration, gave generously to churches, schools and town improvements in general, besides expending large amounts in private undertakings. The company gave forty acres of valuable land adjoining the city plat, to the D. & S. C. R. R., ten thousand dollars in cash to the Iowa Central, and proportionally large amounts to other railroad schemes and public ventures. To his public-spirited, self sacrificing work, combined with great industry, untiring energy and pluck, is due in a large degree the position which Cedar Falls now occupies as one of the most attractive, beautiful and prosperous towns in the state.

* See biographical sketch of D. C. Overman.

Honorable DANIEL S. LEE was born October 16, 1817, on a farm in Genesee County, in the State of New York, where the largest portion of his boyhood and youth were passed in attending the common country school and assisting his father to cultivate the small farm on which he was born. When about fourteen years of age his mother died, and soon after the family was so broken up that young Daniel was thrown on his own resources at sixteen, and compelled thereafter to support himself entirely by his own exertions. He continued to follow farming summers, attending a select school each winter until he was twenty-one, when he entered Leroy Academy, where he remained two years, completing his academical education. During the Winter of 1841–2 he taught school, and in the following Spring left his native town with $22 in money and a small hand-satchel to seek his fortune and a home in the, to him, unexplored West. He traveled by railroad and stage to Buffalo, and by lake steamer to Cleveland, where he arrived in three days. After making an unsuccessful effort to find employment, he took passage on a canal packet boat for Akron, Ohio, where he arrived with only a five-franc piece of his $22 remaining. He immediately applied for a position as teacher in the public school, and was informed that they were in want of a teacher and would pay good wages, but that they would only pay such money as they had, which was not worth more than forty or fifty cents on the dollar. After studying over the matter a little he determined to start a select school, and circulating a subscription paper he received such encouragement that he opened with a good attendance on the following Monday morning. The same day he entered the office of Honorable William C. Dodge as a law student, where he continued to read for about four and a half years, carrying on his select school for two years and a half, when he was employed to take charge of the public schools which had been re-opened. He was admitted to the bar in the Fall of 1846, but did not enter into active practice until the following Spring, when he opened an office in Akron and began in earnest the practice of his chosen profession. He had neither books nor money, and met with the usual difficulties encountered by young attorneys, but by persevering industry, strict economy, and avoiding all bad habits and debts, he was enabled to live comfortably, and in time secured a good practice. In the Summer of 1851 he took a prospecting tour through Illinois, and arriving at Dubuque, Iowa, in the latter part of September, remained during the Winter in the law office of Judge James Burt, and Governor Stephen Hempstead, except for three months, during which time he taught the first free school ever opened in the City of Dubuque. Was admitted to the bar of the Iowa Supreme Court, March 3, 1852, and a few days later started westward to seek a location for a permanent home. Arriving at Independence he was detained some two weeks by high water, during which time he became so well pleased with the country that he determined to locate. Securing office room with the district clerk, he hung out his shingle and commenced business, having made arrangements to locate land and sell warrants for Clark & Bissell, of Dubuque, which proved a very profitable business to him during the next four or five years, in which time most of the land in Buchanan and the adjoining counties was entered. Having determined to locate he immediately sent for his wife, having the previous Spring married Miss Fannie L. Brooks, of Northfield, Ohio, and soon after her arrival commenced house-keeping in a small log house, in which they remained a few months, securing a comfortable frame dwelling in the Fall. Both his law and real estate business were prosperous, increasing so rapidly that he was soon compelled to employ assistants, and in 1855 he associated himself in the land brokerage and banking business with P. E. and E. B. Older, with whom he started the first banking house in Independence, and for two years did a large and profitable business, besides conducting an extensive law practice. The panic of 1857 found the firm in an exposed condition on account of the large amount of wild land they held on which it was impossible to realize any thing. Mr. Lee amply secured all his creditors, and has since paid every dollar of his indebtedness, although it took nearly every thing he possessed, crippling him for life, and sweeping away his ample fortune, which, previous to the crash of 1857, must have reached nearly $50,000.

Although an earnest, enthusiastic Democrat all his life up to the breaking out of the late rebellion, he was one of the first to rally to the support of the general Government, and at a mass meeting held in the court house early in the Summer of 1861, made a rousing war speech, and closed by heading the list as the first volunteer in the county. He was afterwards principally instrumental in raising a full company, and was upon its organization unanimously elected its captain, and joining his fortunes with it, it became Company "E," of the 5th Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, with which regiment he remained during the three years of the service. He first served in Missouri under General Fremont, and was provost marshal at Booneville, Missouri, during a portion of the Winter of 1861–62. Was at Milligan's Bend, and at the evacuation of Island No. 10, on the Mississippi River. Was with General Grant's army, and assisted in the capture of Forts Donaldson and Henry. Was engaged in the battles of Mission Ridge and Iuka, and took part in the storming of some of the fortifications surrounding Vicksburg, which resulted in the surrender of that city July 4, 1863. Was afterwards transferred to the Army of the Gulf, taking part in every battle in which the regiment was engaged, except in one case, when he was too sick for duty. He served for some eight months on the staff of General Charles L. Matthies, and was mustered out in August, 1864. The same Fall he was elected the first Mayor of Independence; was re-elected the following year, but soon after resigned, not being able on account of pressure of business to properly perform the official duties. In the Fall of 1869 he was elected to represent his county in the lower House of the Iowa General Assembly, and served through the thirteenth general session as a member of several important committees, and making many friends throughout the state.

Though never claiming to be a powerful lawyer, capable of remarkable efforts, yet he has been eminently successful, and is highly respected by a large circle who have known him intimately and well for many years.

Major DAVID B. HERRIMAN was born at Dover, Morris County, New Jersey, October 17, 1808. His advantages to acquire an education were below the average for that early day, and upon his arriving at the age of sixteen years he was bound out as an apprentice at the Dover Iron Works, to the furnace or foundry business. Possessing a very active, vigorous and well balanced mind, with a physical development sufficiently hardy to support it, he toiled by day at the works, and at night studied such books as would improve and prepare him for usefulness in whatever community his destiny might be cast. Thus he acquired a good business education, and at the same time became master of his trade. In 1832 he took charge of the construction of the foundry of Alcott, Watts & Langworthy, Rochester, New York, which he completed to their entire satisfaction. He immediately took charge of the building of a foundry for Balch, Lee & Co., at Waterloo, which he completed and carried on in their interest for three years.

Being of a bold and independent nature, he determined to try his fortunes in the then far West; went to La Grange County, Indiana, Milford Township, where he bought the first eighty acres of land, turned the first furrow, and laid the first shingle in the township, sold out, and moved to Orange Township, Noble County. Here he was surrounded by wild frontier life, which he enjoyed. Pottawattomie Indians were his nearest neighbors, but wild as his surroundings were, he thrived, and sounded the bugle call of civilization, which was wafted back to the great army of American laborers, and forward came the advance guard, to make permanent homes, and form a settlement about him.

In 1837 he was elected to the Lower House of the Indiana Legislature, and served his constituency and state so faithfully as to be twice re-elected to this branch. He succeeded so well here, that in 1840 he was elected to the State Senate and at the expiration of his first term was re-elected. Thus for three years he was in the Lower, and six years in the Upper House of the Indiana Legislature, making a total of nine years of public life there.

In 1853 he was appointed as Indian Agent for the Chippewas in Minnesota, and stationed at Crow Wing. His recommendations to this position were integrity, courage, honesty, and good business qualifications. He remained in this position five years, when he came to this county and bought his present place in Illyria Township, where he has since resided.

In 1836 he was married to Mary Ann Judy. Their married life was blessed by the birth of eight children — John, Charles, David, Warren, Ann, Samuel, Hannah, and Jesse. In the year 1850 Mrs. Herriman died.

In 1852 he married Elizabeth Dye, and this second marriage has been blessed by the birth of two daughters, Mary and Ella.

EDWARD L. BURTON, Esq., was born at Waterloo, Seneca County, New York, February 17, 1831. His father, John Burton, Esq., was one of the earliest settlers of Seneca County, and a prominent lawyer in that part of the state. On the completion of his education at Waterloo Academy, Mr. Burton engaged in teaching school. He also devoted considerable time to the practice of land surveying, of which he had acquired thorough knowledge. Subsequently he studied law, first at Waterloo, in the office of his brother, William H. Burton, also a lawyer of prominence in the county, and afterwards at the law school of Professor Fowler, at Ballston Springs, New York. In June, 1855, Mr. Burton, turning his steps westward, came to Lancaster, Keokuk County, Iowa, where at the following November term of the District Court he was admitted to the bar. In January, 1859, he removed to Ottumwa, Wapello County, and there entered into a law copartnership with Judge Henry B. Hendeshott, who had then just retired from the bench of the District Court. This copartnership he continued for a period of twelve successive years. In 1872 Mr. Burton professionally united in practice, in Ottumwa, with the Hon. Edward H. Stiles, a gentleman widely and very favorably known to the legal profession as the author of the new Iowa Digest, and as official reporter, during several years, of the decisions of the Iowa Supreme Court. Messrs. Stiles & Burton have a large and increasing, as well as a highly respectable and lucrative practice, ranking among the most able and eminent members of the bar in the southern part of the state.

In the years 1861, 1862, and 1863, Mr. Burton represented, as an Alderman, the First Ward of Ottumwa, in the City Council. In 1864 and 1865, he was City Solicitor. Both these honorable positions, among others more prominent, have been filled also by Mr. Stiles.

In 1865 Mr. Burton was nominated by the Democracy of Wapello County as a candidate for Representative in the State Legislature, and notwithstanding a decided Republican majority in the county, failed of election by only four votes.

In 1868, and again in 1872, he received the regular Democratic nomination for Judge of the Circuit Court. The Democratic party being in the minority in the counties composing the circuit, however, Mr. Burton was, of course, doomed to defeat.

In 1861 Mr Burton purchased a newspaper at Ottumwa, entitled the Democratic Statesman, and changing that name to the Ottumwa Democratic Mercury, continued its publication, in connection with Samuel B. Evans, until the latter went to the war. Thereafter he remained sole publisher of the paper for nearly four years. In the editorial conduct of the Democratic Mercury, Mr. Burton was assisted by Judge Hendershott, who historically testifies to the fact that Mr. Burton "wielded a forcible and spicy pen."

Mr. Burton was, during its entire existence, Secretary, and a Director of the St. Louis and Cedar Rapids Railroad Company, having its offices at Ottumwa, and which was organized in 1865.

As a lawyer, Mr. Burton is distinguished for possessing the first order of legal talent, and is universally conceded to be entitled to classification in the highest rank of the profession in the state.

Honorable S. A. KNAPP.—This gentleman, late Principal of the Iowa College for the Blind, located at Vinton, was born in Essex County, State of New York, December 16, 1833. He is of Puritan stock, his paternal ancestors settling in New England in 1642, while his maternal progenitors came to America with the May Flower Pilgrims in 1620. Receiving a good common school education, he commenced preparing for college at the Troy Conference Academy at Poultney, Vermont, at sixteen, from which school he entered Union College at Schenectady, New York, graduating with the class of 1856, the last one while that institution was under the management of Eliphalet Nott, D.D., LL.D. The following August he was married to Miss Maria E. Hoolkkuss, of Hampton, New York, and immediately afterwards was elected to the chair of Greek and Higher Mathematics in the Fort Edward Collegiate Institute. In 1859 he became joint proprietor and manager of that institution in connection with Rev. J. E. King, D.D., where he remained until 1862, when he disposed of his interest, and purchased the Troy Conference School, which was one of the finest properties in the State of Vermont, and was estimated to be worth over $100,000, where he founded the Ripley Female College, which he successfully conducted for over three years, making it an institution of high grade. Early in the Spring of 1867 he removed to Iowa, locating at Vinton, where he came as pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was some two years later appointed Principal of the Iowa College for the Blind, which position he satisfactorily filled until June, 1875, when he resigned, intending to devote his attention largely to farming and fine stock raising, which he thoroughly understands, having made it a close study for several years. He now owns some of the finest and best breed animals in the state, and is making arrangements to increase his facilities for raising thoroughbred stock of all kinds.

Professor Knapp is President of "The Farmer's Loan and Trust Company," which was organized in the Fall of 1873; was largely instrumental in securing the organization of the Benton County Fine Stock Association, which was the first organization of the kind in the state, and is its President. He was also, at the meeting of the fine stock men, held at Cedar Rapids in June, 1875, chosen President of the State Association.

Honorable OLIVER H. P. ROSZELL.—In searching among the early settlers of Buchanan County for those who have been most thoroughly identified with its growth, progress, and development, who have done most to make it what it now is, one of the most wealthy and truly beautiful counties in the state, the historian finds none more worthy of special mention, or more thoroughly conversant with the past than Honorable O. H. P. Roszell, who was born December 21, 1827, in Canandaigua, New York. He is of French Huguenot extraction, his ancestors having emigrated to this country from France several generations ago. When an infant his parents removed to Genesee County, where he was left an orphan early in life by the demise of his father, Elisah Roszell, who died when young Oliver was only nine years of age. Being brought up on a farm and attending common district school during a portion of the year, he acquired a good constitution and a more thoroughly practical knowledge of life and its duties than is often attained by the city bred lads. His education was completed at the Cary Collegiate Seminary, which institution he attended several years.

The Spring after he attained his majority he determined to visit the West, and see for himself the truth or falsity of the many glowing accounts that were given of the many wonderous opportunities offered and fortunes made by enterprising young men, who enjoyed the excitements and privations of frontier life. The first summer he passed in the West he was engaged with a Government surveying party in Wisconsin. The following Fall, in December, 1849, he reached Independence, then a small, rude hamlet, little dreaming that he should there spend the next quarter of a century and the best portion of his life. He was first employed in teaching school, and was then engaged in various ways for several years, doing some surveying, dealing in real estate, and with some other parties carrying on a small banking business. He occupied his spare time in reading law, and was admitted to practice in 1854. In the Summer or Fall of 1851 he was elected the first County Judge of Buchanan County, which office he held by re-election for some six years, conducting the financial affairs of the county and other important matters in such a manner as to receive the commendation of his political opponents in after years. An opposition newspaper remarks of him: "The present sound financial condition of our county is due to Judge Roszell more than any other man in the county, whatever may be said against the minor details of his manner of conducting business." In 1858 he was elected County Superintendent of Public Schools, and performed the duties of that office most acceptably for two years. The same year he was elected a member of the State School Board of Education, and was a member of said board when the present excellent free school system was adopted, and was a member of the committee who drafted the original bill. He was elected Mayor of Independence in the Spring of 1871, and so honestly and faithfully filled that responsible yet not pleasant position, that he was unanimously re-elected in 1872, and again in 1874, though he was an earnest Democrat and the city was strongly Republican.

He was married at Independence in 1852 to Miss Mary E. Whait.

JAMES JAMISON.—Among the influential men of Northern Iowa, who have for nearly a quarter of a century been identified with the growth, progress and development of the state, there is perhaps none more worthy of favorable notice than the subject of this sketch, James Jamison, Esq., of Independence, who has by his own unaided industry and untiring energy arose to a prominent position among leading attorneys of Iowa. His native county was Armstrong, Pennsylvania, where he was born February 14, 1828, and is consequently in his forty-eighth year. By the death of his father, which occurred when he was about two years of age, he was left practically an orphan. His mother having one other small child to support, with little or no means, soon found the task too much for her enfeebled strength, and so gave the young James to an uncle who took charge of him until he was eighteen, keeping him busy on the farm most of the year, but allowing him the limited educational advantages afforded by the common country school for a few months each winter. Though making but slow progress with his studies, he acquired physical maturity and mental strength that enabled him to make rapid and efficient progress when a suitable opportunity was afforded. He, however made the best possible use of every advantage and was thus able to commence teaching when he was eighteen, which he continued every Winter, studying during the Summer until the Fall of 1850, when he entered Alleghany College, at Meadville, Pennsylvania, where he remained for two years, pursuing his studies with marked ability, and supporting himself entirely by his own earnings. He then commenced reading law under the direction of Honorable David Derickson, making such progress that he was admitted to the bar at Meadville, Pennsylvania, August 18, 1853. In the following September he took a trip West, and being well pleased with Independence, Iowa, he determined to locate. Securing an office, he at once entered earnestly into the practice of his profession, and soon met with that success which industry and ability are certain to secure. For years he has stood at the head of the bar in Buchanan County, conducting a large and lucrative law practice, besides successfully managing an extensive real estate business.

Politically, Mr. Jamison has always been a Democrat from principle, though never taking an active part in the strifes incident to political campaigns, and never seeking office or preferment, though often urged to do so by his numerous friends who would feel it an honor to have an opportunity of working for his election. Though never having been caught in the meshes of matrimony, he is, however, a frank, large hearted, generous man, who has rendered material aid in developing and improving his adopted town and county. Public enterprises, and weak private schemes which promise general good, always receive from him a cheerful support.

L. A. COBB.

"To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess."

Among the men who for nearly a quarter of a century have grown up with and helped to make Iowa what she is to-day, the peer of the Western States, may be mentioned the subject of this sketch, L. A. Cobb, who is a native of Westmoreland, New Hampshire, where he was born on the 30th day of August, 1821, which makes him at this time fifty-four years of age. Although born among the beautiful granite hills, but a small portion even of his early life was passed in that rugged New England State, as his parents removed to Saratoga, New York, when he was about three years of age. After remaining some seven years they again removed to Western New York, where young Cobb was educated in Arcade and Aurora Academies. In the Spring of 1853, like many other young men born and educated in the East, he became desirous of visiting the West, and landed on the first day of May at Maquoketa, Iowa, where, engaging in farming, he remained some two years and six months, when in November, 1855, he visited Waterloo, and being favorably impressed with its situation and prospects, located, and has since made it his home. He was for a number of years extensively engaged in the brokerage and real estate business, and by his liberal management and evident willingness and desire to help those who were most in need of assistance, he made many friends and did much toward developing the material resources of the county, although he did not amass money nearly as fast as he might, or others would have done under similar circumstances. In 1868 he was unintentionally drawn into the lumber trade, which he has since carried on, securing a large business by his straightforward and honorable manner of dealing. Since his residence in Iowa he has been engaged more or less in improving wild lands and managing extensive farming operations, by which means he has greatly aided in the development of the county. Generous by nature and practice, he has always encouraged and liberally aided every public scheme that had sufficient merit to claim his consideration.

In 1860 he was joined in marriage with Miss H. A. Ellsworth, of Waterloo, which union has been blessed with three children, all of whom are still living.

J. W. FILKINS was born November 20, 1823, at Nassau, Rensselaer County, New York. His ancestors removed from Holland in 1623, and settled on the Hudson River, in New York, near which they have since resided. He received a good common school education, and at sixteen entered the Nassau Academy, where he remained two years, thus completing his academic education at eighteen years of age. Soon after leaving school in the Spring of 1842, the family removed to Wisconsin and located on a farm near Janesville, where the subject of this sketch remained some four years, teaching and reading law most of the time. In the early Spring of 1846 he entered the law office of Honorable Edward V. White, at Janesville, and then pursued his legal studies for about fifteen months, when he was admitted to practice law by the Territorial Supreme Court of Wisconsin. About this time his father died, and as his oldest son his attention was immediately required in carrying on the farm and settling the estate. He was occupied in this some two years, when, selling the farm, he removed to Iowa in March, 1850, locating on a tract of wild land in what is now Iowa Township, Benton County. He farmed some, but devoted the greater portion of his time for several years to surveying, being in the employment of the general Government in Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin. He was also quite extensively engaged in real estate transactions and land speculations. In 1855 he was solicited to become a candidate for recorder and treasurer, to which office he was elected, and faithfully served the county for two terms, during which time he resided in Vinton. In 1861 he located on a large and valuable tract of land immediately west of Belle Plaine, and has since devoted himself almost exclusively to the management of his farming interests.

Mr. Filkins has been a life long Democrat from principle, but for several years has taken but little interest in politics, wisely deciding that they are not usually conducive to happiness and peace of mind. From his boyhood he has been an extensive and careful reader, and has collected from time to time one of the most extensive miscellaneous private libraries in the state, over two thousand volumes of which he lost in the fire which consumed his residence a few years since.

He was married in 1858 to Miss M. A. Kupid, and their home has since been blessed by the birth of four children, all living.

JAMES F. YOUNG was born in Johnson County, Indiana, April 26, 1825. His father Joseph Young, now eighty-five years of age, and a resident of Vinton, Iowa, was one of the earliest settlers of that county, having removed to the state from North Carolina when he was about nineteen years of age. Mr. Young's early education was received on a farm, at the primitive country school, and completed at the Franklin Seminary, at Franklin, Indiana, which he attended for about two years after he was fifteen.

In the Fall of 1849 he removed to Benton County, Iowa, and has since made it his home, having spent the year previous in Linn County, the same state. His first undertaking was to enter land, and commence improving a farm some six miles south of Vinton, in one of the most choice portions of the county. Here he brought his young bride, having been married that same Fall in Johnson County, Indiana, to Miss Mary Bergen, and lived for some time with his nearest neighbor six miles away. He carried on an extensive farming business here for some seven years, when he removed to Vinton and commenced the erection of his present steam flouring mill in the Spring of 1856. This grist mill, which was the first one in Benton County, and the largest and most complete one west of the Mississippi, except the Overman's Mill at Cedar Falls, built the same season, was completed in the Fall of 1857, at a cost of over $12,000. It was a large brick building, three and a half stories high, with a basement, containing three run of stones and as complete and perfect machinery as could then be manufactured. He has since added the various modern improvements in the manufacture of flour, and a saw mill containing an up and down, and a circular saw. Since opening this mill in 1857, he has always done an extensive flouring business, formerly shipping to Chicago and St. Louis, but of late years the reputation of his flour has been such that the home demand has been greater than he could supply. He has also, during the same period, been extensively engaged in buying and shipping grain, and was the only one carrying on that business prior to the completion of the railroad to Vinton. Since the arrival of the road, he has built a large elevator and done his full share of business.

His first wife died in the Fall of 1855, and he was married again some two years later. He now has four children living, having lost one in the Fall of 1874.

Honorable S. BAGG was born in Laneshorough, Massachusetts, August 6, 1823. His early education was received at a private school in his native town, and completed by spending three years at Lenox Academy. Read law with William T. Filley, and, after being admitted, removed to Elyria, Lorain County, Ohio, in May, 1845, where he practiced law for nearly twelve years, when, in March, 1857, he located in Waterloo, Iowa, and entered into partnership with Honorable H. B. Allen, which partnership was continued for ten years.

He was appointed A. Q. M., with rank of captain, in U. S. A., Nov. 23, 1862, and served until December, 1865—was breveted major for efficient service.

In November, 1868, he was elected the first Judge of the Ninth District Circuit Court, which position he filled with so much credit to himself, and general satisfaction, that he was re-elected in 1872.

Honorable JAMES WOOD.—This gentleman, who was the first mayor of the City of Vinton, was born March 28, 1822, at Barnesley, England. His education was received at the Free Grammar School, located in his native town, and founded by Queen Elizabeth, which he attended until he was thirteen years of age, when he was apprenticed to the machinist trade, serving seven years in the engine shops of Fanton, Murry & Co., who carried on an extensive business at Leeds, England.

In May, 1842, he bade adieu to the "fatherland," and emigrated to this country, locating first near Steubenville, Ohio, where he remained only a short time. He worked at his trade some time at New Philadelphia, Ohio, where he was married in October, 1843; also at Wheeling, Virginia, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, removing to Iowa in the Spring of 1850, and located at Fremont, now Vinton, where he has since resided, having been thoroughly identified with the growth and progress of the town and county. He opened the first blacksmith shop, which he carried on for about three years, when he engaged in real estate business, which he followed for some time.

In 1854 he was appointed postmaster of Vinton, which office he held for nine years. Was elected justice of the peace in 1852, and has since continuously held the office by re-election, performing its responsible, yet unpleasant, duties to the satisfaction of the general public. He commenced reading law when in New Philadelphia, which he kept up by himself, as he had time or opportunity, and was admitted to the bar in 1865. He is the author and owns the copyright for "Wood's Justice Docket," which has had a very large run in the state; and is also author of "Wood's Hand-Book for Justices, Constables and Coroners," published by Smart & Pamott, of Waterloo, the first edition of which is nearly exhausted. Mr. Wood is about to issue a revised edition, which it is generally thought will be the best work of the kind ever published.

Honorable CHARLES H. CONKLIN.—This gentleman, who, for the last fifteen years, has, by general consent, occupied a prominent position among the leading minds in Iowa, died in Vinton, March 16, 1875, of paralysis of the heart, in the forty-fifth year of his age, having been born in Yates County, State of New York, January 25, 1831. In early life his father died and left him an orphan, without any means of support or education, except the exertions of a widowed mother. In order to support herself and family, and keep the wolf from the door, her strength was taxed to the utmost, and her health soon began to fail under the accumulated burdens of providing for herself and three helpless children. As soon as Charles was old enough to run errands, do chores, and make himself generally useful, he went forth from the maternal roof, and thenceforth was dependent upon himself alone. The days of his early years were spent in honest toil, and the evenings were past in gathering in stores of knowledge from all sources at his command. His opportunities of education were few and well improved. A few weeks schooling in the winter season, in the traditional log school house, until he was eighteen years of age, and after that a term in the village academy, was the sum and substance of his scholastic course. He then resolved to make himself master of the law, and enter the practice. With that end in view he commenced the study of Blackstone, Kent and Story, and though laboring under great difficulty and pecuniary embarrassments, he soon completed the required course of study, and was honorably admitted to the bar, in Steuben County, New York, in February, 1855, where, soon afterwards, he opened an office. In the beginning of his professional career he met with all the drawbacks and discouragements incident to a young lawyer's beginning. He was surrounded by old lawyers whose heads had grown gray in the service, and in whose professional capacity suitors had unbounded confidence, hence clients were scarce, and he had his days of anxiety and waiting for business, which came at last, and with it success, and had he remained in New York, he doubtless would soon have acquired that leading position among New York lawyers which he afterwards attained in Iowa. But he was not satisfied to remain in New York, and May, 1860, abandoning all his brilliant prospects, removed to Benton County, Iowa, where he settled, and immediately entered into the active practice of the law. His progress, from a nameless and unknown stranger, to the front rank of his chosen profession in Iowa was sure and swift, and in a judicial district second in point of legal ability to no district in the state, he was soon ranked as the peer of those who had stood in the front from the birth of the state.

In 1864, all recognizing his ability and integrity, he was, by common consent, chosen to fill the vacancy on the district bench occasioned by the resignation of the lamented Judge Isbell. In succeeding Isbell he had one of the best and ablest judges that ever graced the bench of Iowa to follow, and hence his position was one of extreme difficulty. But those who knew him best had no doubts—they knew he was equal to the position—that his honesty of purpose and his legal knowledge would carry him triumphantly through the ordeal. How well he succeeded as a judge, it is not necessary to ask, when all remember that in duty to himself and family, in 1865 he resigned, there was a general feeling of regret throughout the district. As soon as he resigned he re-entered the practice of the law, and continued in active practice until the day of his death.

In 1867, mid the duties and labors of a full practice at the bar, he found time to write and publish "Conklin's Treatise," a most valuable work on the duties of, and practice before, justices of the peace in Iowa. It is needless to say of this work more than this, it is regarded as good authority in all the courts of Iowa and Nebraska, and the demand has become so great that a new edition has recently been published in order to supply the increasing demand.

For several years past Judge Conklin's health has not been good, which, taken in connection with his assiduous labors in his profession, has been a serious cause of apprehension to his friends. They feared that these things would ultimately tell on him, and those fears have been sadly and suddenly realized. He was in his office a few minutes before he died, at his usual business. He started for his home, but, alas! he reached that home an hour later a corpse. He left behind him a wife and daughter, who received the sympathy of the whole community in their darkest affliction.

As a lawyer, Judge Conklin was bold, logical, honorable and candid, clear in statement, strong in argument, and always deferential and polite. He was almost invincible in the presentation of his facts, the application of the law to the testimony, and in the influence of his eloquence over the hearts and minds of the jurors. His bearing in the presence of the court and bar was always dignified and courteous, and his cases were always thoroughly digested and understood.

In his private relations Judge Conklin was eminently large-hearted. He was in truth, an honorable man—a thoroughly manly man. He was, in his personal relations, kindly, affectionate, tender and winning. No man excelled him in the brilliancy of his conversation, and none left his presence unimpressed by his ever active sympathies. Absorbed during the most of his life in the pursuit of success in the most exacting of all the professions, some hardening of the nature might have been expected; but only those who knew him in closest intimacy, knew how his weary heart wished for rest.

Honorable FRANK G. CLARK, attorney at law, Belle Plaine, Iowa, is a native of Roxbury, Vermont, where he was born April 17, 1838. His childhood was spent like most Green Mountain boys, in working on a farm and acquiring the rudiments of an education. He prepared for college at Barrea Academy, remaining some two years, and at twenty-two entering Middlebury College, where he pursued his studies until the Fall of 1862, when he enlisted as a private in Company G, 16th Regiment Vermont Infantry Volunteers, with which he remained in active service about one year, being attached most of the time to the first and second army corps. He was promoted to second, and afterwards to first Lieutenant, taking part in the battle of Gettysburg. Returning home at the expiration of the term of his service, in August, 1863, he continued his studies graduating with his class in the early Summer of 1864. Was principal of Chester Academy, Chester, Vermont, until January 1, 1865, when he again enlisted in the 26th Regiment New York Cavalry, was commissioned first lieutenant, and served on the northern frontier about five months, when the regiment was mustered out.

He commenced his legal studies in the office of Gen. F. W. Hopkins, at Rutland, and afterwards completed his reading with Hon. Peter T. Washburne, then Adjutant General, and afterwards Governor of Vermont, at Woodstock, where he was admitted to practice in December, 1866.

The following May he removed to Belle Plaine, Iowa, where he opened an office and commenced in earnest the practice of his chosen profession, making many friends and building up a good business.

In the Spring of 1871, he was solicited to become a candidate on the Republican ticket for representative to the State Legislature—was nominated, elected, and ably served his constituency in the regular session of 1872, and extra session of 1873, doing active work on the revision of the code as a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Colonel JOHN R. JONES, Sheriff of Butler County, was born in the City of Detroit, Michigan, October 8, 1831. In 1838, at about seven years of age, he removed with his parents to Wilmington, Will County, Illinois. Here he received a common school education, and learned the trade of wagon making. In 1852, Colonel Jones went to Oregon, and thence, in 1853, to Northern California, in both which states he employed his time principally in wagon making. In the Spring of 1856, he returned to Illinois, and on May 1st of that year married Miss Angeline Butterfield, of Wilmington, with whom, on the 26th of the same month, he removed to Shell Rock, Butler County, Iowa. There he engaged in wagon and plow manufacturing, continuing there until the year 1862, when he recruited company E, 32d Iowa Infantry Volunteers, of which company he was elected captain, and went to "the war." In June, 1864, he was elected colonel of the same regiment, over a senior captain, and the major, and lieutenant colonel. After participating in thirteen different battles, at the close of the war, in August, 1865, Colonel Jones returned to Shell Rock, whence, in April, 1866, he removed to a farm about a mile and a half east of Clarksville, in the same county, where, in an ornate mansion with attractive surroundings, he still resides, his private leisure being occupied by careful and wise attention to his many well-tilled acres. In October, 1871, Colonel Jones was elected Sheriff of Butler County. Two years later he was re-elected. Both as a public officer and in the various private relations of life, Colonel Jones deservedly enjoys the highest regard of his fellow-citizens.

Honorable L. L. AINSWORTH.—Mr. Ainsworth was born at New Woodstock, Madison County, New York, June 21, 1831. His early education was acquired at the Oneida Conference Seminary of Cazenovia. After quitting his attendance at this educational institution, he commenced the study of law in the office of Messrs. Miner & Sloan, at Duryter, New York. He was admitted to practice in the year 1854, at the general term of the Supreme Court for Madison County. In the Spring of 1855, he came west, and for a few months remained at Belvidere, Illinois, practicing his profession with J. R. Beckwith, present United States District Attorney in Louisiana.

In the Fall of 1855, he moved to West Union, Fayette County, Iowa, and soon afterward formed a law partnership with C. A. Newcomb. In October, 1859, he was nominated by the Democratic party of Fayette and Bremer Counties, Iowa, and elected to the position of State Senator. He served faithfully in the regular session of 1860; extra session of 1861; regular session of 1862, and the extra session of the same year.

Upon his return home from legislative duties in 1862, he raised a company for the 6th Iowa Cavalry, was commissioned captain of the company, and served with it for three years, campaigning against the Indians. In 1865 he was in command of the post Fort Randall, Dakota Territory. At the close of the war, or rather the expiration of his term of enlistment, he returned to West Union, and renewed the practice of his profession.

In 1871 he was again called upon to represent his own county citizens, he had so well represented before, and was elected to the lower branch of the State Legislature.

In the Fall of 1874 he was elected by the anti-monopolists, over C. T. Granger, the regular Republican nominee, and is the present representative in Congress for the Third District of Iowa; being the first opposition congressman elected from Iowa in twenty years. His election to this position was achieved by his known good character for honesty, integrity, candor and good sense, and a large personal acquaintance.

In December, 1857, Mr. Ainsworth was married to Miss M. E. McCool, of Freeport, Illinois. Their married life has been blessed by the birth of six children; five of whom are living.

Although a life-long Democrat, and living in a largely Republican district, he has never appeared before the people as a candidate for official position, but that their suffrages have been granted him, and he elected.

He is a lawyer of recognized ability, well informed, and keen in argument, and his effectiveness before a jury has won for him an enviable reputation.

JAMES RICE, ESQ.—Among the early settlers of Benton County, there are probably few who are entitled to as much credit for their prominent and efficient conduct in ridding this part of the state from the organized bands of thieves who so long infested it, as James Rice, Esq., who being a native of Rockingham County, North Carolina, located in Benton County, Iowa, at an early period, and has for nearly thirty years been considered one of its most reliable and respectable citizens. He was born December 10, 1810, which makes him at the present time sixty-five years of age. In early life he received few educational advantages, save those presented in practical farm labor, in which he was engaged most of the time until he was fifteen. As he was born in a state where free schools were unknown, and as his parents were too poor to afford him but very limited advantages, the sum total of his scholastic education consisted in a portion of a year being passed at a cheap, select school. Mr. Rice informed the writer that the Sunday school was of more advantage to him than all and every other opportunity he enjoyed.

When fifteen, he was apprenticed to the tailoring trade, at Danville, Virginia, where he remained for ten years, when he removed to Bledsoe's Lake, near Gallatin, in Sumner County, Tennessee, and opening a shop commenced business for himself, which he successfully carried on until April, 1849, when he sold out, and removed to Benton County, Iowa, which then had the worst reputation of any county in the state. By taking a firm stand for law and order, and against the so-called "Regulators," as well as the bands of thieves who then infested that county, he placed himself in the very unenviable position of being suspected and watched by both parties. By his straightforward, honorable course he gradually gained friends, who became numerous enough in 1852 to control the election, reorganize the county, and rescue it from thieves and "Regulators," who together had nearly ruined its prospects. He was elected county commissioner in 1851, which office, and that of supervisor, he held by re-election for some ten years, and has been a justice of the peace in his township continuously since 1852.

Mr. R. has been married three times. First, August 13, 1834, to Miss M. S. Hunt, who died October 18, 1840. He was again married October 25, 1842, to Miss Lucy Bryson, who left him a widower the second time January 22, 1854, and April 5, 1856, he married his present wife, Mrs. Mary Floyd. He lost two sons in the late war of the rebellion. One was killed March 7, 1862, at Pea Ridge, Arkansas, and the other fell at Cedar Creek, Virginia, October 9, 1864. Although a Southerner by birth and education, and having many friends and relatives in the South, he did not sympathize with them or their peculiar institutions, and freely gave up his sons for the noble cause of freedom and human liberty.

Captain J. J. BERKEY, was born in Holmes County, Ohio, August 3, 1833. His father, James Berkey, was one of the early pioneers of Ohio. The subject of this sketch had very limited school advantages, but mastered by his own effort such of the common branches, that at the age of nineteen he commenced teaching school, which he continued to do Winters, and during the Summer work as a hired farm hand. He came to West Union, Fayette County, Iowa, in 1850, and settled. Here he was in the employ of his brother, in his store, for about four years, and commenced the study of law with Judge M. McGalathery, in 1859. He was admitted to the bar, and became a partner of McGalathery's. In August, 1861, he enlisted as a private soldier in company "A," 38th Iowa Volunteers. On the organization of the company, was elected first lieutenant. Served until Summer, 1863, when by reason of resignation of the captain of his company, was promoted to that position. He served with his regiment until the consolidation of the 34th and 38th regiments, January 3, 1865. He returned home in 1865, and resumed the practice of his profession, which he yet very successfully continues. In 1873-4 was Mayor of West Union, which is the only civil office he has ever held, simply because he has had no desire to participate in politics.

In 1856 he was married to Miss Mary A. Marihugh. Mr. and Mrs. Berkey have had a family of three children, but only one child, a son, Lewis C., is now living, and he is in attendance at the University of Notre Dame, in Indiana.

In the accumulation of property Mr. Berkey has been very successful, and what he has got he has earned by good business tact and management.

W. A. TEWKSBURY.—This gentleman, a leading, active member of the Benton County bar, is a native of New England, being born in Newbury, Orange County, Vermont, November 17, 1838. He received a good common school education in the schools of his native village, and prepared for college at the Newbury Seminary and Berry Academy, spending one year at the last named institution. In the Fall of 1861, he entered Middlebury College, Vermont, where he pursued a regular course of studies for four years, graduating with honor as a member of the class of 1865. After leaving college, he spent one year in teaching as principal of the Thadford Academy, at Thadford, Vermont. During the latter portion of his college course, he spent his vacations in reading law, and continued his legal studies while teaching, as a student in the office of Honorable A. M. Dickey. In the Summer or Fall of 1866, he turned his attention exclusively to law, and became a student in the office of Honorable C. W. Clark, at Chelsea, Vermont, where he remained for some fifteen months, when he was admitted to the bar.

Like thousands of other young men born and educated in New England, he began to long for a broader, more promising field of labor than was presented in the East, and so in the following Spring, June, 1867, landed in Iowa, and located at Belle Plaine, where he has since continued to reside. He at once entered earnestly into the practice of his chosen profession, forming a partnership with his former schoolmate, Honorable Frank G. Clark, with whom he remained associated some five years, when he formed a copartnership with E. S. Johnson, which last partnership lasted until January 1, 1875, when it was dissolved by mutual consent. As a lawyer, he met at first the difficulties usually encountered by young attorneys who attempt to build up a practice, surrounded as he was by older lawyers, who had been actively engaged since the birth of the state. He, however, soon acquired a reputation as an advocate and criminal lawyer, equal to the best in the district, which has long been noted as possessing one of the best bars in Iowa. As a speaker, he is clear, logical, and bold, presenting his arguments with great precision, power, and eloquence, while he is almost invincible in his presentation of facts, the application of law and testimony, and in the mesmeric influence he acquires over the minds of a jury. His general practice is good, while his criminal business is large, and extends into all the adjoining counties.

Mr. Tewksbury was married in November, 1868, to Miss Lizzie S. Douglas, of Boston, Massachusetts, by whom he has two children.

Colonel NICHOLAS GREUSEL.—This gentleman, a resident of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, is a native of Bavaria, Germany, where he was born July 4, 1817. He immigrated to America with his parents and nine brothers and sisters in the Spring of 1834. The paternal funds being exhausted upon their arrival in New York, young Nicholas was informed that he must earn his own support. Unable to speak a word of English, he started out to seek employment, and fortunately first made application to the widow of Nicholas Fish, mother of the present Secretary of State, Hamilton Fish, who took great interest in him, and taught him to read and write. The following Spring he removed to Detroit, where he was engaged in milling until the breaking out of the Mexican war, when he enlisted, and was commissioned a captain in the 1st Michigan Infantry Volunteers, and served until the close of the war, when he returned home and engaged in the lumbering business, which he followed, except about one year, during which time he held the office of Inspector General of Lumber for the state, until the Fall of 1857, when he was broken up and left without a dollar. He then removed to Chicago, and was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, until the Spring of 1861, when raising a company, he was chosen major and afterwards promoted to lieutenant colonel of the 7th Illinois Infantry Volunteers. After serving some three months, he was appointed by Governor Yates, colonel of the 37th Illinois, with which regiment he remained, excepting what time he was in command of a brigade, until February 7, 1863, when he was honorably discharged.

Honorable JESSE WASSON, M.D., who was the original proprietor and founder of La Porte City, is of Quaker descent, and was born on the 22d day of October, 1821, at Richmond, Indiana, in which beautiful village his youth was mostly passed. He well improved the limited educational advantages which were afforded him, that of the primitive "Hoosier Common School," which was much inferior to the present excellent public schools of Iowa.

When twelve years of age he removed with his parents to La Porte, Indiana, which was then a new town, having been laid out only one year previous. Here he went to work with his father, who was a blacksmith, and made such proficiency that before he was fifteen he made a full hand. After entering the shop he only attended school two terms, but continued his studies during what leisure time he could obtain, keeping his book constantly with him and committing to memory many a difficult lesson while blowing the fire or moulding the pliable iron. He adopted the plan, when he was eighteen, of working ten hours and studying four, by which division of time he was enabled, though under circumstances which would have discouraged a youth possessing less energy and perseverance, to acquire a very good knowledge of the common English branches and made considerable proficiency in the higher mathematics and classics.

At nineteen he commenced reading law, which he continued for about one year, but owing to the continued opposition of his mother he then abandoned the idea of entering that profession, and commenced the study of medicine, which he continued by himself until he was twenty-two, when he attended one course of lectures four months, at Indiana Medical College, after which he returned to work and study for the next eight months, attending a second course the following year. During the Spring and Summer of 1846 he commenced practice at Milton, and in the Fall and Winter of the same year attended his third and last course, graduating in February, 1847. That same Spring he removed to New Buffalo, Michigan, where he began in earnest the practice of his life profession. After remaining some three years, he returned to La Porte, Indiana, where he continued the practice of medicine until June or July, 1853, when he came to Iowa, locating first at Vinton, where he engaged in real estate business in addition to his medical practice, and remained some two years. In March, 1855, he erected a store and dwelling on the present site of La Porte City, and in the following June laid out the original town plot, as it now exists, on land he had entered the previous year. Through his labors and influence, the first state road in Black Hawk County was surveyed and established in the Spring of 1855, running from Vinton to Cedar Falls.

For a number of years the Doctor was engaged in selling goods, and in carrying on various improvements and enterprises calculated to advance the welfare and prosperity of his new town, in addition to his medical practice. Among other things, he erected a steam sawmill in 1856. At the breaking out of the war in the Spring of 1861, he took an active interest in, and did much to, encourage enlistments. He was chosen Captain of a company raised in that part of the county, but, owing to his Quaker education, he did not feel that he could accept. He was, however, September 1, 1862, appointed and commissioned Assistant Surgeon of the 23d Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers. After serving nine months he resigned and returned home, where he remained a few months, when he received the appointment and was commissioned Surgeon of the 9th Iowa Cavalry, with which regiment he remained until March, 1865, when, on account of poor health, he resigned and came home.

Dr. Wasson was for three years, 1867, 1868, 1869, a member of the Board of Supervisors, and in the Fall of 1869 was elected to the Lower House of the Iowa General Assembly, in which body he served for two years, rendering valuable service. He has filled the office of justice of the peace for a number of years, and is at the present time Mayor of La Porte City, having been elected in March, 1875.

Politically, Dr. W. was originally a Whig. Joining the Republican party at its inception, he assisted to organize it in Iowa, and acted with it until the Spring of 1872, when he liberalized, and has since supported the opposition under the various names which it has received in this state.

In November, 1870, he established the La Porte City Progress, a neat seven column paper, which in 1872 he enlarged to an eight column sheet. The Progress is a live, wide-awake paper, well managed and edited, and has been under his direct control since its first inception.

THE BUCHANAN COUNTY BULLETIN, William Toman, editor and proprietor, is the leading paper of the county, Republican in politics, and one of the influential journals of the state. It has just entered its eleventh year, having been founded in June, 1865, by John L. Loomis. Soon after its establishment it superseded and absorbed the Guardian, then conducted by S. B Goodnow. Under the management of Mr. Loomis, who besides being a man of high character, was a writer of decided ability, the BULLETIN at once took a prominent and deservedly influential position among the press of Iowa, and grew in prosperity and merit until it was established upon a secure foundation, and was recognized as one of the fixed institutions of the county.

In April, 1869, Mr. Loomis disposed of the establishment to its present proprietor. The change in proprietorship wrought no change in the general tone of the Bulletin, or descent from the high ground of conscientious principles which it has ever maintained. It is decided, out-spoken, and earnest in its political opinions, without being unduly partisan. It takes strong and advanced grounds on all the reforms of the day, never hesitating, from mercenary considerations, to honestly advocate what it deems for the best interests of society, or attack when attack is called for. But it is as the exponent of the interests and material development of the county and city that the Bulletin aims for distinction and achieving its greatest honor and success. It has always been the earnest advocate and supporter of all enterprises calculated to add to the wealth, population and prosperity of Independence, Buchanan County. Its influence in this direction has been beneficial and abundantly successful. It is now in a flourishing condition, being well supplied with new type, material and machinery of the latest and most approved styles and enjoys a large and increasing patronage.

Honorable WILLIAM A. JONES was born August 24, 1824, at Middlebury, Schoharie County, New York, where the earlier years of his life were spent in attending common school, and in receiving a practical farm education. The winter after he was seventeen he attended Jefferson Academy for four months, and then entered his father's store as a clerk, remaining until the Spring of 1845, when he commenced business for himself by opening a store in Breakabean, New York, which he successfully conducted for about seven years, when he sold and removed to Benton Center, Yates County, New York, purchasing a general variety store of Cole & Savage. Soon after taking charge of this establishment, Mr. Jones' health failed to such an extent that he was compelled to leave the management of his business entirely in the hands of his employees, who conducted it in such a manner that at the end of two years he found himself on the verge of bankruptcy. He immediately went to work to close out his business, which he accomplished in a short time, paying every debt, which he did at a loss of about ten thousand dollars. Having only some two hundred and fifty dollars' worth of refuse goods, with no other means left, he was necessarily compelled to abandon the mercantile business, and renting some land, he raised twenty acres of broom corn, which he manufactured and sold, clearing above living expenses just three hundred and ten dollars.

Not having met with the success he expected in this enterprise, he then determined to seek a fortune in the West, and packing up his few household goods he landed at Independence, Iowa, in the Spring of 1855, with just ten dollars in money. With his usual restless energy he immediately rented half of a very small store on West Main Street, and stocking it with a small quantity of goods he had bought on thirty days' time, put it in charge of his wife, who in five months time sold over five thousand dollars' worth of goods. Mr. Jones himself engaged in the lumbering business. Commencing small, his first purchase being only two trees, for which he gave five dollars, he gradually increased so that in less than six months he had cleared over two thousand dollars. He carried on this business for some three years, cutting from standing timber during that time about one hundred thousand feet of native lumber.

In the Summer of 1857 he erected a large hotel at Fayette which he completed and furnished at a cost of over ten thousand dollars, besides engaging somewhat in real estate business. In the Fall of 1857, when the panic of that year struck the state, it found Mr. Jones largely involved, as he was owing some thirteen thousand dollars, although owning property worth about twenty thousand. He immediately converted every thing he had into money, and paid his obligations as far as he could, but owing to the great sacrifice he was compelled to make, he did not pay in full until several years later. Regarding his integrity more sacred than life, he did not allow this second failure to dishearten him, but at once went to work with untiring energy to pay his debts, which he successfully accomplished in 1865, paying one hundred cents on the dollar.

In the Fall of 1859 he engaged in stock-buying with P. C. Wilcox, who furnished the capital and shared the profits. He made the first consignment of stock thirteen cars of hogs, ever shipped from Independence, but which did not prove a success, as after taking them to New York he was compelled to sell them at a total loss to the firm of about fifteen hundred dollars. This partnership was continued until 1865, when Mr. Jones was enabled to pay the last dollar of his old obligations and again commenced life out of debt, and with just one hundred and sixty-five dollars in money. Since then he has continued the same business with varying results, though usually meeting with success. He now owns and operates, in connection with his stock business, a half section farm, with sixty-five acres of good timber land adjoining, besides a good residence and other property in Independence. During the last five years his stock transactions have amounted to not less than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum.

In the Spring of 1864 Mr. Jones was elected Mayor of Independence, re-elected in 1865, and again in 1870, when he positively declined to be a candidate for further re-election.

He was married at Schoharie, New York, January 25, 1844, to Miss Elizabeth C., daughter of Rev. David Poor, of the Troy Conference, by whom he had ten children, only two of whom are now living. She died in August, 1868, and he was again married the following Summer to Mrs. Mary E. Anable, who has since made him a useful and loving wife, rendering his home happy, and frequently buying and shipping stock during his absence.

Honorable LOUIS CASE, Representative from Bremer County in the Legislature of Iowa in 1874-5, was born in the town of Harmony, Chautauqua County, New York, July 6, 1834. He was the twelfth of fourteen children of the same parents, of whom eleven were boys, and all reared upon a farm. He attended one term at the Mayville academy, and one at the Jamestown academy, prominent educational institutions of Chautauqua County; with these exceptions his education was obtained at district schools. In November, 1854, when in the 21st year of his age, Mr. Case resolved to seek fame and fortune in the West, and accordingly emigrated to Illinois. Locating in DeKalb County in that State, he there remained one year, engaged in teaching school. In March, 1855, again emigrating westward, he located at Delhi, Delaware County, Iowa, in the office of the Recorder of which county he became a clerk. This position he retained until August in the same year, when he settled at Waverly, Bremer County, where he has ever since continued to reside. Entering as a clerk the office of the Recorder of Bremer County soon after his arrival at Waverly, Mr. Case continued therein until June, 1858. In August of that year he was elected Clerk of the District Court. In October, 1860, he was re-elected to the same office. In October, 1864, he was elected Recorder, continuing in that office the succeeding two years. Thereafter, in January, 1869, he was appointed by the Board of Supervisors of Bremer County to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Honorable O. F. Avery, County Judge. In October following, he was elected the first County Auditor, serving the full term. He was next elected Representative from Bremer County in the State Legislature, in October, 1873. Besides the several more important offices named, Mr. Case was a member of the School Board of the City of Waverly in the years 1873-4-5, and three times elected Assessor of the same city—in 1869, 1873, and 1875. Otherwise, he was joint proprietor of The Waverly Republican, in 1861; has been Notary Public for Bremer County during eighteen successive years, and has profitably conducted an extensive land and conveyancing business, when not officially engaged. In all his political life, Mr. Case has been invariably a Republican.

Mr. JEREMIAH PERRIN, a prominent pioneer settler of Clarksville, Butler County, Vice President of the Shell Rock Valley Bank, of Greene, and a leading Director of the Butler County Bank, of Clarksville, was born in the village of Cottes Brooke, Northamptonshire, England, November 28, 1820. Reared under humble circumstances upon a farm, he enjoyed no special educational privileges. December, 1843, at the age of twenty-three years, he united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Woods, of the village of Old, Northamptonshire, accompanied by whom, in the Spring of 1844, he emigrated to America, and located about ten miles east of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. There he engaged in stone quarrying for about two years, after that in farming until the Spring of 1851. In March of the latter year he further emigrated to Muscatine, Iowa, and thence in September following to the immediate vicinity of Clarksville, where he has ever since continued to reside, principally devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits. The only serious misfortune that has befallen him during the latter period, was the death of his very estimable wife, which occurred in November, 1865. In June, 1866, Mr. Perrin re-married with Miss Ann Hillman, of Rockford, Illinois, who still survives. By hard work and strict economy, as well as by the practice of the higher virtues that ennoble man, Mr. Perrin has steadily risen from a state of comparative poverty and obscurity to that of one of the largest landed proprietors and noted farmers and capitalists in Butler County.

J. S. TILFORD.—It is rarely the case that men are judged fairly by their associates in the age in which they live. The petty jealousies and business strifes common to all communities, so warp and bias the judgment that an impartial verdict can seldom be obtained until these feelings have been dispelled by the hand of the common leveler, Time. But in spite of this hindrance to a just contemporary estimate of character, the historian has found a man in Benton County, who, by the natural disinterested, self denying benevolence of his character and life, has to a great extent dispelled these feelings, as is shown by the universal respect and deference manifested towards him by all classes, who unite in pronouncing him the most public spirited and truly benevolent citizen Vinton has ever possessed. Coming here at an early day, with ample means at his disposal, he has given away enough to have made him one of the wealthiest men in the county, had he used the business shrewdness he possessed for his own individual interests. It is scarcely necessary to say that the man referred to is J. S. Tilford, who is now in his sixty-fifth year, having been born July 30, 1811, in an Indian fort in Clark County, Clark's Grant, Indiana. He belongs to a long lived race, as his father, John Tilford, who was of Irish descent, and a Virginian by birth, was killed by an accident when ninety years of age. When a boy of fifteen, Mr. Tilford was bound out to the cabinet trade, serving a regular apprenticeship, worked at the trade until the Spring of 1832, when he enlisted with a company of "Rangers," for the Black Hawk war. He was quartered in Chicago, when that now beautiful "Queen City of the Lakes," was scarcely large enough to be called a hamlet, and was offered a one hundred and sixty acre claim in the best part of the city for twenty dollars. From Chicago he went to Rock Island, and was present at the Treaty made by General Scott with the Sac and Fox Indians for that tract of land known as the Black Hawk Purchase, which treaty was made at the close of the Black Hawk war, on the present site of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad depot in the City of Davenport, September 15, 1832. Remaining at Rock Island a little over one month, he had the cholera, and was one of the few out of four hundred cases to recover. Leaving Rock Island, the "Rangers" wintered at Fort Gibson, Arkansas, and in the following Spring were sent south to make treaties with the Pawanees, Comanches, and other Indians on Red River, near the Texas border. Upon returning to Indiana, after an absence of thirteen months, he attended school some six months at Washington, Indiana, which was all the educational advantages he ever enjoyed. The following Spring he removed to Franklin, Indiana, and engaged in the cabinet business on his own account, which he successfully carried on for about seventeen years, when in the Spring of 1851 he sold out and removed to Fremont, now Vinton, Iowa, and entered a section of land, more than half of which is now within the corporate limits of the City of Vinton. That same season he laid off "Tilford's Addition to Vinton," embracing six blocks south of Concord street, and both sides of Main street, all of which he gave away, excepting one block which he offered the county if they would build a court house on it, and four lots on which he erected his own residence. He afterwards laid out other additions, and disposed of many more lots on the same liberal conditions. Through his energetic and persevering efforts, the location of the Iowa College for the Blind was secured at Vinton, and received from him a liberal donation of time and money. He also founded Tilford Academy, a school which has become deservedly popular and prosperous. In short, nothing worthy of support has ever failed in receiving from him that encouragement its merits deserved.

Honorable LEVI FULLER.—Mr. Fuller is a representative man of Fayette County, and, in fact, of the State of Iowa. He was born in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, August 14, 1824. He did not have the advantages of a collegiate education, consequently the success he has attained in social and political circles and affairs demonstrates what can be accomplished by energy and industry, and characterizes him a self made man. The subject of this sketch spent his early years working with his father, cutting wood, splitting rails, and clearing land. This was when Tioga County, and a great part of the present State of Pennsylvania, was in its infancy as regards wealth, and the development of its great resources.

When about eighteen years of age he made up his mind that he was able to make his way in the world at labor not so difficult as farming, and commenced and read medicine with Dr. Barlow, of New Castle, Penn.

In 1845 he was united in marriage to Miss J. E. Tipton, of Howard, Center County, Pennsylvania, and moved to Stephenson County, Illinois, where he successfully practiced his profession for several years. After moving to and residing in Wisconsin about one year, he came to West Union, Fayette County, Iowa, in April, 1853, where he has since resided. Here he practiced his profession for a time, but being of a financial turn of mind, he gave his attention to business of various kinds which opened up at that favorable period in the history of Iowa, and the result is that he has acquired a comfortable competence. He has been closely identified with the history of West Union, and Fayette County. Being public spirited and benevolent, he has given of his means, to all public and charitable purposes, several thousand dollars. He has also laid out three additions to the town of West Union.

He was the Representative from this county in the Legislature in the year 1862. It was during the early history of the war of the Rebellion, and when the governors of our states had summoned to their councils their best men to assist in organizing regiments then being raised and fitted out for the front. While a member of the Ninth General Assembly, he materially aided Governor Kirkwood, and was strongly urged to accept a commission. He was commissioned as surgeon of the 36th Iowa, but before he had decided definitely on its acceptance, the position of Internal Revenue Collector for the Third District of Iowa was offered him, which he accepted. The district consisted of twelve counties. The office was, of course, new and without precedent, and an intricate and unpopular law. He organized the workings of the Internal Revenue Department in his district, and held the position for three years, filling it to the entire satisfaction of the Government. He resigned, and gave his attention actively to private business. For the term of two years, in company with his son, William E. Fuller, he owned and conducted the West Union Bank, which has since merged into the Fayette County National Bank.

During the year of 1874 he was appointed by Governor Carpenter one of the commissioners to distribute the sum of $50,000, appropriated by the State Legislature to relieve the grasshopper sufferers of northwestern Iowa. He has held various minor civil offices.

It is due Mr. Fuller to say that what he undertakes he does thoroughly—nothing can be half done with or by him. In politics he was originally a Whig, and on the decline of that party became a Republican, with which party he has since acted. He is thoroughly independent in his criticism of all political parties, and if his party adopts measures which he believes not to be for the best interests of the country, his party allegiance does not interfere with his emphatic expression of his views concerning their injustice. He is not a partisan in the usual acceptance of the term. Dr. Fuller's family consisted of three children — one son and two daughters; the latter died at an early age. His son and only surviving child, William E. Fuller, resides at West Union, and is engaged in the practice of law; is married, and has a family of three children.

We can not close this sketch better than by saying that in Dr. Fuller we have an example of what can be accomplished by having a purpose in view, urged on by perseverance and guarded by honesty, and not permitting individual advancement to interfere with a proper and honorable treatment of society, of the world, mankind, and himself.

BENJAMIN RUPERT.—This gentleman, who for nearly forty years has been one of the most honored and highly respected citizens of Dubuque, and for three years past President of the Old Settler's Association, was born May 1, 1805, in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he received his education and spent the earlier years of his life. He located at Dubuque, Iowa, May 15, 1836, where he has since resided, and was, in 1839, appointed by Honorable Robert Lucas, the first Governor of the Territory of Iowa, Justice of the Peace for that county, which office he held for about four years. In March, 1852, he was appointed County Clerk by William Y. Lovell to fill an unexpired term, and in the following October was elected to the same office, which position he held by re-election till the 1st of January, 1859. He is now Deputy Surveyor of Customs for Dubuque, which official position he has acceptably filled since March 1, 1871.

Colonel S. G. VAN ANDA.—Prominent among the leading lawyers of Northern Iowa, and the earlier settlers who have long been identified with the growth, progress and development of this portion of the state, may be mentioned the subject of this brief sketch, Honorable Saine Gattshall Van Anda, now a resident of Delaware County, Iowa, which for more than twenty years has been his home. He is a son of James W. and Catherine Van Anda, and was born April 20, 1835, on the banks of the beautiful Susquehanna, at Sanberry, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, where his ancestors had resided for several generations, having emigrated from Germany. At an early age he removed with his parents to Knox County, Ohio, where his childhood was passed like that of many others who have arisen to distinction in after life, in attending common school and assisting his father to till a small farm. In the Fall of 1851 he entered the Ohio Western University at Delaware, Ohio, where he pursued his studies for four years, graduating with honor, just after entering his twenty-first year, as a member of the class of '55. During his junior and senior years he read law with Honorable Charles Smithson and Honorable W. P. Reed, and soon after completing his academic course was admitted, by examination, to the bar of the Supreme Court of Ohio, by Honorable —— Ranney, Chief Justice of the state. The same year he removed to Delhi, Delaware County, Iowa, where, immediately entering upon the practice of his profession, he soon took a position at the bar far in advance of his age and experience, securing a large business and receiving the confidence of all, made himself respected by his associates in the profession.

In the Summer of 1861, without any solicitation on his part, he received the Republican nomination, and in the following Fall was elected by a majority vote of over eight hundred to the lower House of the Iowa Legislature, where he served his constituency and the state during the ninth session of the General Assembly with credit and distinction, making many friends, and becoming well and favorably known among the leading men of the state. He was a member of the committee on the Judiciary and chairman of the Committee on Incorporations, and was largely instrumental in securing the passage of the "House bill" dividing the state into Congressional districts, which, in opposition to the "Senate bill," finally became a law. He rendered valuable service in the advancement of several important measures, is said to be the father of the "Dog Law," and proved himself in every respect to be a good and successful legislator, being ever earnest and constant in the support of whatever he believed to be right and just.

On returning home in the Spring of 1862 he received the appointment and was commissioned by Governor Samuel J. Kirkwood, Major of the 21st Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, was promoted to the lieutenant colonelcy of the same regiment May 22, 1863, and had command of the regiment during their entire term of service, excepting about three months. He led his regiment in a desperate charge at Black River, Mississippi, May 17, 1863, in which he lost eighty-three men out of six hundred in less than three minutes. On that never-to-be-forgotten day, May 22, 1863, whose fearful carnage caused such a wail of bitter grief to ascend from thousands of homes throughout the length and breadth of the land, his regiment was ordered with other troops to make an assault upon Fort Beauregard, one of the defenses of Vicksburg. To Colonel Van Anda's cool judgment and determined bravery, is due the success in that portion of the field where his regiment was placed. At a critical moment, when the line was being mowed down by a most terrific fire of the enemy, his support became demoralized and fled, his horse was shot from under him, and he was only able to save the honor of the brave 21st by conduct which at another time would have been reckless and fool-hardy. As the line wavered under the terrific fire, and were about to fall back, he sprang to the front to a position in advance of the column and shouted in a voice that rang out clear and distinct above the battle din: "Comrades, remember Iowa, and save her honor. Forward!" Nerved and inspired by his noble words, the ranks grew firm again, and although they left one-third their number on that fearful field of carnage, staining the green sward with their precious life's blood, they hied on until they found comparative safety beneath the shelter of their enemy's fortifications. He was engaged with his regiment in the numerous battles which preceded the capture of Mobile, led the advance of General Canby's army at the attack on Spanish Fort, and took part in the final occupation of the City of Mobile. His regiment was mustered out of the United States service at the close of the war at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, having made a proud record, and seen as much hard fighting and performed as meritorious service as any regiment in the Western army.

On returning home he received the nomination of the Soldiers Convention, held at Des Moines in the Summer or Fall of 1865, for lieutenant governor, on the ticket with Colonel Thomas Benton, who was nominated for governor. Feeling, as he emphatically expressed it, that "the Republican party could yet be saved," he declined to run in opposition to it. The following year he was nominated by the Liberal party for secretary of state, which, at the solicitation of his friends he reluctantly accepted, and made a strong canvass against his popular Republican opponent, Colonel Ed. Wright, running more than three thousand ahead of his ticket. It is asserted by his friends that he was authoritatively tendered the nomination of governor if he would renounce the opposition and use his powerful influence and ability in carrying the state for the Republican ticket. But having left it from principle when it was in power, and joined his fortunes to one hopeless-ly in the minority, he chose defeat in a just cause rather than success as a candidate of a party he had become convinced was corrupt and wrong. He has since been a candidate for re-election to the General Assembly, and for district attorney in his district, in both of which he was defeated, though making a strong canvass, and drawing many votes from his Republican opponent. For the last few years he has entirely eschewed politics, and devoted his entire energy to the practice of his profession, securing a large and lucrative business in his own and adjoining counties. Had he not positively refused to allow his name to be presented at the last Democratic Congressional Convention, he would most probably have received the nomination.

Colonel Van Anda was married in March, 1859, to Miss Lydia B. Weatherby, of Morrow County, Ohio, a bright, intelligent lady, of more than ordinary ability, and loved by all who knew her, by whom he has two children, Charles, aged fourteen, and Kate, aged eight years.

Honorable EDWARD H. STILES was born at Granby, Hartford County, Connecticut, October 8, 1836. He received an academic education, and in 1856 began the study of law. In December of the latter year he came to Wapello County, Iowa, where during the ensuing Winter he taught school. In the Spring of 1857 he resumed the study of law in the office of Colonel S. W. Summers, then a leading attorney of Ottumwa, with whom he formed a copartnership, on his admission to the bar, in December following.

In 1858 Mr. Stiles was elected a member of the City Council of Ottumwa. In 1859 he was elected city solicitor. During the memorable Presidential campaign of 1860 he very heartily espoused the cause of the Honorable Stephen A. Douglas, advocating his claims to the Presidency in many forcible speeches. At the Presidential election in the same year Mr. Stiles voted for the last time with the Democratic party, with which he had previously been identified, allying himself, on the breaking out of the great rebellion, with the Republican party, and has ever since been an avowed and earnest Republican. In January, 1861, at the first session of the first Board of Supervisors in the county, Mr. Stiles was elected attorney of the board; a year later he was re-elected. In January, 1864, he took his seat in the lower House of the State Legislature as a Republican Representative from Wapello County, serving during the session on the important standing committees on judiciary and finance, and on a notable special committee on a prohibitory liquor law. In 1865 Mr. Stiles was elected over his former law partner, Colonel Summers, who was his Democratic opponent on this occasion, to the State Senate. Here, likewise, he was prominent as a member of the Judiciary and Finance Committees, and of a joint committee of the Legislature appointed to investigate the facts respecting a certain large deficit in the Swamp Land Fund of the State. As chairman, on the part of the Senate, of the latter committee, Mr. Stiles personally conducted the examination of all the witnesses, took all the testimony and wrote the report, the investigation consuming the greater part of the session. At the same session, in 1866, the office of Reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court, the incumbents of which were previously appointed by the judges of the court, was made elective. This unwise innovation was strenuously opposed by Mr. Stiles, who was rather remarkably, considering this fact, nominated by the Republican State Convention, held during the succeeding Summer, as a candidate for the office, and elected at the ensuing Fall election. Thereupon he resigned his position of State Senator, three years of the term of which were unexpired.

In October, 1870, Mr. Stiles was re-elected to the office of Reporter. Four years later, upon the expiration of his second term, he positively declined to be further a candidate, and accordingly retired.

As Reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court, Mr. Stiles prepared the head notes and published sixteen volumes—numbers 22 to 37 inclusive—of the Iowa Reports, which rank high among the law reports of the country. During 1873–74 he also prepared and published a new Iowa Digest, in two volumes. This work was projected by T. F. Withrow, Esq., last predecessor of Mr. Stiles in the office of Reporter, who was early compelled to relinquish its preparation in consequence of an important professional engagement in another state. Indubitable evidence of great care and excessive labor expended upon the work appear on every page.

Mr. Stiles is associated in professional practice with E. L. Burton, Esq., a gentleman of high personal character and eminent legal attainments. Messrs. Stiles & Burton number among their very respectable clients the corporations of all the four railroads centering at Ottumwa.

September 19, 1861, in the City of Philadelphia, Mr. Stiles was united in marriage with Miss Emma Vernon, of Chester County, Pennsylvania.

Captain RICHARD B. APPELMAN.—Mr. Appelman was born at Mystic, Connecticut, March 15, 1827; attended school until 13 years of age, when he commenced a sea-faring life and continued in it actively until 1849, serving in every position from cabin boy of a whaler to captain of a merchantman. He has been in nearly every ocean on the globe, and had all the hardy experiences of a sailor's life. He settled at Clermont in 1854, where he has since resided. June 16, 1856, he married Miss Mary J. Thompson, of that place. They have a family of seven children; Mary J., John, William H., Irene P., Genevieve, Ruth and Frances. In 1863 he went to New York, shipped as mate on the Pacific, and went to Bermuda to collect tropical fish for P. T. Barnum's aquarium. Had a very successful trip. Being largely interested in real estate at Clermont, on the completion of the B. C. R. & M. Railroad he opened his large private residence as a hotel, and it is popularly known as the New England House.

Honorable ORAN FAVILLE, first Lieutenant Governor and ex-officio President of the State Board of Education, was born October 13, 1817, at Manheim, Herkimer County, New York. He was reared upon a farm, educated at district schools, and from 1834 until 1838 engaged in school teaching during the intervening Winter. In the latter year he removed to Ohio, where during the next succeeding two years he further engaged in teaching and in preparatory study at Granville College. Subsequently during two years he studied at Fairfield Academy, in his native county, with intervals of teaching. In 1842 he entered the junior class in Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Connecticut, at which institution he graduated in 1844. In the latter year he was appointed teacher of Ancient Languages in the Oneida Conference Seminary at Cazenovia, New York. In 1846 he accepted a like appointment in the Troy Conference Seminary at West Poulterey, Vermont, of which institution he afterward became Principal. Thence emigrating to the West, in 1852 he entered upon the duties of Professor of Ancient Languages in McKendree College, at Lebanon, Illinois. While President of the Wesleyan Female College at Delaware, Ohio, in 1855, ill-health compelled his resignation; thereupon he removed to Iowa and opened a farm in Mitchell County. There he was elected the second county judge in 1857. The same year he was elected the first Lieutenant Governor and ex-officio President of the State Board of Education, then newly organized. In April, 1863, he became acting secretary of the board, and in January following, 1864, was appointed secretary by Governor Kirkwood to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Honorable Thomas H. Burton, Jr. In May, 1863, he was commissioned by the Honorable Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War, one of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York. In March, 1864, he was elected by the Legislature Superintendent of Public Instruction, the Board of Education having been abolished. To the same office he was re-elected by the people in 1865, but on account of ill health in 1867 he resigned. In 1867, also, he removed from Des Moines, of which place he became a resident in 1863, to Waverly, Bremer County, where he remained in retirement until his death, which occurred October 31, 1872. Governor Faville, in addition to his public labors, was President of the State Teachers' Association during 1864 and 1865, and edited the Iowa School Journal from 1863 to 1867.

He was married July 24, 1845, to Miss Maria M. Peck, of Dewitt, New York.

WARREN BARNHART is editor and proprietor of the Independence Conservative, one of the oldest and best established papers west of the Mississippi, and the organ of the Democratic party in Buchanan County. This paper is the direct continuation of the Independence Civilian, which made its appearance more than twenty years ago, being established May 17, 1855, by B. F. Parker and James Hilleary, who continued it in a very creditable manner until February, 1857, when they sold to S. S. Allen, who shortly after disposed of a half interest to G. W. Barnhart and J. S. Cornwell. After a few months Barnhart sold and went West, leaving the firm Allen & Cornwell, who jointly conducted the paper until March, 1858, when Barnhart returned and purchased Cornwell's interest, the firm became Allen & Barnhart. It remained under the management of these gentlemen until the Spring of 1869, when they sold to Cornelius Hedges, in whose hands it remained until August, 1860, when it became the property of the well known newspaper firm of Barnhart Bros., who successfully run it, greatly increasing its patronage and income, until July, 1863, when on account of some dissatisfaction in the party they sold to the Buchanan County Democratic Association, who continued its publication for about one year under the able editorial management of Hon. Oliver H. P. Roszell. In the Spring of 1864, the material was again purchased by the Barnhart Bros., who, changing the name, issued the first number of the Independence Conservative. This firm then continued its publication, making several additions and improvements until the Spring of 1872, when W. Barnhart, the present proprietor, purchased the interest of his brothers, came to Independence and took personal charge of the office, making it in all its appointments a first-class weekly newspaper.

In May, 1874, the office was entirely destroyed in the memorable fire of that year, but Mr. Barnhart with his usual enterprise and business tact, immediately started for Chicago, purchased a new office, and had it running again in a short time. The Conservative is a six column quarto, neatly printed, and managed with a good degree of business and editorial ability. It is purely a local paper, advocating the interests of Independence and Buchanan County, before any and all other interests. Although Democratic in politics, it is not intensely or bitterly partisan, but handles the questions of the day in such a manner as not to offend its readers, though they may hold different political opinions. It has a steady and increasing patronage, receiving a liberal support from the business men of the county.

PRESLEY HUTTON.—This gentleman, the original proprietor of the now pleasant Village of Belle Plaine, Iowa, was born March 5, 1812, in Madison County, Virginia, but removed with his parents, when about four years of age, to Champaign County, Ohio, where he remained until he was twenty-five, receiving his education on the farm and at the common school. At twenty he learned the mason's trade, which he followed for several years in that state and Indiana. In the Fall of 1846, he bought a farm some eight miles from Indianapolis, Ind., where he remained some eight years, when he sold and purchased a fine farm near Bloomington, Illinois, which he conducted until the Fall of 1856, when moving to Benton County, Iowa, he bought a tract of land and improved a farm near Irwin, in that county. In the Spring of 1861, he purchased the land on which now stands the City of Belle Plaine, negotiated with the railroad company, and secured the location of a depot, and then laid out a town, which, through his good management and liberality, has become a flourishing city, containing over two thousand inhabitants.

Mr. Hutton was joined in marriage with Miss Margaret Johnson in July, 1834. She died at Belle Plaine, September, 1874, leaving a host of sorrowing friends.

SAMUEL B. EVANS was born at Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee, July 31, 1837. When less than five years of age he removed with his parents to Iowa, settling within the limits of the present county of Davis, at what is now Springtown, where was established, about March, 1842, the first post-office in the county. Of this office, then called Fox, Mr. Evans' father—Samuel Anderson Evans—was the first postmaster. Mr. Evans received a classic education principally at Fairfield, in Jefferson County, at a then branch of the State University. In 1854-5-6 he studied "the art preservative of all arts," in various printing offices in Keokuk County. In 1858, in company with Judge Casey, now of Fort Madison, he established the Iowa Democrat at Sigourney, in the last named county. In 1860, Judge Casey was succeeded in this enterprise by Mr. J. B. Shellenbarger.

During the second year of "the war," in August, 1862, Mr. Evans entered the service of the Union, on the non-commissioned staff of Col. S. A. Rice, of the 33d Iowa Infantry, as commissary sergeant. Subsequently, in September, 1864, he was commissioned a lieutenant in the 4th Arkansas Cavalry, a loyal white regiment raised in Arkansas. Immediately previous to the close of the war, Lieutenant Evans was recommended for promotion to a captaincy in the same regiment. Also, about the same time, in order to test for his personal satisfaction his military capabilities, he submitted himself to a rigid examination by a military commission composed of officers of the regular army, appointed to examine applicants for promotion. By this commission, of which Major General Solomon was President, Lieutenant Evans was recommended for a captaincy in the regular army. The war closing soon afterward, however, the recommendations in both cases failed to accomplish the purposes intended.

In the beginning of the great civil conflict, Mr. Shellenbarger also entered the army, whereupon the publication of the Iowa Democrat ceased, and the office was closed. In 1863, during this state of suspended journalistic animation, the war of the Rebellion was supplemented by "the Skunk River War," originating in the delliberate shooting to death of a Democratic orator in Keokuk County, while making a Democratic speech. Pending hostilities at this time between the respective beligerents, a party of home guards from Washington, in the adjoining County of Washington, valiantly assailed the Democrat office at Sigourney. While ravaging its contents, their patriotism was excessively aroused by mistaking a figure of Old Ben. Franklin attached to a hand press for that of the then—in that vicinity—very unpopular Jeff. Davis.

In January, 1862, Mr. Evans, in connection with Mr. E. L. Burton, established in Wapello County the Ottumwa Mercury, with which he resumed active identification as editor at the close of the war. In 1868, disposing of his interest in the Mercury to Mr. Samuel H. Burton, who had meanwhile succeeded his brother above named, Mr. Evans in company with Messrs. H. M. McCully and M. V. B. Bennett, established at Ottumwa another paper entitled The Copperhead. In 1870, having purchased the interest of both his partners, Mr. Evans changed this title to that of The Ottumwa Democrat, which title it still retains. The Ottumwa Democrat is one of the leading newspaper exponents of Democratic politics in the state. It is published daily and weekly, and is ably conducted by Mr. Evans, who has remained its sole editor and proprietor from 1870 till the present time.

Politically, Mr. Evans has ever been a firm and consistent professor of the Democratic faith. In November, 1866, he was nominated by President Johnson for postmaster of Ottumwa, but the United States Senate, then politically opposed to the president, refused to confirm the nomination. In 1872, he represented as a delegate the sixth district of Iowa in the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore, which unanimously endorsed the nomination of the Hon. Horace Greeley for president. On various occasions he has officially and actively participated in state and local conventions of the same party in Iowa, and exerted a potent influence in its councils and proceedings.

To Mr. Evans' pressing efforts is mainly attributable the passage by the Legislature, in 1874, of an act creating a board of three commissioners, of which Mr. Evans is president, who are charged with the duty of stocking the many streams of the state with edible fish.

Socially, Mr. Evans, now in the prime of life, is a very affable and courteous gentleman, besides which, he is richly endowed with that energy and mental ability that never fails to achieve the greatest success.

Honorable HENRY BASCOM HENDERSHOTT was born in Miami County, Ohio, May 15, 1816. In the Fall of the same year his parents moved to the then Territory of Illinois, where, upon a farm in Madison and St. Clair Counties he lived and worked until the Fall of 1835. Then starting on foot, with little means, he made his way to Illinois College, at Jacksonville, in which institution he remained during the college terms, keeping up to his classes until the Fall of 1837. While here pursuing his studies he employed his intervening time in working upon a farm, and in a cabinet shop connected with the college, for which labor he received a compensatory allowance of twelve and a half cents an hour.

On leaving college, Mr. Hendershott became a resident of Burlington, Iowa, where he arrived October 11, 1837. Here he clerked in the post-office for about a year; then wrote in the recorder's office for several months, and meanwhile read law under the instructions of Messrs. David Rorer and M. D. Browning. May 6, 1839, he was appointed Deputy Clerk of the District Court of Des Moines County, which office he retained two years, at the same time continuing his law studies under his above mentioned instructors. At the fall term of the District Court, in 1841, held at Burlington, and at which the Hon. Charles Mason, afterwards Commissioner of Patents, presided as judge, he was admitted to the bar. The same year he went to Mount Pleasant, Henry County, where he remained until April, 1842, then went to Fairfield, Jefferson County, remaining at the latter place until December, 1843, when he located at Agency City, in Wapello County. May 16, 1844, he settled at Ottumwa, in the same county, where he has since continuously resided. February 16, of the year last named, Mr. Hendershott was appointed by Judge Mason, Clerk of the District Court for Wapello County, which office he resigned in September following. While occupying this position he discharged, pursuant to legislative enactment, the duty of organizing the County.

December 19, 1845, he was appointed by Governor James Clark, District Prosecutor for the Seventh District of Iowa. September 17, 1846, he was further appointed by Governor Clark, Colonel of the 2d regiment of the 1st brigade of the 4th division of the Iowa militia. April 10, 1847, he was commissioned by George W. Jones, Surveyor General of Wisconsin and Iowa, a deputy surveyor, in which capacity he sectionized six townships of government land, now a part of Appanoose County. At the December term, in 1848, he was appointed by the Supreme Court of the United States, Commissioner for Iowa, to act in conjunction with Joseph C. Brown, Commissioner for Missouri, in running and marking the boundary line between the respective states. Mr. Brown died, and Judge Robert W. Wells, of Jefferson, Mo., was appointed to succeed him. The latter resigning, was in turn succeeded by William G. Minor. During the Spring and Summer of 1850, the line was established and the Commissioners made their report, which was approved by both states and confirmed by the court. January 21, 1851, Mr. Hendershott was elected a member of the Iowa Historical and Geological Society. In August following he was elected to the State Senate, serving four years, during which time he was a member of the Judiciary Committee, and the first Iowa code was enacted. In 1852 and 1853 he was Clerk of the City Council at Ottumwa, and in 1855 and again in 1859, was an Alderman of the same city. In 1857 he was elected Judge of the District Court, and served till 1860.

Since 1850, except while in the State Senate and District Judge, Judge Hendershott has remained to the present time in the active practice of his profession. In the various places of trust he has held, his versatility and capacity, equally with his scrupulous fidelity and indefatigable energy, have ever been conspicuous. At the bar, and in the community with which he has been so prominently identified for more than thirty-one years, his exemplary professional and private virtues have justly secured to him enviable respect and confidence.

Politically, Judge Hendershott is a life-long Democrat of the old school. For ten or twelve years past, however, he has been wholly out of politics, during that time having uniformly declined any official station. His present desire is to lead a quiet, happy life of industry at home, in the enjoyment of the means obtained by honest toil, and at perfect peace with all mankind. In religion, Judge Hendershott is a firm believer in the efficacy of the blood of Christ, in the salvation of all the human family.

Judge Hendershott is the husband of one wife, formerly Miss Mary W. Jeffries, daughter of the Hon. Paul C. Jeffries, first Probate Judge of Wapello County, to whom he was united in marriage, June 8, 1845, and is the father of eight children, all of whom are living.

Honorable WILLIAM SMYTH,—Probably no more complete sketch of the life and public services of this gentleman, who was one of Iowa's most prominent men, can be given than to reproduce a portion of the remarks made by Hon. James Harlan in the Senate of the United States, December 22, 1870, upon introducing the usual resolutions of respect, after the adoption of which the Senate adjourned.

The late Hon. William Smyth was born Jan. 3, 1824, of Scotch parents, in Tyrone County, Ireland. When about fifteen years of age he emigrated to the United States; resided a few years in Pennsylvania, but ultimately settled in Linn County, Iowa, where he spent some time in agricultural pursuits. In 1845 he commenced the study of law in the office of Judge James P. Carlton, in Iowa City. Three years afterwards he was admitted to the bar, and commenced the practice of his profession in Marion, Linn County, where he continued to reside until the day of his death.

He soon took rank with the ablest members of the profession, and was almost immediately designated as Attorney for the State in his judicial circuit, in which office he was continued by the suffrages of the people for about five years, when a vacancy having occurred in the office of judge of the district court by the death of his old law preceptor, Judge Carlton, he was, by the unanimous recommendation of the bar, first appointed by the Governor, and afterwards elected by the people, without opposition to fill this high office. He served with great acceptability to the bar and people about three years, when, in 1857, he resigned and resumed the practice of his profession. In 1858 he was chosen by the Legislature chairman of a commission to revise and codify the laws of the state, which resulted in what is known in Iowa as the code of 1860. At the end of this service he was appointed chairman of "the commission of legal inquiry," a position requiring the highest order of practical legal learning.

In 1861, immediately after the commencement of the rebellion, he was selected by the Legislature as a member of a commission to negotiate the Iowa war loan, to be used in putting the state in a condition to repel a threatened rebel attack on the southern border, and to equip the first regiment of Iowa troops, raised for the national defense. August 10, 1862, he was appointed Colonel of the 31st Iowa Infantry, with which he marched to the front, encountering, with his comrades in arms, the perils and toils of the field until Dec. 15, 1863, when, on account of what proved to be permanent loss of health, he resigned his command, and again returned to the practice of law. In 1868, he was elected to a seat in the forty-first Congress, and in the Autumn of 1870, a short time before his death, was nominated by the Republican Convention of his district without opposition for re-election.

These almost continuous employments in judicial, legislative, financial and military positions, commencing with the office of prosecuting attorney, and culminating in his elevation to a seat in the national councils, will afford an intimation of the estimation in which he was held by the people among whom he lived, and by the Legislature and Executive of the state of his adoption.

It is impossible to present thus briefly a critical analysis of his mental and moral character. But his rapid advancement in his profession, and his early elevation to the highest position of honor and trust in the various departments enumerated, notwithstanding the severe competition and earnest rivalry which must always be encountered by a young man without wealth or family influence, in a new and vigorous community in a frontier state, sufficiently attests his capacity and sterling qualities of head and heart. These qualities did not attract attention so much on account of striking brilliancy, as for the harmonious blending of superior mental capacity, moral force and purity of character, resulting in a high order of practical ability which crowned his efforts with almost uniform success. His great qualities and marked success seemed to be more the fruits of correct early training, honest industry, severe study, careful reflection, and persistent effort than of extraordinary native endowment. Hence the contemplation of his career may be more useful to the youth of the country than that of men of unequaled genius and native brilliancy. The former are self-made, the latter God created; the former invite, the latter forbid imitation.

His parents being of Reformed Presbyterian, he was, of course, brought up in that faith, receiving in his childhood the somewhat severe but thorough Scriptural training peculiar to that Christian denomination which laid the foundation of a purity of life which challenged the approval of the most circumspect. Nor was the culture of his mind neglected.

He enjoyed the advantages of the primary schools and academical instruction of his native country. This mental discipline was supplemented by a three years' course of legal reading under the direction of one of Iowa's ablest jurists, before his admission to the bar.

It was thus he acquired the studious habits and that capacity for sustained laborous research which secured professional eminence, and crowned his public career with marvelous success.

He was modest and retiring almost to a fault; he did not think of himself more highly than he ought; and yet he had that self-respect and confidence in his own capacity which prompted him to undertake to do whatever was necessary to be done without much regard for the character of the obstacles in his pathway. But this confidence seemed to be the outgrowth of an abiding faith in the capacity of humanity, as a common endowment of the individuals of the race rather than self-esteem. He seemed to expect a large degree of personal success, as the legitimate reward of persistent and well directed effort, and the confidence and approval of mankind as the just reward of merit.

He was not inordinately ambitious, nor yet was he insensible to the good opinions of his fellow-men and the public honors which marked his career. It is said that he expressed in his boyhood an earnest desire one day to obtain a seat in Congress. He, however, seemed rather to accept, than to seek preferment, and more on account of the wider field for usefulness which it afforded than on account of a desire for personal distinction. We have no evidence that unchaste desire for preferment among his fellow-men ever allured him from the pathway of virtue, or caused him to swerve a hair-breadth from the line of duty. He reached the goal of his youthful ambition in the meridian of life; his neighbors had freshly crowned him with honors more desirable to an American than a royal diadem, when he was cut down in the midst of his years and usefulness.

CHARLES M. HOLLIS was born in Randolph, Norfolk County, Mass., August 1, 1837, and was the oldest child of Minot Hollis and Mary B. Foss, his wife, who died at the age of thirty-two. His father was born February 6, 1806, and was the son of Ambrose Hollis, born in 1780. The Hollis family came to Plymouth Colony from England at an early day, and the subject of this sketch is a lineal descendant of that Colonel Cecil Hollis, who was a compatriot with Hampden, and was one of the famous five whom King Charles I ejected from the House of Commons, an act which resulted in the beheading of the king and the establishment of the Protectorate of Cromwell.

In 1856, Mr. Hollis entered Middlebury College and graduated with the degree of A.B. in 1860, and in 1863 the degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by his alma mater. During college vacations he taught schools in Massachusetts, Vermont and New York, and immediately after graduating, commenced the study of law with A. B. Waldo, of Port Henry, New York. In the Spring of 1861, he located in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and continuing his legal study with E. U. Bates; was in January, 1862 admitted to practice. In the Spring of the same year he took charge of the Cedar Valley (now Cedar Rapids) Times as editor and publisher, and conducted it until February, 1863. As a journalist he soon acquired an enviable reputation, and during his administration the Times was placed on a secure foundation.

In the Spring of 1866, he removed to Marion, Iowa, where he has since resided, and is now permanently located in the practice of his profession, and in carrying on an extensive real estate business.

In November, 1862, he married Sarah Stephens, by whom he had two children, Minnie S. and Fred W., both surviving. Having lost his first wife, he married in January, 1873, Elizabeth C., daughter of Rev. J. V. DeWitt, who is a grand nephew of Gov. DeWitt Clinton, of New York. By this second marriage he has had two children, Birdie L., who died in infancy, and Nellie May still surviving.

As a man of business, Mr. Hollis has been very successful, and is in the enjoyment of the substantial rewards of well directed efforts. Possessed of a literary taste and a cultivated mind, and having a large library, he devotes much of his leisure time to his books. He is one of those men whom misfortune can not dishearten, and who quickly build new castles on the ashes of old hopes. His fondness for the domestic pleasures of the fireside, combined with his tase for literature, render him independent of the great outside world

Well established in business and resting content in a beautiful home, he enjoys the good of life philosophically, and disdains the bubbles which attract the multitude.

Honorable JOSEPH BARRIS YOUNG was born in Erie County, Pennsylvania, February 18, 1832.

In his veins are mingled the blood of three nationalities, viz: English, German and Irish.

John Young, his paternal ancestor, received a large grant of land in Massachusetts from the King of England, on which he settled at, or near, Salem, in the early days of colonial history. From him sprang the progenitors of the subject of this sketch. His great-grandfather, John Young, was noted in his day for his freedom of thought on religious subjects, was a man of strong intellect, and an author of considerable repute. His father, Rev. Alvinus Young, is a Methodist of long standing and honored by all who know him as a faithful devout and earnest Christian gentleman.

Mr. Young resided with his parents until his majority, attending school, including a term each in Madison and Washington Colleges, and two half years in Asbury University, at Greencastle, Ind., where he graduated with the class of 1851. He commenced the study of law with Judge Carlton, of Iowa City, and in 1853 was admitted to the bar, and began practice in Marion, Linn County, Iowa, where he now resides. He served as prosecuting attorney; was, in 1861, chosen representative in the state legislature, and two years later elected to the State Senate, to which he was re-elected in 1865, to fill his own vacancy occasioned by his entering the army. During his legislative experience, he spoke but seldom and then to some purpose. One of his most characteristic efforts being in support of the resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence to secure the enactment of a law providing for universal emancipation. This speech on that occasion has been published and republished many times, and had a salutary influence upon the people of this state.

In 1864, he was one of the electors at large on the Republican ticket, and made an extensive canvass of the state, holding several discussions with Hon. Martin Van Buren Bennett, Democratic elector at large. These discussions elicited much interest in the several districts where they were held, and contributed in securing the victory which crowned the November election. As a debater, Major Young is well posted, shrewd and logical in his arguments; a fluent speaker, making an excellent choice of language, and possessing much of that magnetism which inspires and holds the attention and respect of his audience. Wherever he went the papers were full of his praise, and his party rejoiced in possessing so able an advocate.

In June, 1869, Major Young was appointed pension agent for the northeastern district of Iowa, and now has about 3,000 pensioners on the roll. Their ranks are thinning, however, and a few more years the heroes of that terrible strife will have passed away.

Mr. Young married in 1855, Jane M., daughter of H. A. Carter, of Hopkinton, Iowa, and a native of Massachusetts. They have had five children, three of whom are now living.

Honorable SYLVESTER GRENELL MASTON was born March 5, 1808, at Middletown, Rutland County, Vermont, and was one of a family of eleven children. His mother died February 1, 1825, after which his father was again married to a Miss Huntington, by whom he had two children, and died December 30, 1827, leaving no property.

Young Sylvester early became attached to his books, and not being able to attend school but little, would have his lessons copied and carry them with him to commit as he labored in the field. He thus fitted himself for teaching, by which he secured means to prosecute his professional studies. When in his twenty-first year, he read a short time with Dr. Eliakim Paul, of Middletown, and then went to the Medical College of the University of Vermont, at Burlington, where he found a valuable friend in Professor Benjamin Lincoln, with whom he studied, assisting him in the anatomical and surgical department, until he graduated in 1832. He then returned to Middletown, and in February, 1833, was married to Mary Ann Hotchkiss, daughter of Dr. Hotchkiss, of Wells. Thence he moved to Van Buren, near Syracuse, Onondaga County, New York, and practised, in company with Dr. A. White. His practice extended into Onondaga, Cayuga and Chenango Counties. He was frequently called upon to speak on public occasions, and his addresses were always received with favor, securing from the general public and the press the highest encomiums. He delivered an oration at Pitcher Springs, New York, July 4, 1839, which, with a number of other speeches, have been printed, all of them breathing forth eloquence and patriotism of a high order.

Removing to Jones County, Iowa Territory, he was a member of the Convention that framed the first State Constitution, and was also elected a member of the first and second General Assemblies of the State, and came within one vote of being elected Speaker of the House. He took an active part in educational matters—was Chairman of the Committee on Schools—and assisted in passing the bill that located the State University at Iowa City.

His wife died in 1849; by her he had four children, two of whom are living. He married again, and had two children by his second wife, one of whom survives. His family is as follows:

Benjamin Lincoln, a merchant in Anamosa, Iowa, and a soldier in the Union Army during the Rebellion.

Sarah Leffingwell, who married Rev. S. N. Fellows, A.M., D.D., now at the head of the Normal Department in the State University at Iowa City.

Catherine L., unmarried, and a graduate of Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Iowa, class of 1875.

During the Rebellion, Dr. Maston was active, and aided with his money and voice in raising troops. The following is an extract from a speech delivered on the departure of the troops from Jones County:

"What means all this array of men marshaling for war amid our own peaceful homes, along these beautiful prairies of Jones County, when our country is at peace with all the other nations of the earth? What means this call to arms! to arms!! resounding long, loud and clear from the voices of millions of freemen along the cloud-capt hills of New England, and the shores of the Atlantic, and as it moves westward gathering strength and vigor until it reaches this great Valley of the Mississippi, where it meets the same unmistakable sound coming from the shores of the Pacific,—the plains of California and Oregon, sweeping over their gold fields, and along the lofty snow-clad peaks of the Rocky Mountains with irresistible force, moving eastward until it reaches this great Father of Waters, where the war-cry like a mighty earthquake shakes the continent and startles the world? What means this almost unexampled sacrifice of fathers, brothers and sweethearts sending forth from their presence to fields of danger and death their dearest earthly treasures? Ah! my friends, our beloved country is in distress! Treason has planted its deadly fangs in our very vitals, and the genius of Liberty in sable robes is already beginning to weep over our departed greatness. Patriotism calls for all this. Look at that beautiful flag—those stars and stripes! Our Revolutionary fathers chose this for our national banner. They dedicated it to freedom—baptized it in their blood, and dying, bequeathed it as a rich inheritance to us, their children and posterity. Like a ministering angel, for eighty-five years it has been encircling the globe, carrying respect and protection to our countrymen the world over. Treason has penetrated deep to our very vitals, and in a portion of our country has trampled this emblem of freedom in the dust, and put in its place that of tyranny and slavery! It is a love for all that is dear to us as a nation of freemen and as philanthropists, that impels us to this great sacrifice. Our household gods are freely offered on our country's altar. Yes, fellow citizens, I am proud of this state of my adoption—of Jones County, and especially of this noble band. I would to God I had sons enough to crush out this cursed rebellion at once, I would freely offer them all for the service of my country. I say to you all as I say to my only son, I am proud that you have volunteered in your country's service. Patriotism is a noble virtue. Above all—except your God—love your country. Remember that the hearts of your dearest friends go with you. You have their prayers and their benedictions. Now in conclusion—go and when you return, bring back not only those patriotic and Christian virtues you take with you, but also the well-earned reputation of a faithful soldier."

The Doctor has been in the active practice of medicine, surgery and dentistry, for about forty-three years, is temperate in all his habits, using neither tea, coffee, tobacco, nor intoxicating drinks, and although now nearly sixty-eight years of age, is almost as spry and active as when in his prime.

For a few years past he has been engaged in opening a stone quarry which he selected about thirty years since on the Wapsipinicon, near Anamosa. The stone has been tested for more than twenty-five years, and grows harder by exposure. Specimens have been worked which so nearly resemble the finest marble, that the best judges can not tell the difference. The capacity of the quarry is estimated at more than 5,000,000 cubic yards. The Doctor supplies the public from this quarry at the most reasonable rates. One of the finest water powers on the river he is now utilizing for preparing stone and grinding grain. It is near Viola, on the railroad, in Linn County, where the Doctor is still practicing his profession, in addition to superintending the stone-quarry and water power.

Honorable ISAAC MOSHER PRESTON, for the last thirty-three years a resident of Marion, Iowa, was born at Bennington, Vermont, April 25, 1813. His grandfather, Levi Preston, was born in England, September 6, 1736. Married Deliverance, daughter of Nicholas Mosher, who was born March 25, 1730. They emigrated to America soon after, and settled first in Massachusetts, thence removed to Bennington, Vermont. He served in the Revolutionary war. His family was as follows: John, born September 15, 1759; Phebe, born April 25, 1761; Mary, born September 29, 1762; Ephraim, born March 10, 1764, Elizabeth, born March 2, 1766; Levi, born April 13, 1769; Hannah, born July 22, 1771.

Ephraim, the father of the subject of this sketch, served a short time in the Revolutionary army; married Anna Hoag, by whom he had four daughters and one son, who, dying in 1803, he was married a second time to Sarah Maxwell, of Rhode Island, and by her had six children, four of whom are now living, Colonel Preston being next to the youngest. In 1814 his parents moved to Onondaga County, New York, where his father died in 1849, aged 85, his mother having died November, 1832. Having been given his time at the age of sixteen, young Isaac learned the carpenter and joiner's trade, and continued at that business till 1840, when he resolved to study law. In 1842 he moved to Iowa, and entered the office of Asa Calkin, of Iowa City, and was admitted to the bar October 26, 1842, in Marion, Linn County, where he has since continued to practice. December 19, 1845, he was appointed by Governor Clark District Attorney for the Eighteenth District of Iowa Territory, and discharged the duties of that office for two years. February 17, 1846, he was commissioned by Governor Clark Colonel of the 3d Regiment, 2d Brigade, 2d Division, of the Militia of Iowa, and assisted in organizing troops for the Mexican war, but was not called into active service. He was elected Probate Judge for Linn County in 1843, and re-elected in 1846, holding the office six years, and declined a third election. March 3, 1847, he was commissioned by President Polk, District Attorney for the State and District of Iowa, and continued in that position until the close of Polk's administration. In 1848 he was elected to the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of Iowa, and two years later to the State Senate, where he served four years, participating in the memorable contest which resulted in the election of Honorable James Harlan to the United States Senate. His associates in both branches of the Legislature were among the most eminent men of the state, and the passage of the code of 1851, which superseded the common law forms of practice, and changed the entire judicial system of the state, was the result of their legislation. Colonel Preston took an active part in all public affairs, and although decidedly a party man, was not a blind advocate of every measure proposed by his party, but carefully consulted the public weal, and at all times pursued the path of duty, and by so doing secured the approval of his political friends and opponents. The grand aim of his life, however, was to excel in his profession. Deprived as he was of the advantages of early education, he resolved that labor, energy and will should surmount all difficulties, and with this determination entered upon his professional career, and is now recognized as one of the first lawyers of the state. As a criminal lawyer he justly occupies a leading place in his profession, and probably few men in the state have tried as many criminal cases and been so universally successful. Cast as he was, at the age of sixteen, upon his own resources, without education, without money, and without assistance, he may be truly styled a self-made man.

Colonel Preston was married in Seneca County, New York, April 3, 1837, to Mary J., daughter of Charles Facer, and by her has two sons—Joseph H., born July 9, 1839, married Adaline L. Wood, formerly of Massachusetts, and is now a practicing lawyer at Waterloo, Iowa; and Edmund C., born June 5, 1841, who married Deborah E., daughter of A. J. Twogood, and is an able member of the Marion, Iowa, bar.

ANDREW J. McKEAN was born in Bradford County, Pennsylvania, October 3, 1816. His ancestors were from Scotland, and settled in Maryland about four generations ago, and are now scattered over several states of the Union. His grandfather resided a long time in Pennsylvania, where he died many years ago, leaving a family. His father, Robert McKean, married Martha Wilson, and had eight children. He died about 1826, and his wife in 1862. Young McKean resided with his parents until he was twelve years of age, and then went to live with his grandfather, Noah Wilson, of Alba, Pennsylvania, and remained till 1834. He was educated in the common schools, and taught several winters, thus aiding in the support of his mother and younger brothers and sisters. In June, 1838, in company with H. W. Gray and Alonzo Pratt, he started for the West, traveling over Illinois and Iowa, and finally settled in Linn County, near Mt. Vernon. In the Fall of 1839, he assisted in laying out the town of Marion, subsequently removing there; has since made it his home. In 1854 he was elected Clerk of the District Court, which position he held till January, 1873—a period of eighteen years, in the meantime dealing to advantage in real estate.

In December, 1872, he purchased an interest in the only bookstore in Marion, the firm being McKean & Gibson, and has since assisted in its management.

Mr. McKean married Abiah Day November, 1842, and by her has had nine children, four of whom are living. She died in 1861, and he was again married in 1863 to Phoebe L. Hickok, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. McKean is a Republican, and has been identified with that party since its organization.

Colonel WILLIAM H. SHUEY, of Western, Linn County, Iowa, was born in Augusta County, Virginia, August 11, 1823. His father, Jacob Shuey, was born on the same farm June 20, 1797, and died at Shueyville, Iowa, in 1867. His mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Lowman, daughter of Bernard Lowman, of Middlebrook, Virginia. She was born June 13, 1804, and resides in Western, Iowa. The grandfather, Lewis Shuey, was born near Lebanon, Pennsylvania, in 1754; was a soldier in the Revolutionary war; removed to Virginia in 1795, and died in 1839. Lewis Shuey's father and grandfather, whose name was Philip Shuey, were born in France—were Huguenots, and on account of persecutions in that country, came to America about the year 1699.

William H. Shuey, the subject of this sketch, was raised on a farm, and like most of farmer's sons in that day, worked through the Summer, and attended school in Winter. He attended a classical school one year, and gave special attention to the study of land surveying, and has been for the last thirty years a practical surveyor. In the early part of his life he gave some attention to school teaching in his neighborhood during the winter months.

On the 20th of April, 1847, he was married to Catherine V. Baker, daughter of Frederick Baker, of Boonsborough, Washington County, Maryland. By this union there are four children living, Frederick B., Ann E., Ella V., and William H.

In the days of Virginia militia, when "big musters" were the days for which all others were made, he took his part in home military duty. At the age of twenty-one he was elected captain of an armed and uniformed company, called the Middlebrook Rifles, and at the age of twenty-seven colonel of the 93d Reg. of Virginia Militia, and still has the original commission signed by John B. Floyed, then Governor of Virginia. All able-bodied men from the age of twenty-one to forty-five in that state, were compelled to do military duty, and on the parades and drills of that time, he was frequently associated with men who afterwards became noted in the Confederate service, such as Generals Stonewall Jackson, Imboden, Magruder and Baldwin.

In 1852 he became editor of the North-Western Observer, a Whig paper at Buchanan, Upsheer County, West Virginia, and in 1854 settled at Shueyville, Johnson County, Iowa, and engaged in farming. In 1861 he went into the army, and served as Captain of Co. F, 14th Iowa Infantry. This regiment commenced active duties at Donaldson, then Shiloh, and at the battles of Corinth, October 3d and 4th, 1862. Captain Shuey was the senior officer of his regiment. He was with his regiment in the campaigns in Tennessee and Mississippi, and in Banks' Red River expedition in 1864. For a good part of this year he was on General A. J. Smith's staff, and won his respect as a brave and efficient officer. Captain Shuey served his three years in the army, and was honorably discharged November, 1864.

From 1865 to 1868, he served as a member of the Board of Supervisors of Johnson County, and one of the years as chairman, and in the two following years he was a member of the Board of Supervisors of Linn County. He has been residing in Western since 1868.

Colonel Shuey was connected with the Western College Advocate and Reporter as one of the editors, the most of the time from 1856 to 1864, and with the Western Gazette from its first number in 1869 till the time of its discontinuance, with the exception of one year, when it was edited by A. H. Neidig, now of the Cedar Rapids Republican. In politics he is a Republican. He has been a member of the U. B. Church for over thirty-seven years. His father and mother and grandparents on both sides, were members of that church. He is one of the incorporators of Western College, and much is due to his exertions and influence for the present location of the college, and he has been ever since one of its warmest friends.

Having given his attention to the study and practice of law, he was admitted to practice at Marion in 1874, and has established an office at Western, where he attends to all business pertaining to his profession. He is also engaged in mercantile pursuits. Full of business, he is always willing to assist in every enterprise which has for its object the material, intellectual and moral advancement of the community. He shares in a large degree the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens.

Honorable JAMES CUSHING, Mayor of the City of Dubuque, was born in West Scituate, Plymouth County, Massachusetts, August 4th, 1830. In 1838, when he was eight years of age, his father and family removed to Peoria, Illinois, where his mother died in 1839, the result being that the family was broken up, and the subject of this sketch was hired to work on a farm at $3.00 per month. Prior to this, he had attended the common school, and afterwards, at the age of nineteen, he attended for two years at an academy in Mt. Palatine, Illinois.

In 1852 he bought a team, and went into the ice and wood business on the Illinois River, at LaSalle. In 1854 he was married to Miss Emma H. Masterman, who died in Dubuque in October, 1861. Mr. Cushing continued in the ice and wood business till the Spring of 1859.

In the Spring of that year he moved to Dubuque, and bought out the firm in which his father was a partner, viz., the firm of Carter, Pifer & Cushing, who were engaged in the ice business in Dubuque. He had at that time two competitors, but by energy and fair dealing he soon gained the trade of the town, and for nine years had exclusive control of the business. When he had attained control of the business, he aided Louis Fischer, one of his employés, in getting a start in business, by taking him in as a partner, when Mr. Fischer had no money with which to purchase an interest. Mr. Cushing sold him an interest on credit, taking his notes and mortgage on the property for security, and gave him a chance to pay in, as he could, out of the profits of his share over and above what was necessary for his living. In this way Mr. Fischer was enabled to pay for his share, and he has since become possessed of considerable property in the city.

In 1863 Mr. Cushing loaned a sum of money to John Palmer, who was engaged in the manufacture of vinegar, in Dubuque, and in order to secure the amount loaned, he found it necessary to take hold of the business with Mr. Palmer, and in doing so expended a good deal of money in bringing the arrangements for manufacturing to a successful condition. In this manner he got into the manufacture of vinegar, and has continued in it to the present time, making it a study, and laying out large sums to bring the methods of manufacturing to a higher state of perfection than had heretofore been attained. In this Mr. Cushing has been entirely successful. His trade extends from St. Cloud on the north to New Mexico on the south, and west to Denver, Colorado.

In the Summer of 1873, having outgrown his old accommodations on Iowa street, he erected his present large and commodious factory on Eagle Point Avenue. The building is 50x100 feet, four stories in height, of brick, substantially built, constructed in the side of the hill, so that he has, practically, three ground floors, saving a great deal of labor in moving goods. The temperature of the building is regulated by a large furnace in the basement, and supplied with water from the reservoir of the city water works. The building has been erected and fitted up with various improvements, with reference to permanent business in the manufacture of vinegar for the Northwest.

Mr. Cushing has never been a politician, or an aspirant for office, though voting the regular Republican ticket. In the municipal election of the Spring of 1875, he was taken up by the Republicans as candidate for Mayor, because it was thought that he would make a successful run against any competitor that might be nominated by the opposition. His competitor was one of the most popular men in the city, yet Mr. Cushing was elected by a handsome majority.

Mr. Cushing has always pursued a liberal policy towards the encouragement of home manufactures, and the building up the general interests of the city, and no man has given more generously, according to his means, than he has. He is popular with the people, and has the sympathy of the working classes, as he is understood to be the friend and patron of labor, as opposed to all forms of moneyed monopoly and oppression.

Mr. Cushing was married to his second wife, Miss Mary A. Schimerhorn, of LaSalle, Illinois, in October, 1863. By his first marriage he had two children, and has had four by his second marriage, five of whom are living.

ALONZO PELHAM WOOD was born in the town of Little Compton, Rhode Island, in the month of August, 1817. At about the age of twelve he began working in a newspaper office (in the neighboring village of Fall River, Massachusetts), and with the exception of some time afterwards spent in school, continued to be so employed until he reached his majority. Subsequently to this he spent some time (principally in the capacity of a working printer) at different points in the middle and southwestern states, occasionally, during the time, contributing articles for the press, and during most of one year was employed in reading elementary law works, with a view to ultimately entering the legal profession.

In 1841–'42, while residing in Cincinnati, Ohio, he became a participant in an active and somewhat excited political discussion, then being carried on in that city between the Whig and Democratic parties, involving more particularly the doctrine of protection to domestic industry. Mr. Wood espoused the Whig side of the controversy, and championed the policy of protection, against the assaults of some of the most noted free traders of that period and locality (among others, Elwood Fisher), who were making strenuous efforts to implant their doctrines in the minds of the people of Cincinnati.

Early in 1841, Mr. Wood was invited to become the editor of the Iowa Standard, a Whig newspaper recently established at Iowa City, then the seat of government of the Territory of Iowa. This invitation he accepted, and continued to occupy the position for about four years, being also, a portion of the time, the owner of the establishment. But the Whig party being steadily in a minority, both in the immediate locality of publication and in the territory at large, The Standard failed to receive sufficient support to protect it against pecuniary difficulties, and in 1845 Mr. Wood began to contemplate a change of location. He finally determined on removing to Dubuque, the wealthiest, and at the same time the most intensely Democratic town in the territory, and where a Whig paper had but recently been discontinued from lack of support. This purpose was carried into effect in the Fall of 1846, and the Dubuque Tribune established. Friends, both personal and political, were free in expressing the opinion that the enterprise would prove unsuccessful. It was, however, steadily persisted in, although encountering many difficulties, one of which was the establishing of a rival sheet, that its independent course provoked into existence in 1848. This rivalry was protracted through a period of about two years, when the opposition paper became absorbed in the Tribune, which from that time held undisputed position as the leading Whig journal of Northern Iowa. In 1854, on account of impaired health, brought about by excessive application to business, Mr. Wood relinquished the management of the Tribune, to other hands.

After retiring from the newspaper business, Mr. Wood became somewhat largely engaged in real estate operations; but these were brought to a sudden and disastrous close by the great panic of 1857.

During several months of 1857, Mr. Wood was the editor and publisher of the Dubuque Republican, a daily and weekly paper, devoted especially to the advocacy of the present Constitution of the State of Iowa, which was voted upon and adopted in the Fall of that year. Soon after the close of the canvass, the Republican was discontinued, its subscription list being transferred to The Tribune.

For some time after this second retiracy from editorial life, Mr. Wood entertained the purpose of writing a history of Iowa, as a territory and state; but was eventually led to relinquish this plan in favor of a history of the part taken by the state in the war of the Rebellion. With the latter object in view, he began accumulating data a considerable time in advance of the close of the war, and continued for about two years after that event — the process proving much more tedious than was anticipated in the beginning. It ultimately became Mr. Wood's determination, however, to make the Iowa work a stepping stone to a general history of the war, and for this reason a much greater degree of care was exercised in gathering facts from every portion of the war field, and investigating the details of movements and battles, while the actors in them were still accessible to be consulted, than would have been justified for a state history alone. Work was closed on the Iowa history in the Spring of 1875, and it is now passing through the press. When its publication shall have been completed, the labor of amplifying its matter into a national history will be begun.

LINDLEY S. BUTLER.—The subject of this sketch was born in Salem, Columbiana County, Ohio, May 31, 1846. His parents moved to Iowa the following October, and he was brought up on a farm at Springdale, Cedar County; receiving a good education at the common schools and the Seminary of the Society of Friends, at Springdale. In 1864 he took a complete course at a commercial college in Indianapolis. From this time until 1869, his home was at Iowa City, where he commenced studying law with Honorable Rush Clark in the Spring of 1868. He soon after entered the law department of the Iowa State University, from which he graduated, and was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court in June, 1869, and commenced practice at Northwood, North County, in August following.

After establishing himself in business he visited his early home, Springdale, and was there married on the 23d day of November, 1869, to Miss Julia A. Pickering, by the ceremony of the society of friends, of which both were and still continue to be members.

Mr. Butler was thrown upon his own resources when entering upon the study of his profession, in consequence of financial reverses suffered by his father, and had only his own ability and education to rely upon when he commenced business at Northwood. With good judgment he selected a favorable field, and then employed his talent with energy, pluck and perseverance. His industry has been well rewarded; he rapidly acquired practice, associated others with himself, enlarged the sphere of his business, and is now at the age of 29, the head of the prosperous law, real estate loan and collection house of Butler, Smith & Pickering. In September, 1872, he was appointed by the Governor to a vacancy in the office of district attorney for the 12th judicial district, comprising eight counties, to which position he was elected in November following on the Republican ticket by a very large majority for a term of four years, still unexpired. He is a hard worker in his profession, but nevertheless, is genial and pleasant in his social relations, and bears a good reputation in all the relations of life.

ALLISON I. WILLITS was born in Wayne County, Indiana, about 1810, and died April 22, 1858, aged 47, his ancestors immigrating to America previous to the Revolution. Mr. W. was a practical farmer, and followed that business in Indiana until about 1839 or 1840, when he removed to Mt. Vernon, Iowa, where he engaged in real estate business and in merchandising, and was among the first settlers of Linn County. He, with others, laid out the town of Mt. Vernon.

He married Elizabeth E. Julian, a sister of George W. Julian, a former member of Congress from Indiana, by whom he had four children, two of whom are living. Adelia, who married George Thompson, a soldier in the 1st Iowa Cavalry during the Rebellion, and who has three children, Allison, John and Horace; and George J., who is editor of the Linn County Pilot, published at Marion, and who married Ora N. Rankin, of Jones County, by whom he has one son, Charles E. Willits.

REDMAN D. STEPHENS was born in Steuben County, New York, November 2, 1830.

The tradition concerning his ancestry is that three brothers came to America previous to the Revolutionary war and settled in New England, one in Connecticut, and the others in different localities. One member of the family subsequently moved South and settled in Georgia, from whom Alexander H. Stephens is descendant. The Connecticut branch settled in the western part of the state, and some of these subsequently migrated to the Wyoming Valley, in Pennsylvania, and were among the sufferers in that terrible massacre by the Indians and Tories in 1783. Mr. Stephens' great grand-father, John Stephens, married a Miss Susanna ———. One of his sons, John Stephens, married Olive Franklin, and had ten children, viz: Cynthia, Uriah, Phineas, Frederick, Franklin, Elias, John H., Alexander H. born Sept. 6, 1800, David and Parmelia.

Alexander H. Stephens married Mary M. Davis, and had Redman D., born November 2, 1830.

Mary M., born December 23, 1832.

Charlotte, born November 5, 1837, died May 3, 1871.

Merritt A., born March, 1844, died 1847, drowned.

Sabrey H., born March, 1852.

Redman D., the subject of this sketch, was married October 7, 1857, in LaFayette, Ind., at the residence of Chief Justice Gregory, of the Supreme Court of Indiana, to Louisa G. Briar, and has three children:

Mary, born April 23, 1868.

Louisa, born May 31, 1871.

Redman, born May 30, 1874.

Mr. Stephens' great grand-mother's maiden name was Olive Franklin, and as the family were great sufferers, a brief mention will not be deemed out of place in this connection: Roswell Franklin, the father of Olive, was born in Woodbury, Connecticut, and was twice married. His life was one of continued hardships and sufferings, living amidst the fierce savages of the American wilderness. Worn out by constant misfortunes, he finally, in the aberrations of insanity shot himself and died in 1791 or 92.

His children by his first wife were: Joseph, born in 1764. When about twelve years of age he was left during the absence of his father with a neighbor, whose house being attacked by the Indians, was killed, and his family carried off prisoners. Joseph ran for the river, but was fired upon and captured, being badly wounded in the thigh, and was compelled to go with the rest.

The next day he was too sore to travel and was left behind with two Indians who killed him, took his scalp, and left his body food for wild beasts.

Olive, born in 1767, was stolen by the Indians, April 8, 1781, when fourteen years of age, and carried two or three days' journey into the wilderness, was recaptured by a pursuing party, and after suffering incredible tortures from fatigue and hunger, finally reached her home to find the house reduced to ashes. Her mother was shot on this occasion by the Indians while lying beside her, and her life-blood flowed upon the grief-stricken child. She afterwards married John Stephens, and was the grand-mother of the subject of this sketch, and lived to a good old age near Seneca Lake, New York. Roswell, born 1769, was captured by the Indians, with his cousin Arnold Franklin, with whom he was obliged to run the gauntlet, and came near being killed while escaping to Niagara, where he became a waiter to a British officers, and afterwards came near being scalped by an Indian in Canada. He was exchanged at Fort Niagara in the Spring of 1781, and making his way on foot back to the Wyoming Valley, surprised his father who had long supposed him dead. Here young Franklin learned for the first time of the death of his mother! Who can paint the emotions that thrilled the throbbing hearts of that broken family? The dead returned to life—the living dead! He afterwards married and lived in Cayuga County, New York.

Susannah, born 1771, when eleven years old, was captured by the Indians at the same time with her sister Olive. She had gone to the spring for water when some Indians, who were lying in ambush, sprang upon her and dragged her away into the wilderness. During the battle which preceded her recapture, she saw a large Indian approaching, and warned her mother to lie down. The words were scarcely uttered when the whizzing bullet told the fatal tale. Her mother rolled up her eyes as if she wanted to speak, but said nothing, gasped once or twice and expired.

Thankful, died of small-pox, 1778, while Stephen, who was born 1777, was, when four years old, captured by the Indians, who, rushing upon the house with muskets pointed at the heads of the mother and her little ones—seized them all—fired the house, and hurried them away into the forests. Like rabbits these little ones lay snug to the ground, while the bullets of the pursuers on one side, and those of the Indians on the other whistled over them. And when the Indians fled after shooting the mother, and the voice of their neighbors and friends were heard—up from their covert they sprang—and the words—"run, you dear souls, run"—did not need to be repeated to put wings upon their feet. Olive says, "I had Stephen on my back, and when we heard the voice of our friends we flew to meet them." Ichabod, born in 1779, was captured by the Indians when eighteen months old, and was never heard of after!

The Stephens family shared in these fearful times and in the massacre of Wyoming, but unlike the Franklin family, they have had no historian to perpetuate the memory of the personal reminiscences and afflictions which befel them.

Redman D. Stephens received a good common school education, prepared for college, and entered Alfred Seminary, now Alfred University, and graduated in the class of 1851. He then taught a year at Cuba, Alleghany County, New York; entered a law office in 1852; was admitted to practice in the courts of New York, September, 1853, and in the following December entered the law department of the Albany University and attended the course of lectures of 1853-4 and 1854-5. Leaving Albany, he arrived the last day of March, 1855, at Marion, Linn County, Iowa, where he engaged in the practice of law exclusively till 1863, when he commenced in the banking business to which he has since given the most of his attention.

Upon arriving in Marion his worldly possessions consisted of $23.00 in cash. He provided, however against all contingencies, by taking a life assurance of $50,000, and thus settled all anxiety in regard to the future so far as the supplying of his family was concerned after his decease. As lawyer, banker and financier, he has been eminently successful, and his internal revenue tax indicates the largest income in Marion, if not in the county.

GEORGE W. FITCH, M.D., was born in Hudson, Columbia County, New York, August 12, 1797. He was educated at Williams College Massachusetts, of which institution he was a graduate. For a number of years prior to his removal west, in 1838, he was president of the Cayuga County Medical College. Being a man of wealth, Doctor Fitch's object in coming to Iowa was to invest in real estate, after which it was his intention to have returned to New York. He was, however, induced to change his arrangements and discontinue his profession, by becoming acquainted with Miss Harriet Viele, youngest daughter of Abraham L. and Hannah Douglas Viele, formerly of New York, but now residents of Muscatine County, Iowa, to whom he was married, in November, 1839. He subsequently located at Bloomington, now Muscatine, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred August 27, 1847. His wife still survives him, also one daughter, Louise Douglas, who married William H. Farrand, and is now a resident of Rochester, New York. He had two other daughters, both of whom died in infancy.

Doctor Fitch was an accomplished gentleman, possessed of a fine, well cultivated intellect, combined with great suavity of manner and sweetness of disposition. He was a fond and devoted husband and father, a true friend, and a noble Christian gentleman. His remains are reposing in "Oak Dale Cemetery," Davenport, Iowa.

Honorable LEMUEL DWELLE.—In nearly every thriving western town there are to be found usually one or two men whose industry, foresight and sagacity have contributed to its rise, and formed a nucleus of public spirited enterprise enabling it to outstrip its rivals, and become a center from which the growth and development of the surrounding country radiates; who have, in short, constituted its head and hands; who rise with its rise and grow with its growth, and are relied upon for the oar in every public enterprise. Of this class is the subject of this sketch, whose name is repeatedly met with in the annals of Northwood, and North County. His excellent character and useful life afford an example of modest merit well worthy of imitation.

Mr. Dwelle was born in Greenwich, Washington County, New York, and brought up on a farm, receiving a good common school education. Coming west to better his fortune in the Spring of 1857, he located at, and became one of the founders of Northwood, purchasing and planting 80 acres of the present town site the same season, since which time he has been widely identified with the interests of the town of which he is still one of the principal proprietors. In 1860, he purchased, in connection with his brother, A. J. Dwelle, the water power and saw mill adjoining the town, and immediately erected the flouring mill which they still own and operate. He is quite an extensive land owner and dealer in real estate. Success has crowned his business undertakings, and he is reputed to be as liberal with his means toward all deserving objects as he is prosperous. Although never seeking after public position, has been called much into public life. In 1859, he was chosen county judge, and since 1861, when the functions of that office were transferred to the Board of Supervisors, except two or three years, he has been and still is a member of that body. He was county surveyor for several years; and in 1866, was elected to the Iowa Legislature, and represented with credit the district comprising North Winnebago, Hancock and Kossuth Counties. In July, 1875, he was chosen one of the first town council of Northwood.

Reverend MARTIN BOWMAN was born in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, August 31, 1826. His forefathers came from Switzerland, and settled in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, before the Revolutionary war. His grandfather moved to Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, and was captured by the Indians, but escaped and afterwards married, and had a family of four boys and two girls, who grew up to be heads of families. His father moved to Franklin County, Pennsylvania, and married a Miss Hershey, who died leaving six children. He afterwards married Christina Crider, and had ten children, the subject of this sketch being the sixth, who with his parents, removed to Stark County, Ohio, in the Fall of 1829, where he aided his father on the farm, and attended common school. He was converted at the age of nineteen, and commenced preaching the following year, taking charge of a church in Stark County, where he continued five years. In 1852 he moved to Johnson County, Iowa, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, and continued his itineracy, preaching in the Western District. During the Rebellion he was chaplain of the 44th Iowa Regiment, and also in the 22d Regiment, at a later date, serving about one year.

He married Jane Goodisson, of Ohio, and has six children, viz., Henry G., Jane C., Olivia, Sadia, Minnie A., and Emma M. Henry G., who married Miss Carvy, of Linn County, and is a lawyer in Cedar Rapids. Jane C., who married F. B. Shuey, of Western, and has had two children.

Mr. Bowman has performed the duties of presiding elder, to which responsible position he was appointed by the annual conference some seven or eight years, and has represented the Iowa Conference on four different occasions at the General Conference of the Church of the "United Brethren in Christ." He still resides at Western, honored and respected by the church and community.

Honorable ADAM PERRY was born in Greenbriar County, Virginia, April 24, 1804. His grandfather, Swift Perry, was a native of Dublin, Ireland, and came to America before the Revolution, and settled in Virginia. His maternal ancestor was a Swift, a distant relative of the celebrated Dean Swift. He married in Virginia, the widow Moorhead, and by her had two sons and two daughters. His father, Swift Perry, the oldest son, was born 1775, in Virginia, and was engaged in agriculture. He married Mary Brown, and had Joseph, Elizabeth, Adam Lewis, John, Anderson D., and Mary.

At the age of seven, young Adam moved with his parents to Munroe County, Virginia, where he remained until 1833; thence to Ohio, and in 1834 to Stark County, Illinois, where he conducted the first school in the county; thence to Hancock County, Illinois, in 1845; thence to Van Buren County, Iowa, in 1846; thence to Linn County, where he bought lands and established himself permanently. In 1849 he was employed in the Government Survey in Western Iowa, and continued in that service for several years, and has since been county surveyor of Linn County, also county supervisor. In 1868 he was elected a member in the lower house of the Legislature, and served to the satisfaction of his constituency. He is now a stockholder and vice-president of the Farmers' Insurance Company, of Cedar Rapids; was one of the prime movers in securing the location of the Western College at Western; surveyed the Town of Western, and donated forty acres of land, upon which the college stands.

He married Catherine A. Guthrie, of Ohio, by whom he had the following family: Eliza, who died in infancy; Virginia H., now wife of A. D. Collier, a lawyer residing in Cedar Rapids; William Swift, who served three years in the Iowa Cavalry, and died at Memphis, Tennessee; James A. and Joseph S., who died in childhood; and Sally S., a graduate of Western College, and wife of Rev. C. J. Kephart, of Toledo, Ohio.

Honorable SAMUEL W. DURHAM was born in Jackson County, Indiana, in 1817, his family being of English origin, and among the early settlers of Virginia, where his grandfather resided near Richmond, and was a soldier in the war of the Revolution. The family afterwards removed to Kentucky, where most of them still reside, Judge Durham, member of Congress from Danville, being a cousin of the subject of this sketch. His father, Colonel J. B. Durham, married Elizabeth Ewing, of Kentucky, and had by her a family of ten children. He removed to Indiana in 1811, and was a captain under Colonel Tipton, in the command of General William H. Harrison.

Young Samuel was educated at Clark County Seminary, where he became quite proficient in the higher mathematics, and in 1840, upon removing to Linn County, Iowa, was engaged for some five years in the United States Land Survey, which was then going on in that state. His explorations and surveys were quite extensive, and he furnished the United States authorities with much valuable data in regard to the topography and geography of Iowa, and some portions of Wisconsin. He has been engaged somewhat in the purchase and sale of real estate, and though never seeking it, has been repeatedly called upon to serve the people in a public capacity. In 1841 he was elected county surveyor, which office he has since repeatedly filled; in 1844 was chosen a delegate to the constitutional convention, which met at Iowa City, and in 1846 was elected sheriff of Linn County.

He married Ellen Wolcott, which union was blessed with six children, five of whom are now living, viz., Canfield, Alice, Mary, Benjamin and Louisa. His oldest son, Jefferson, was a member of the 24th Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and died at Marion in 1869.

Reverend WILLIAM FLETCHER KING, D. D.—This gentleman, one of the eminent educators of Iowa, and president of Cornell College, was born December 20, 1830, in Muskingum County, Ohio. His ancestors are English, and came to America in colonial time, his maternal grandfather being killed at the battle of Brandywine.

Doctor King was educated at the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, which he entered at the age of twenty, and graduated with the class of 1857, having spent some two years of the time in teaching. He was immediately elected tutor in mathematics in the same institution, which position he held five years, when he resigned, intending to travel in Europe, but in the Fall of 1862, being interrupted in his plans by the Rebellion, accepted the chair of ancient languages in Cornell College, Iowa, and the following year was appointed acting president, the duties of which office he performed for two years, when he was elected president. In 1873, his health failing, he resigned with the intention of visiting Europe, but the board of trustees declining to accept his resignation, gave him liberty to go abroad, and generously offered to continue his salary, which offer he declined. In June of that year he sailed with his wife, and spent one year abroad, during which time he visited Scotland, Ireland, England, France, Switzerland, Italy and Germany, going as far east as Greece, and passing considerable time at the universities in Germany, France and England, making himself thoroughly familiar with their leading characteristics. Upon returning he resumed charge of Cornell College, and has just closed a very successful year.

Doctor King was ordained a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1865, received his degrees in course from his alma mater, and that of D.D. from Wesleyan University, at Bloomington, Indiana; and was married in 1865 to Maggie McKell, of Chillicothe, Ohio.

ADDISON DANIELS.—Among the early settlers of Linn County, few have been more successful, and are more worthy of special mention, than the subject of this necessarily brief and imperfect sketch, who was born November 13, 1813, in Medway, Massachusetts, where his ancestors settled among the first pioneers of that state. His father being early left an orphan, afterwards married Jerntia Day, by whom he had a family of nine children, four of whom are still living in Linn County. He was engaged in agriculture, and died in his native state about 1843. His maternal grandfather, Oliver Day, was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, and a native of Massachusetts, where he died many years ago.

Young Daniels was educated in the common schools of Massachusetts, and on his father's farm, where he worked until he was seventeen years of age, when he entered a store at Oakham, Massachusetts, in the capacity of a clerk, and remained some seven years, when in the Spring of 1837 he determined to seek a new field of operation, and a fortune in the West. He first landed in St. Louis, where he stopped for a few weeks, but resided most of the time for the next three years in Clinton and Jefferson Counties, Illinois. In April, 1840, he came to Marion, and going to work with that indomitable energy and untiring industry which have characterized his whole life, did much toward transforming the wild unbroken prairie, which for centuries had been the home and the favorite hunting-grounds of the Indian, into the richly cultivated farms, elegant homes, and populous villages, which now comprise the wealthy County of Linn. Although Marion had been selected the year previous as the county town, yet at the time Mr. Daniels arrived, there was not a building on the plat where the town now stands. He soon erected a log store, secured and opened a small stock of goods, and has since been continuously engaged in the mercantile business, in which he has been more than ordinarily successful.

In addition to his merchandising, he has dealt largely in real estate, being early convinced that a country possessing so many natural advantages, and such unrivaled beauty and richness of scenery and soil, would at no distant day become one of the most valuable portions of the west. In company with Messrs. Brown, Green and others, he purchased at the government sales the land where Cedar Rapids now stands, and assisted in laying out that town, which has become one of the most, if not the most, important inland city in Iowa. He started west with about $200 in cash, half of which was spent on the journey, but replenishing it in Illinois, he arrived in Marion and commenced business on a small scale with that amount, which by careful and judicious management he has increased, until he can now count his thousands where before he counted dollars.

BENJAMIN K. WALKER.—The subject of this sketch was born in 1833, in York County, Maine, where he resided on a farm until sixteen years of age. His early education was obtained at the district school, after which he prepared for college at the neighboring academies, and entered Waterville College, in 1854, but was compelled by sickness to leave his college course uncompleted at the end of two years. Coming west in 1857, to seek health and fortune, he located at Bristol, North County, Iowa, after a stay of a month or two at Osage. He took an active part in the organization of North County the same year, and was elected Clerk of the District Court, holding that position by two re-elections until November, 1862, when he removed to his native State, but returned to Bristol in the Spring of 1864. Here he was variously occupied until 1870, chiefly in surveying, conveyancing, collecting and teaching. During this time he turned his attention to real estate business, and organized an extensive agency in real estate. In 1869, he was elected county auditor and still occupies the position, having been twice re-elected. On entering upon the duties of the office he removed to Northwood early in 1870, and here, in 1871, associated his brother, A. C. Walker, with himself in the real estate business, in which he is still engaged.

In August, 1859, Mr. Walker was married in Sanford, Maine, to Miss Abbie Merrill, a lady every way qualified to grace the high social position she occupies.

Owing to his superior business qualifications, Mr. Walker's services have always been in great demand among the people of North County. He was very efficient in first organizing the county business in the other departments as well as his own, and, thereafter, while his time would permit, he was often appealed to for counsel and legal information in cases of difficulty among neighbors, always using his influence to avert litigation if possible. No man in the county has the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens in a higher degree. He is noted for sterling rather than showy qualities, a private character above suspicion, and a public life regulated upon the principles of honesty and integrity. With firmness and decision enough to give him force of character and perseverance he unites liberal-minded discretion and gentlemanly deportment. These qualities have insured him public favor and success in business.

DANIEL G. HAHN was born in Butler County, Ohio, June 9, 1808, being a descendant of a German family who came to America long before the Revolutionary War, and settled in Pennsylvania. His grandfather was born in Pennsylvania, and emigrating to Bourbon County, Kentucky, at an early day, suffered all the hardships of pioneer life. He subsequently moved to Ohio, to what was called Fort Washington, now Cincinnati, and bought land at a place called North Bend on the Big Miami. The Indians were very troublesome, and at one time his family and other settlers were besieged in the Fort by 600 Indians under command of the "outlaw Girty," but were finally relieved.

While out with a Mr. Sellers examining a piece of land they were attacked by several Indians and both killed.

Paul Hahn, an uncle, was killed by the savages near the fort in Ohio, while the sufferings endured by this family, and the losses they sustained by the wild men of the forest is beyond the power of words to express.

His father, Joseph Hahn, was born in Pennsylvania, moved with the family while he was a boy to Kentucky—thence to Ohio—thence to Indiana and finally to Knox County, Illinois, where he died and is buried. He was married three times, first to Susannah Seward, a distant relative of Gov. Seward, of New York, her father being one of the earliest settlers of Butler County, Ohio. They had a family of five children, viz.: James, Michael, Stephen, Daniel S. and Mary. Mrs. H. died in Ohio, and he afterwards married Dorcas Fields, and by her had Josephus and Julian, both now living, and Paul, who was in the Union army during the Rebellion, and died in Tennessee. His second wife died in Indiana, and he was married a third time to Abigail Bloomfield, and by her had Moses and Dorcas. He was in the war of 1812, was surrendered by General Hull, and wounded in the battle of Brownstown. The various families springing from this couple now reside in Iowa and Illinois.

The subject of this sketch lived in Ohio till he was about 15 years of age, and then with his father's family moved to near Crawfordsville, Indiana, and engaged in farming. At the age of twenty one he married Permelia Epperson, of Kentucky, and had the following family:

Lemuel, who died aged eight.

Susannah, who married Joseph T. West, and had six children, Eugene, Adella, William, Mary, Joseph and Susanna, and died in Linn County, Iowa.

Charles E. who married Almira Wolf, by whom he has Florence C. Ambrose, Lulah, Samuel and Minnie. He was in the Union army during the Rebellion, resides in Linn County.

Joseph, who, marrying Susan Slater, has Daniel, Marvin, Eddie and others. He is Sheriff of Osborn County, Kansas; Daniel, who married Eliza Tyson, and has Bertie and Maud living; he is a farmer and resides at Mt. Vernon.

Sarah, married to William Murrey, by whom she has Ernest and other children, resides in California.

Mary E. who married James Rose, and had one son, James. He was in the Union army, and died at Helena, Arkansas.

Lydia J. married George A. John, a blacksmith, resides at Mt. Vernon, by whom she had Myrtle and William S.

Elias E. married Joanna Hahn, and has one child, resides in Kansas.

Permelia married Thomas J. Armstrong, and had one son, Lee. He is engaged in a drug store, stone quarry, &c.

John F. who married Lizzie Kurtz, of Lisbon, and has one son, Frank. He is a farmer and resides at Mt. Vernon.

Mr. Hahn has one of the best improved farms (260 acres) in Franklin Township, well supplied with timber, water and stone of the best quality.

Honorable EZEKIEL B. KEPHART, President of Western College, was born November 6, 1834, in Clearfield County, Pennsylvania. His great grand-father came to America from Germany, and settled in Pennsylvania, where his grand-father, Henry Kephart, was born, and married to a Miss Smith, who was of German parentage. Their second son, Henry, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born, January 5, 1802, in Penn's Valley, Pennsylvania, and moved with his parents to Clearfield County, in 1804. He subsequently married Sarah, daughter of Abraham Goss, and afterwards moved to Johnson County, Iowa, where they now reside. Their family consisted of fourteen children—ten of whom are now living. He has been for many years a minister of the Gospel in the church of the "United Brethren of Christ." Abraham Goss, above mentioned, was the son of George Goss, and was born in Germany about 1758, and immigrated to America with his parents when quite young, settled in the Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania. Two or three of the sons of this family were killed in the "Wyoming massacre," which event has been immortalized by the Poet Campbell in his "Gertrude of Wyoming." At this time Abraham was but twelve years old, and enlisted with his father as a volunteer in General

Washington's Army. The father was killed or died during the war, and at the close, Abraham, with his mother, moved into Clinton County, near Lock Haven, Pennsylvania, where he married a Miss Eamaheiser, of Irish parentage, and from that place moved to Clearfield County, where he died, aged 88. He drew his pension as a soldier of the Revolution until his death.

Mr. Kephart, the subject of this sketch, spent his youthful days in farming, lumbering, and piloting rafts on the Susquehanna River. At the age of fourteen he had not seen an English grammar, but was somewhat familiar with the other branches taught in the common schools of Pennsylvania. Being dissatisfied with his limited education he diligently applied himself to study at home, and to securing means to pay his way at college, and at the age of twenty-one entered Dickinson Seminary, Pennsylvania, where he remained a student for some time. His funds failing, he resorted to teaching, and thus was enabled to secure the necessary means to pursue his studies. The expense of lights was curtailed by burning pine knots, and many a time has he studied all night. While shaving shingles he had his Latin reader standing open, and thus performed physical and mental labor at the same time. He pursued his great studies without a teacher, and in April, 1857, entered the sophomore class in Mt. Pleasant College, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and remained until the transfer of the students to Otterbein University, in Franklin County, Ohio, where he pursued his studies till his funds were exhausted, and then went to Missouri and engaged in teaching. Having "replenished his treasury" he returned to Pennsylvania and entered the ministry in the church of the United Brethren of Christ. He spent five years in the active ministry, most of which time he was pastor of the church in Altoona, Pennsylvania, but was also pastor at Johnstown and at Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania.

November 4, 1860, he married Sue J. Trefts, of Johnstown, and at the expiration of the five years above referred to he returned to Otterbein University, where he completed both the scientific and classical courses, and graduated June 1, 1865, and was soon after elected Principal of Michigan Collegiate Institute, and shortly after entered upon his duties, but not receiving sufficient remuneration for the amount of labor performed, he resigned the position at the end of one year, and returning to Pennsylvania took charge of a congregation, from whom he had received a call prior to his resignation. In August, 1868, he moved to Western, Linn County, Iowa, having been elected President of "Western College" which position he still holds. The catalogue just issued (June, 1875,) shows a footing of 310 students in all departments.

Mr. Kephart has been a Republican since the organization of the party, and cast his first vote for John C. Fremont, in 1856. In 1871 he was elected to the State Senate, and served the constituency and the state faithfully and conscientiously during the four years he was a member of that body.

His habits of life are, and have always been, strictly temperate; has labored to make the Bible the rule and guide of life, and he finds it to be the soul of all true philosophy, and the perfection of all true literature.

His family is as follows:

Waldo M., born January 29, 1862, died Jaunary 17, 1869.
Elwood I., born May 5, 1866, died November 11, 1866.
Emma May, born December 28, 1868.
Lulu Maud, born October 12, 1871.

General N. B. BAKER.—The subject of this sketch, the present Adjutant General of Iowa, was born September 29, 1818, in Henniker, Merrimac County, New Hampshire. He was prepared for college at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and graduated from Harvard University, Cambridge, with the class of '39. He read law with Honorable Franklin Pierce, Judge Fowler, and General Peaslee, at Concord, New Hampshire, and was admitted to practice in 1842. From 1841 to 1845 he was joint editor and proprietor of the "Old" New Hampshire Patriot, during which time the firm were state printers. In 1841 and '2 he was quartermaster and adjutant of the 11th Regiment New Hampshire Militia, and in 1844-'5 was aid-de-camp to Governor Steele. In 1845, selling his interest in the Patriot, he was chosen clerk of the Court of Common Pleas for Merrimac County, and the following year was appointed clerk of the Supreme Court for the district comprising Merrimac and Hillsborough Counties, which positions he held until 1852, when he resigned and went into the practice of law with Colonel F. B. Peabody, at Concord. In 1850-'1 he was a Representative from Concord, in the New Hampshire Legislature, and Speaker of the House both years; was Presidential elector in 1852, and elected Governor of New Hampshire in 1854, which office he filled one year. In the Spring of 1856 he removed to Iowa, and located at Clinton, and was for a number of years attorney for the Chicago, Iowa and Nebraska Railroad, and other corporations; was elected Representative from Clinton County in 1859, serving at the regular session of 1860, and war session of 1861; was appointed Adjutant-General of Iowa July 25, 1861, by Governor Samuel J. Kirkwood, which position he has since held by re-appointments from Governors Stone, Merrill and Carpenter, and was one of the Board of Visitors at West Point Military Academy in 1875.

JAMES McMORRIS, M.D.—The subject of this sketch was born in Crawford County, Ohio, in the year 1836.

His classical studies were chiefly pursued at Oberlin, which college he entered at twenty years of age, remaining four years (except a term or two spent in teaching), earning for himself the reputation of an earnest student as well as a warm and genial friend.

Having chosen medicine as his profession, young McMorris, on leaving college, removed to Goshen, Indiana, where the next four years of his life were spent in the office of a prominent physician of that city, reading up in his medical studies, and taking advantage of his opportunities to become acquainted with the practice of his profession. Unwilling to assume the grave responsibilities of his "war with death," without the most thorough training, he attended a course of medical lectures at the University of Michigan, after which he enrolled himself as a student of Rush Medical College, Chicago, Illinois, from which institution he graduated, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession, hanging out his shingle in his old home at Goshen.

In the Winter of 1869-70, Doctor McMorris removed to Belle Plaine, Iowa, where he has built up a large and lucrative practice, and is justly considered one of the growing men of the city. The Doctor is cast in a generous mould. Physically, he represents some two hundred pounds avoirdupois, is of a fine florid complexion, with a benevolent look on his open countenance, inviting a confidence never betrayed. Intellectually, of quick perceptions, of varied information, of correct judgment, and of broad views, his opinions are treated with marked respect. He has been a member of the State Medical Society for several years; has always identified himself with the educational interests of his home;—his position as Superintendent of Public Schools for Elkhart County, Indiana, and his recent elevation to the chairmanship of the City School Board of Belle Plaine, testify to the appreciation of his worth by his fellow citizens. Warm in his social feelings, strictly above reproach in his morals, ardent in the defense of his friends, keen to detect and quick to resent an injustice. Add to this, that "generous to a fault," his medical services are at the free disposal of the poor, and the Doctor stands before you a man among men. Year by year he is taking a deeper hold upon the confidence and good will of his townsmen; his beautiful ponies and his own portly figure, are already an institution. As the good Turks say, "May his shadow never grow less."

J. WORLEY, M.D.—Among the intelligent, highly educated, and eminently successful physicians of Benton County, none is more worthy of special notice than Doctor J. Worley, of Belle Plaine. He is a native of Covington, Miami County, Ohio, where he was born March 6, 1836, and where the early portion of his life was spent. He received a thorough English education at Covington High School, and at the age of twenty-one commenced the study of medicine with Doctor J. C. Williams, at Versailles, Ohio, in whose office he remained for some two years, diligently applying himself to master the mysteries of the healing art, after which he attended three courses of lectures at the Starling Medical School, at Columbus, Ohio, graduating in March, 1861. He then immediately returned to Versailles, where he was offered and accepted a partnership with his old preceptor, Doctor Williams. This was certainly a very high compliment to his character and medical ability, as Doctor Williams was a skillful and eminently successful practitioner, highly respected and popular in the western part of the state. After remaining at Versailles a few months, he became desirous of seeing something of the West; and coming to Iowa in the Summer or Fall of 1861, located at Koszta, Iowa County, and formed a partnership with Doctor E. P. Miller, where he remained about one year, when he removed to Belle Plaine, and was the first physician in the place.

A short time after locating at Belle Plaine, September 23, 1862, he married Miss Salome Sullenbarger, of Koszta, being the first citizen of that town to take upon himself the responsibility of a wife. He prosecuted his practice with success, until May, 1864, when he was appointed Assistant Surgeon of the 126th Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, with which he remained until the close of the war, serving in the Shenandoah Valley, and in front of Petersburg, which fortifications his regiment were the first to enter. The number of wounded was necessarily large in the sanguinary battles in which his division was engaged, which gave him a very extensive surgical experience. Returning home at the close of the war, he again tendered his professional services, which were gladly accepted by his old friends, until some time in 1870, when on account of failing health he was compelled to retire to his farm, which with some other business engagements occupied most of his attention for some three years, since which time he has applied himself closely to his profession, and has more than regained the high position he formerly held in the confidence of the people. Socially, Doctor Worley is a man of refined taste, high culture, and possessing a pleasing address, affable manners, and an unimpeachable character, and he has secured and retains the confidence and respect of all with whom he is acquainted.

Doctor WILLIAM B. WAGNER, was born in Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, February 5, 1818.

His grand-parents were from Germany, and immigrated to America over a hundred years ago, and settled in Dauphin County, where they resided till their death. His father, John Wagner, married Lydia Snyder, and had a family. He was a stout man, a cooper by trade, and a raft pilot on the Susquehanna River. He died about 1823.

The subject of this sketch worked on a farm in the employ of Michael Frantz, four miles south of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, till his nineteenth year. During this time he attended school in the winter, but the seasons were so short and the grade of the school so low, that he derived but a trifling benefit from that source. At the age of nineteen he engaged with Jacob Wolf to learn the blacksmith trade, and after two years went to "Round Top" to learn edge tool making, and remained one year, when he returned to Mr. Wolf's and worked another year, which was about the end of his mechanical labors, as during this last year he divided his time between work and a preparation for the ministry. In 1841, he entered the Conference of the U. B. Church as a traveling minister, and in that capacity labored continually for seventeen years, preaching principally in Pennsylvania and a short time in Iowa. In November, 1856, he moved to Iowa, and traveled in Muscatine County. During his ministry he had studied medicine, devoting much of his time in preparing himself for practice, and in 1857 he moved to Western, Linn County, Iowa, where he engaged in his new profession. He had been much worn by years of intinerancy and now he sought the enjoyment of home. He brought with him to Western a fine library, containing some 600 volumes, from which he had gathered a store of knowledge. He still retains an abiding interest in his denomination, and has always been an ardent supporter of Western College, their denominational school, having served almost continually as one of the board of directors of the executive committee, and as president of the board. He is now a member of the executive committee, and does his full share in devising means to insure the future prosperity of the college.

He married in 1842, in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, Barbary Ann Rauck, and has the following family:

Jacob R., born October 23, 1843, who married Jennie Sweeney, and has two children. He is a physician, attended lectures at Rush Medical College; was in the 2d Iowa Cavalry during the Rebellion, and resides at Blairstown, Benton County, Iowa.

Anna M., born April 29, 1845, and died August 5, 1845.

Emma C., born September 10, 1846, who married William P. Henderson, a merchant, has three children, and resides at Jefferson, Green County, Iowa.

George M., born November 4, 1848, is an engineer on a railroad in Kansas.

William A., born November 6, 1850, is a printer in Crawford County, Iowa.

John W., born February 24, 1852, is a merchant in Jefferson, Greene County, Iowa.

Benjamin F., born April 28, 1854, is a farmer in Crawford County, Iowa.

Edward C., born August 1, 1856, is now attending Western College.

James H. S., born April 21, 1858, is now attending academy at Blairstown.

Mr. Wagner may be truly termed a self-made man; beginning life without education, he has, by his own unaided industry and perseverence fitted himself for a useful life. The first book he bought was a pocket edition of Todd & Johnson's dictionary, and the second, two volumes of Wesley's Sermons, while the third, was Watson's Theological Dictionary. He purchased only the best standard works, and if they were not to be had in America, he sent to Europe for them. Having learned the German alphabet, he successfully pursued the study of that language by himself, so that in later years he preaches in German as fluently as in English. His life is an eminent example of what every young man can accomplish, who has energy and determination of character sufficient to follow persistently any one line of action which duty and a clear judgment may mark out for him.

WILLIAM S. GRIMES, M.D., of the Eye and Ear Infirmary, in the City of Des Moines, is a native of Wheeling, Virginia, and a graduate of Woodward College, Cincinnati. He studied medicine with the two eminent physicians and scholars, Professor Reuben D. Mussey and Professor Jesse P. Judkins, and graduated at Miami Medical College in 1857. He immediately commenced the practice of medicine at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he remained four years. On the 30th of July, 1861, he was commissioned Assistant Surgeon of the 4th Iowa Infantry, and on September 9th, 1862, was commissioned Surgeon of the 29th Iowa, and served till June 8th, 1863, when he resigned on account of ill health, and in a short time located at Des Moines, where he has ever since been engaged in a successful practice.

Doctor Grimes established the Infirmary, in connection with which he has gained so wide a reputation, in 1870, and received as partner Doctor R. A. Fatchen, in the Spring of 1875.

Doctor Patchen was born in Western New York, and graduated at the State Normal School in Albany. He studied medicine with Professor Thomas F. Rochester, of the Buffalo Medical College. He has had a good deal of hospital experience, having assisted Doctor Grimes in the army, and during the last year of his studies in Buffalo he was assistant to Dr. William H. Mason, Professor of Physiology and father of Vivisection. He graduated with the highest honors at the Buffalo Medical College, in 1869, and subsequently attained a large and successful practice in Wyoming County, New York.

In 1875 he became associated as partner with Doctor Grimes in the Eye and Ear Infirmary and Electro-Therapeutic Bath Institute, of Des Moines, Iowa.

This institution has a reputation throughout the state, growing out of the skillful and successful treatment of the worst class of cases known to medical and surgical practice. Patients come from all parts of the country, and are provided with rooms and board, as a general rule, in private families. The Doctors make a specialty of curing chronic diseases and diseases peculiar to females. They have a complete arrangement for the most effective use of electrical and galvanic batteries, and instruments for all kinds of surgical operations known to the profession. The baths combine all the virtues of the vapor and Turkish baths, with galvanism and medicated vapor, being especially adapted to the treatment of rheumatic patients. Witnesses among those who have suffered long, and have here received benefit, and among those who have been thoroughly cured of various ailments of long standing, and of the most discouraging character, can testify to the magical effect of these baths, and they are especially beneficial in cases of inflammatory rheumatism and other similar diseases.

The institution is supplied with a good library, and with papers and periodicals, and a medical journal is published by them, which will be sent free to any address, upon application.

An experienced Matron is constantly employed in the institution, and gives her special attention to the wants of female patients. In short, the institution has every appliance and comfort that can be desired to make the situation of patients while undergoing treatment as home-like and pleasant as possible.

The success of this institution is well established, and Doctors Grimes and Patchen have a reputation as special practitioners second to no physicians in the West.

STEPHEN H. TAFT was born in Volney, Oswego County, New York, September 14, 1825. He is of the sixth generation from Robert Taft, who came from England and settled at Mendon, Massachusetts, in 1680. Mr. Taft's father, Stephen, when twenty-five years of age, married Miss Vienna Harris, and moved from Richmond, New Hampshire, to Oswego, New York. In the midst of severe labors and privations, in that then new country, Mr. and Mrs. Taft brought up a family of seven children, to whom they were able to give but very limited educational advantages. Stephen H. was their fifth child, and when sixteen years of age he hired out to work on a farm for six months, at ten dollars per month, his wages being all devoted to the use of the family except four dollars, which his father told him he might have if he would remain at home on the Fourth of July. With this money he purchased a Bible, a cheap copy of Shakspeare, and a couple of biographical works, which were the nucleus of his library. He attended school some, winters, and when eighteen years old taught school at ten dollars per month, "boarding round." When nineteen he united with the Wesleyan Methodists, and a year thereafter was licensed by that body to preach. In 1849 he was appointed and acted as agent for New York Central College, which institution he afterwards attended.

In 1853 he married Mary A. Burnham, of Madison County, New York, by whom he is the father of six children: George B., William J., Frederick H., Sidney A., Mary V., and Edwin S., all except the eldest of which are living. About this time, Mr. Taft, becoming satisfied that sectarian divisions in the church often tended to generate a spirit of strife and bigotry, took the position of an independent preacher, holding himself responsible only to his conscience and his God, and this position he has ever since maintained. Soon after his marriage he was settled as pastor of an independent congregation in Pierrepont Manor, Jefferson County, for three years, and from there went to Martinsburgh, Lewis County, where for five years he preached to a large and interesting society. While here some of the published sermons of the Reverend W. R. Robertson fell into his hands, and led him to a clearer understanding of some portions of the Scripture than he had before attained to, and as a result of this awakened spiritual interest, some of his religious views underwent a change, noticable among which was his belief in the Trinity, and the doctrine of a commercial scheme of salvation, by a vicarious atonement, based upon it. This change in his theology wrought an entire change in his plan of life, and he was desirous to do all in his power to extend a knowledge of what to him seemed a truer conception of God and his government of human character and destiny. As the West seemed the best field of labor, he purchased of the State of Iowa six thousand and four hundred acres of land situated in the County of Humboldt, and thither in the Spring of 1863 he moved with a colony of upwards of forty persons. Here, between the two branches of the Des Moines River, near the center of the county, he laid out the town of Humboldt (formerly Springvale), built a saw and flouring mill, some stores, a hotel, and several other buildings, and finally a beautiful and substantial college edifice (Humboldt College), costing $40,000.00, which was opened for the reception of students September 18, 1872. Mr. Taft was early elected to the Presidency of the College, and has devoted himself to its interests with an energy that knows no decline, and a faith that forbids the thought of failure.

In 1866 he established the "True Democrat" (Republican), which is now conducted under the name of "Humboldt Kosmos," by one of his sons.

Mr. Taft was an active abolitionist, and spoke and did much in the advocacy of freedom. Among his published discourses which have attracted considerable attention are "A Discourse on the Character and Death of John Brown," delivered on the occasion of his execution in 1859, and "A Discourse on the National Crisis," delivered in August, 1861.

Mr. Taft is still in the vigor of middle life, and being descended from a long-lived ancestry, has good reason to hope for a continuation of it through yet many years, in which to carry forward his chosen and beneficent work.

Captain ELBRIDGE GERRY POTTER, of Bellevue Township, Jackson County, was born in West Brookfield, Worcester County, Massachusetts, October 17, 1791. When he was six months old his parents removed with him to Herkimer County, New York, and, in 1804, removed and settled in Houndsfield, Jefferson County, in that state, then a wilderness; and Watertown, near which they settled, contained at that time but four houses. Mr. Potter's father was a mason, to which trade he was brought up, and worked at the business in Jefferson County, New York, till 1830, at which time he became a pioneer in Illinois, settling in the old County of St. Clair, at Lebanon, where he was engaged for twelve years in the occupation of milling and distilling.

In 1842 he came to Iowa, and located the farm known as "Paradise," four miles west of Bellevue, in the township of the same name, in Jackson County, where he still resides. It is one of the finest stock farms in the state—of rich rolling land, and watered with numerous living springs, and is under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Potter has been noted as a thorough and systematic farmer, and having selected this naturally rich and beautiful tract of land, his skill and energies have been devoted to making it truly what its name implies—a Paradise.

In addition to carrying on this farm (which is now managed by his son, and only child, Lucius Byron Potter), he built, in 1842-3, the flouring mills at Bellevue known as the Jasper Mills, and did an extensive business in the manufacture and shipment of flour, till he sold to the present proprietors, Kilborn & Co., in the Fall of 1871.

Captain Potter has been a very energetic and hard working man, remarkably self-reliant and self-directing in all his views and acts—on business as well as on all other subjects. He has done his own thinking, and never pinned his faith to the sleeve of any church, sect or creed. From the age of ten years, to the present time, he has been an atheist, open and avowed before the world, and though petty bigotry has sometimes hurled at him the missiles of prejudice, yet, among all those who respect a man for his character more than for his creed, he has justly been held in high esteem, and has exerted a strong influence even among professors of religion. He always exhorted men to be helpful to each other, to deal justly, and to live in peace among themselves; and to these principles his own conduct was in a remarkable degree conformed. He is one of those strong characters, with a natural sense of justice and right, and yet withal of a kindly and generous disposition, that has never needed the restraints of fear to keep him in the line of duty. He says now, in his old age, it is a satisfaction to look back upon his past life, governed as it has been by honesty and integrity and actuated by pure motives. He never promised a man a cent in his life which he did not pay, and never took a man into his employ who did not leave him better than he came. Many instances could be related of his generosity in helping and encouraging men to start in business. He had in early life the care and support of his father's family—ten children besides himself—to whose welfare he devoted himself till twenty-four years of age.

Few men adopt maxims in early life for self-government, such as Captain Potter did when a young man, and fewer carry them out as successfully as he has done.

1. He resolved to make as much money by industry as any one else around him.

2. To marry a wife of good constitution, and willing to work and attend to her domestic duties.

3. He was determined not to have a large family, for he had seen the evils of a large family dependent on an uncertain means of support.

In none of these maxims, adopted in early life, has he been disappointed. He has made as much money as his neighbors, and made it by industry. His expectation has been more than realized in his wife, to whose good constitution and good economy, generally, he confesses himself as much indebted as to himself for the property he has accumulated, and the success he has achieved.

He married Miss Lucretia Thompson, of Jefferson County, New York, in 1816, and the small family which he resolved to have, proved to be one son, Lucius Byron Potter, above mentioned, a prominent and influential citizen, who has succeeded to the inheritance and management of his father's estate.

Captain Potter loves to boast to this extravagant generation of his inexpensive wedding—which cost him $2.

In politics he has been a Whig and a Republican, but has led too busy a life to dabble in offices, except so far as to accept the office of County Commissioner in the old County of St. Clair, Illinois, and signalized his administration by raising the depreciated county bonds to par.

Since the above was written Captain Potter has passed away, dying as he had lived, a professed atheist, his belief strengthening with his age. His last days were calm and peaceful, and the day previous to his death he requested that there should be no praying, singing, lengthy remarks, show or parade, made at his funeral, but that his old friend, John Stewart, should thank the people, and that the picture of the Paine Memorial Building, should be placed by his coffin, all of which requests were faithfully performed. He died at 9 A.M., May 29, 1875.

Honorable JOHN TREANOR, a resident of La Porte City Black Hawk County, Iowa, and for nearly twenty years a highly respected citizen of Benton County, was a native of Cavin County, Ireland, where he was born, April 3, 1813. When about two years of age he immigrated to America with his parents, who lived in Philadelphia some four years, when they removed to Canada West, and in 1828 to Buffalo, New York, where the subject of this sketch continuously resided until 1856, when he removed to Iowa. The sum total of Judge Treanor's scholastic education consists in three months' attendance at the traditional log school house when a small boy. He was early apprenticed to the carpenter and millwright trade, at which he was mostly employed until he was about thirty-five years of age.

He was elected justice of the peace in 1844, and held the office some eight years by re-election, and in 1849 he was chosen justice of the session of the Court of Over and Terminer, which court is presided over by one of the Judges of the Supreme court, and is one of the highest courts of original criminal jurisdiction in the State of New York. He held this office three years by re-election, and in 1853 was admitted to the bar, which was tendered him as an act of esteem by the court of which he had been for three years an honored member.

In 1856 he moved to Benton County, Iowa, where he was soon chosen a justice of the peace, and in 1859 elected to the responsible position of County Judge, the duties of which he satisfactorily performed for two years; has subsequently served several terms as County Supervisor.

Since his residence in Iowa, the greater portion of his time has been occupied in farming and stock raising, in which he has been uniformly successful. Judge Treanor is a self-made man, having been thrown upon the world at the age of seventeen, without education, property or influential friends, with a mother, younger brother, and three sisters to support, he has by energy, perseverance and untiring industry, succeeded in acquiring a competency, and gaining the confidence and esteem of a large circle of the prominent citizens of Benton and adjoining counties. He gratefully acknowledges owing nearly all he is to the teachings of his devoted and honored mother, who is now eighty-one years of age.

He has been twice married, first, March 12, 1835, to Miss Anna G. Acvodley, who died August 11, 1854, and again in 1856, to Miss Mary S. Low, by whom he has two daughters.

Honorable J. H. POWERS.—The subject of this sketch was born in Rochester, Vermont, May 22, 1830, but when he reached the age of seven years his parents emigrated with him to Ohio. His general education was received at the common schools and academies before the age of twenty-one, during which time also he served for five years in the summer months as an apprentice to the trade of a mason.

In 1851 Mr. Powers taught a high school, and about the same time commenced obtaining a professional education as a student of law with Judge Taylor, of Milan, Erie County, Ohio. In 1852 he entered the law office of Walker and Gunkle, in Dayton, Ohio, and alternated between his legal studies at that place and the occupation of teaching school for two years. At the end of this period he entered the law school in Cincinnati, from which he graduated on the 15th of March, 1855.

Turning his eyes toward the great West as an appropriate field for his enterprising disposition, and the exercise of his talents, Mr. Powers, very soon after completing his legal education, came to Iowa, and landed in Allamakee County, in 1855, whence he removed to Chickasaw County, in 1857, and located at New Hampton, where he has resided ever since. New Hampton was then a small village in a newly organized county, sparsely settled. Most of the people were poor as far as the possession of money was concerned, but the natural beauty and fertility of the new county made them content to await the rapid material progress evidently awaiting them in the near future. The little village had just become the county seat. Mr. Powers foresaw its future importance, and wisely laid the foundation of a prosperous business in his professional line. He entered the office of the Clerk of the District Court as deputy, and remained until January 1, 1858. In 1858 he was chosen Road Supervisor for New Hampton.

In the Summer of 1859 Mr. Powers received the nomination of the Republican convention of the 40th district for State Senator. The district comprised the Counties of Chickasaw, Howard, Mitchell, Floyd, Cerro Gordo, Worth, Winnebago, Hancock and Wright. Mr. Powers' opponent was Moses Conger, then of Floyd County, an experienced lawyer considerably his senior in years. Party spirit ran high, and the political parties were not far from evenly balanced. Mr. Powers conducted an able and spirited canvass with his opponent on the stump, and was triumphantly elected. He served in the eighth General Assembly with distinction, and then resigned his position and enlisted as a private soldier in Company "B" Seventh Iowa volunteer infantry. He was soon after promoted Captain of Company "I" of the Ninth, one of the best regiments from the state, in which he served with honor until failing health compelled his resignation, which took place April 13, 1863.

Mr. Powers immediately returned to New Hampton, and resumed the practice of law, to which he has devoted himself almost exclusively ever since, although he has found time to lend a helping hand to nearly every enterprise for the benefit of his town and county. He has a large legal practice; has been longer in practice than any other attorney in the county, and occupies a high position among the members of the bar.

Doctor J. F. WILSON was born in Emmitsburg, Maryland, August 17, 1812; moved to Guernsey County, Ohio, December 24, 1821; to Knox County, Ohio, December, 1832; and to Center Point, Iowa, in March, 1854. Doctor Wilson is one of the oldest citizens of Linn County, and is well and favorably known as a public spirited, enterprising business man. He is the inventor and manufacturer of a number of well known and popular Hawk Eye State remedies.

Honorable THOMAS MITCHELL.—Something more than a year before the territory now embraced within the County of Polk was, according to the treaty stipulations made by the United States Government with the Sacs and Foxes, open for settlement, the subject of this sketch, who is now one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of that county, located some twelve miles east of Fort Des Moines, made a claim, and built a comfortable log cabin, which was used as a hotel for a number of years. He was at that time in the pride of his youthful manhood, having been born March 3, 1816, among the granite hills of Claremont, Sullivan County, New Hampshire, where his boyhood and youth were spent acquiring those sterling traits of character for which the sturdy sons of New England have so long been noted. His father, William Mitchell, was born near Boston, Massachusetts, and moved to Claremont when about twenty-three years of age. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, as was his mother, whose maiden name was Dolly Blake, who was a native of Hampton, New Hampshire.

When young Thomas was about sixteen years of age, his father died leaving a large family with little means of support. He soon obtained work on a neighboring farm, where he continued to labor for about seven years, completing his limited education by attending district school in the neighborhood for a few months during the first three winters. He came West in November, 1839, and spent the first winter in St. Charles County, Missouri, and in the following March moved to Fairfield, Jefferson County, Iowa, where he continued to reside for about four years. In April, 1842, he was elected one of the Commissioners of Jefferson County, and served two years, when he again removed, and located at the crossing of Camp Creek, then Indian county, where he has since continuously resided. In 1846 he helped to organize Polk County, and was, in the Fall of that year, elected its first sheriff. Two years later he ran for representative, the district containing thirteen counties, but was defeated by Manly Gifford, of Jasper County. He was, however, in 1857, elected to represent Polk and Jasper Counties in the first Legislature which met at Des Moines, and took his seat in January, 1858. In 1859 he was elected one of the Supervisors of Polk County, which office he held six years by re-election. In the Fall of 1873 he was nominated and elected to a seat in the Upper House of the Iowa General Assembly, of which body he has since been an active and influential member.

Honorable ED WRIGHT.—This gentleman was not overburdened with a pretentious baptismal name, but has been all his life plain Ed Wright, with no affectation or abbreviation. This may be owing, perhaps, to a vein of simplicity from the blood of his Quaker ancestors—certainly it is an appropriate complement for the honest English name of the family, which was brought over seas to the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, before the Revolution, and thence, with the dawn of the present century, into the wilds of Ohio. A hint of the Quaker traditions is found again in the name of his birth place. He was born near Salem, Ohio, the 27th of June, 1827, the number of the day, and the year of the century, corresponding. He resided upon the old homestead during his minority, with the advantages of the district schools, and a season in the academy at Atwater, Portage County, Ohio, as his only means of education. After that he taught school during Winter seasons until 1849, and engaged, in the Summers of 1846 and 1847 in the work of carpenter and mill wright. In March, 1848, he was married to Miss Martha Thompson, an estimable daughter of a Buckeye farmer, a woman of good common school education and unusual good sense and intelligence. Soon after this event Mr. Wright took charge of the saw and flouring mills at Deerfield, Ohio. Here he remained until 1852, when he removed to Iowa and became a Hawkeye farmer.

In 1856 he was elected Representative of Cedar County in the Legislature of Iowa. He was re-elected in 1857, and again in 1859, serving with distinction in the 6th, 7th and 8th sessions of the General Assembly.

In 1862 he was commissioned as major of the 24th Iowa volunteer infantry. This was known as the "Methodist Regiment," and by its zeal and bravery won distinguished laurels. With it Mr. Wright participated in the battles of Port Gibson and Champion Hills of the Vicksburg campaign, in the Red River campaign and the battle of Pleasant Hill, under Gen. Banks, and in the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek, in the Shenandoah Valley, under Sheridan. He was known as a brave and efficient officer, and gained for himself distinguished honor.

After his discharge he returned to his farm, but was speedily called again into public life by a fourth election to the House of Representatives in the Fall of 1865, from Cedar County, and during the Eleventh Session was honored with the Speaker's chair, where he distinguished himself as an expert parliamentarian and a ready and impartial presiding officer. In 1866 he was elected Secretary of State upon the Republican ticket, and entered upon the duties of the office on the first Monday in 1867. He discharged the duties of this responsible office with such acceptability that he was re-nominated in 1868, and again in 1870, with a unanimity rarely witnessed, holding the office six consecutive years, or until January, 1873. Since the expiration of this term, Mr. Wright has been employed as Secretary of the Board of Commissioners, having supervision of the erection of the new Capitol. He is a man of well balanced endowments, distinguished for solid parts, and meritorious rather than brilliant qualities.

Honorable PETER MELENDY.—This gentleman, who for the last twenty-five years has been so well and favorably known in the agricultural and horticultural circles of the Northwest as a practical farmer, is a citizen of Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he has resided most of the time for the last twenty years. Though born, raised, and principally educated in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and employed for several years after completing his education in his father's fanning mill manufactory, he inherited and early acquired a taste and passionate love for fancy farming from his father, who owned and operated several fine farms in the neighborhood of Cincinnati, and devoted much attention to breeding fine and blooded stock of all kinds. He is now fifty-two years of age, having been born on the 9th day of February, 1823, of pure English extraction on his father's side, being a lineal descendant of Thomas Melendy, who emigrated from England early in the seventeenth century, and settled in Massachusetts, while on his mother's side he is of Scotch-Irish descent. He first attended school at Amherst, New Hampshire, while on a visit there with his parents, and afterwards received most of his education in Cincinnati, spending one year, when about twelve years of age, at Powers' Academy, in Butler County, Ohio. When he was fifteen he entered Woodward College, Cincinnati, where he remained four years, and graduated with the class of 1841. Immediately after leaving school, he entered his father's manufactory, where he remained several years, learning the trade of making wheat fans, and securing a valuable business experience.

In the Summer of 1850, he commenced putting his long cherished plan in operation, by purchasing a one hundred acre farm near Mount Pleasant, Ohio, and nine miles from Cincinnati, to which he gave the name of "Thinadiska Place." Although this was an old farm, practically worn out, at least so considered by the former owner, he so effectually reclaimed and improved it by his energetic and thoroughly practical management, that at the Ohio State Fair, in 1855, he received the first premium of one hundred dollars for the best cultivated and the model farm in the state. The same farm had taken the first premium of twenty-five dollars at the Hamilton County Fair the year previous. During the six years that he spent on this truly beautiful place, he did much for the agricultural interest of the West, by working out and demonstrating the practicability of many untried plans and theories, and in presenting such improvements and changes as careful study and earnest thought suggested to his active mind. Much of his attention was devoted to the breeding and introducing imported, thoroughbred, and other improved classes. His stock of all kinds, whether it was a five thousand dollar horse, or a one hundred dollar pair of bantams, were unsurpassed and seldom equaled in the West. He secured the best, regardless of price, and kept only such animals as possessed superior merits. No man in Ohio did more during the same period to introduce fine breeds of stock, and awaken a general interest in progressive farming. His well merited success gave him a state-wide reputation as a scientific farmer and stock breeder, so that during the six years, from 1851 to 1856, inclusive, he was connected in some capacity with a large number of agricultural, horticultural, and stock breeding associations, filling the different positions which he held with honor to himself and profit to the associations. He was for four years President of the Western Poultry Association at Cincinnati, Ohio; three years Vice-President of the National Poultry Association at Boston, Massachusetts; Director and Treasurer of the Hamilton County, Ohio, Agricultural Society; a member of the United States Agricultural Society, of the Cincinnati Horticultural Society, the Ohio, and National Pomological Society. During this same period he exhibited at nineteen fairs, making over five hundred entries of stock, poultry and farm produce, for which he received two hundred and eighty-one premiums, amounting in all to $1,230 in cash, $700 in silver plate, one hundred and fifteen diplomas, and seven silver medals.

In the Fall of 1856 he sold "Thinadiska Place" for $15,000, nearly double what he gave for it, and the following Spring removed to Cedar Falls, Iowa, and remained about six months. He then located on a one thousand acre stock farm, which he had previously purchased in Butler County, near the lands owned by the Ohio Stock Breeding Company, of which he was an active member. After remaining here a little more than a year, and finding the country too new to make the raising of fine stock profitable, he abandoned his farming enterprise and returned to Cedar Falls, where he has since resided. Here he engaged for a number of years in the agricultural implement and produce business, which he closed out in March, 1865, having been appointed by President Lincoln, without his solicitation, United States Marshal for the District of Iowa, which important position he acceptably filled until the 12th day of October, 1866, when he was removed owing to the fact that he persisted in remaining true to his party principles, refusing to swing around the circle with the "Traitorous Andy." He was reappointed to the same position by President Grant in March, 1871, and, serving four years, has again retired to private life at the expiration of his appointment, carrying with him the confidence and kindly feeling of a host of friends throughout the State.

Although since his return to Cedar Falls, in 1859, Mr. Melendy has not been actively engaged in farming, yet such was his natural taste, experience, and thoroughly practical knowledge of all subjects pertaining to stock raising and agriculture, that he naturally drifted into the work, and without seeking it took a prominent position among the leading agriculturists of the State. He was active in the organization of the Cedar Valley District Agricultural Society, was elected its first President, which position he held for more than ten years. He was instrumental in the organization, and was for a long time President of the Cedar Valley Horticultural and Floriculture Association, which has done much to create and cultivate a taste for home adornment, that has materially aided in rendering Cedar Falls one of the most attractive places in the State. In 1859 he was elected a Director of the Iowa State Agricultural Society, which position he held by re-election six years. He was afterwards elected Vice-President, two years, and President, five years, to which last position he would have been re-elected had he not positively declined. He was connected with this association in different capacities for thirteen years, and its uniform success is, in a great measure, due to his untiring and well directed efforts in its behalf. Such was his popularity with the officers associated with him on the Board, that in January, 1869, he received from them a beautiful and valuable testimonial of their personal regard in the shape of an elegant silver tea set, containing seven pieces, and costing $300 at wholesale. The largest piece had the following inscription handsomely engraved upon it: "Presented to Peter Melendy by the undersigned, as a token of their appreciation of his services as President of the Iowa State Agricultural Society: Geo. G. Wright, J. M. Shaffer, Geo. Sprague, S. F. Spofford, Oliver Mills, M. W. Robinson, Robt. Seevers, Timothy Day, Phineas Cadwell, S. B. Hewitt, Jr., Milo Smith, F. O. Downing, J. H. Bacon, E. H. Shawkland, H. C. Hunt, January, 1869." He also took an active part in the establishment of the Iowa State Agricultural College and Farm at Ames, was elected one of its first Directors in 1858, which position he continued to hold for fourteen years. He was the commissioner appointed to select the two hundred and forty thousand acres of land donated by the General Government to the College, which he did in the Fall of 1862 to the general satisfaction of all concerned; was Superintendent and Secretary for one year, on the Building and Executive Committee for two years, a member of the different committees to organize, to select professors, to purchase stock for the farm and furniture for the institution.

In politics, the subject of this sketch has always been an earnest, faithful supporter of the Republican party and its principles. Raised and educated an Abolition Whig, when abolition principles were less popular in Southern Ohio than now in Iowa, he acquired a fearless, independent method of political thought and expression, and by often assisting his father, who was an officer on the underground railroad, he early became familiar with the character, teachings and tenets of the slaveholding Democracy. His first vote was cast in 1844, for Henry Clay, for President; was a delegate to the Ohio Whig State Convention in 1852, and cast his first Republican vote in 1856, for John C. Fremont. After removing to Iowa, he became too much interested in the future success of the Republican party to long remain idle, and he became an earnest worker in the organization and management of the party machinery in the state. From 1856 to 1874 he represented his county, and took an active part in nearly all the county, senatorial, congressional, and state conventions held during that period; was at different times Chairman of the County Senatorial and Congressional Committees, and for a number of years a member of the State Central Committee. In 1868 he was chosen chairman of the last named committee, which position he accepted at a personal sacrifice, and immediately devoted his whole time and attention to the duties of the office, bringing to his assistance rare executive ability, and an inexhaustible supply of energy, he inaugurated and carried through the most successful campaign ever witnessed in the state. This was the year the suffrage amendment was carried, Iowa being the first state to declare that upon her soil there shall be no caste, or exclusive privileges. He was elected a delegate to the National Republican Convention, which assembled in Baltimore in June, 1864, and was one of the committee appointed to wait on President Abraham Lincoln, and notify him of his nomination for a second term. In 1868, he was elected one of the delegates at large, by a vote of 498 out of 550, to represent the state at the Chicago Convention, which nominated Grant and Colfax as the national standard bearers. Though an earnest, enthusiastic party worker, receiving the entire confidence of his political friends, he would never allow his name to be used in connection with any office. In 1867, his friends, and the press of Northern Iowa, presented him as a suitable candidate for the nomination of governor of the state, but he positively refused to allow his name to be presented to the convention. No citizen of Cedar Falls has ever taken a more lively interest in its growth, progress and development than has Mr. Melendy, who has always encouraged with time and money every enterprise that gave reasonable promise of success, and who has been ever watchful and industrious in building up the interests of his adopted town. The location of the Soldiers' Orphan Home here is largely due to his influence and efficient management.

Mr. Melendy's religious life has been clear and positive; converted in 1840, he united at once with the Sixth Presbyterian Church of Cincinnati, where he remained until 1867. The Sunday School, then in its infancy, attracted his attention, and he early gave his energies to it, first as a scholar then as a teacher, and has since through life aided it with influence and time, hardly missing a Sabbath for the last thirty years. In 1867 he removed his church relationship to the First Presbyterian Church of Cedar Falls, and soon after was elected a member of the session of that church, and has since been chosen to represent that church in every branch of its judicatory, presbytery, synod, general assembly, and frequently also as a member of committee for the settlement of important questions in church polity and work. Notably among these has been the educational interests that have frequently come up for consideration, in which he has been a trusted advisor. In his religious conversations and actions he has always been, as in every thing else, clear, positive, and unswerving, always liberal with his means, where, in his convictions, the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom could be promoted, never shirking in his official capacity under the civil government to carry every where with him a strong religious influence, and throughout the state all classes will ever remember his unbending Christian integrity.

Such is the necessarily brief and imperfect sketch of one who is well and favorably known to a large circle of acquaintances throughout the State. He is emphatically a man of the people—"the working man of Iowa." Without seeming to court the good will of others, he has a quiet, natural suavity of manner, that insensibly attracts men to him, and makes a stranger who meets him for the first time feel like an old acquaintance and friend. There is something winning in the kindly tones of his voice, and the cordial grasp of his hand that impresses every one with his sincerity. These traits, added to an exemplary Christian character and life, ability, and untarnished honor, make him beloved by his friends, and secures the respect and esteem of all who are brought in contact with him.

W. G. CLARK, one of the earliest settlers of Monroe County, was born in Middle Haddam, Connecticut, in 1813, where he enjoyed the usual advantages for an education afforded by the common schools until he was sixteen years of age, when he left home to seek his fortune.

Arriving in New York he obtained employment as clerk in a dry goods store, and continued until he had accumulated enough to go into business for himself. He followed the dry goods business until 1840, when his health becoming impaired, he decided to give up mercantile life, and in company with his nephew, John Clark, came to Iowa when the territory now embraced in Monroe and Wapello Counties was still in the possession of the Indians. He remained in Van Buren County from 1841 till 1843, when the Indian title having been extinguished, he removed to Kishkekosh County—now Monroe—and settled about two miles northwest of the present City of Albia, at Clark's Point. In 1855, he disposed of his farm at "The Point," with the view of going to Texas; but owing to the illness of one of his children, he abandoned his purpose, and purchased his present homestead.

In 1846 Mr. Clark was elected a member of the State Convention for the framing of a State Constitution, to represent the Counties of Monroe and Appanoose, and took an active part in the work of the convention. He has occupied several offices of trust in the county. He now devotes his time exclusively to farming and orcharding, having fifty acres in apple orchards, most of which is, or is coming into, fruiting, and is in excellent condition. Mr. Clark was married in 1843 to Miss Jane L. Rankin, of Davis County, and is the father of twelve children, all of whom are now living.

Colonel DANIEL ANDERSON was born in Indiana in 1821, was raised on the farm, attended a few terms at the Asbury University, Greencastle, Indiana, after which he spent several years in teaching in his native state. He read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1847, came to Iowa in 1848, and remained one year at Keokuk. He settled in Albia in 1849, and entered upon the practice of his profession. In 1854 he was elected to the State Senate, and re-elected in 1857 for four years. In the Spring of 1861 he organized a company of cavalry for the army, going as its captain. He was promoted through the several grades to Colonel of the First Iowa Cavalry.

Returning in 1864, he resumed his practice, and in 1874 formed a partnership with C. F. Knowlton, which still continues under the name of Anderson & Knowlton. Colonel Anderson holds the office of Register in Bankruptcy, to which he was appointed in 1867.

J. H. DRAKE, President of the First National Bank of Albia, was born in North Carolina, in 1829, and removed with his parents to Fort Madison, Iowa, in 1837, and in 1846 they settled in Davis County, where he engaged in merchandising, which business he followed until his removal to Albia in 1867, where he continued in trade three years. In 1870, in company with B. F. Elbert, he opened a private banking business, which they continued one year, when they established the First National Bank, in Albia, Mr. Drake being the president, and Mr. Elbert cashier.

Colonel JAMES A. SAWYERS was born in Giles County, Tennessee, on the 16th of December, 1824, where he lived until 1846, when he volunteered in the Mexican war, serving thirteen months in the Tennessee Cavalry. In 1847 he came to Davis County, Iowa, and engaged in mercantile and milling business, and married Miss M. E. Woods on the 5th of September, 1848. He moved to Sioux City in 1858, and engaged in mercantile business until the breaking out of the civil war, when he volunteered for frontier service, and was elected Commander of the Northern Border Brigade, and while in that service built a line of forts and stockades from Sioux City to Chain Lakes, Minnesota. Afterwards he was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to survey and build a wagon road from the mouth of the Niobrara River to Virginia City, Montana, by way of the now famous Black Hills. After two years of unusual hard work, the road was finished. In 1867 he built a large brick block in Sioux City, and the next year constructed the steamer Undine, now used on the ferry at Sioux City.

Mrs. Sawyers died the 26th of March, 1869. He was again married to Miss J. E. Bell, Feb. 22, 1870. In 1871 he built a fine suburban residence on his farm near Sioux City and overlooking the Missouri River and Valley for a long distance. We give a fine lithograph view of this residence, with the steamer Undine in the foreground.

C. L. HART, M.D., of Sioux City, Iowa, was born at Spencersport, Monroe County, New York, August 25, 1836. In 1837 he was taken by his parents to Wisconsin, and there grew up to manhood, spending his time in that state, chiefly till 1874.

In 1856 he entered the Freshman class of the University of Wisconsin; commenced the study of medicine in 1859, and graduated in Ohio in 1861. He subsequently graduated at the Homœopathic Medical College of New York, and practiced medicine at Madison, Wisconsin, for several years.

In the Spring of 1872, in the further completion of his medical studies, he graduated at the New York Ophthalmic Hospital College, and in the Autumn of that year was tendered the Professorship of Ophthalmology in the Medical College of Cleveland, Ohio, which he declined, intending to devote himself to medical practice.

In pursuance of that object he located at Sioux City, Iowa, in 1874, and is there engaged in the active practice of his profession.

SAMUEL R. MILLAR (deceased), of Davenport, was a native of Warren County, Virginia, a graduate of Transylvania University, at Lexington, Kentucky, and practiced law for some time in Louisville, Kentucky, from which city he came for his health to Iowa in 1848. He entered largely into land speculation, and opened a large farm in Scott County. Mr. Millar died in 1861.

Honorable GEORGE W. JONES, of Des Moines, is a native of Barren County, Kentucky, and was born on the 18th of November, 1820. At the age of eight years his father removed with him to Morgan County, Illinois, and for some time they resided in the vicinity of Jacksonville. His father was among the earliest settlers in that part of Illinois. He selected the place in 1824, and went back to Kentucky and remained till 1828, when he returned and made a permanent settlement in Morgan County.

While in Illinois, George W. attended such schools as the country afforded, till his parents removed to Iowa, and settled in Burlington in 1834. Here he attended school in a log school house, where E. D. Rand's large lumber yard is now situated, and, judging from a remark subsequently made by him, finished his attendance at school in this place.

One of the Professors in the University of Northern Iowa (Fayette County), wrote Mr. Jones a letter, inquiring if he was the George W. Jones who attended a certain academical institution in Vermont, and afterwards graduated at Harvard University. He replied that he would be very glad to have his friend's education, but that he graduated in a log cabin on the frontiers of Iowa.

In 1839 Mr. Jones engaged in the grocery and dry goods business at Mount Pleasant, and continued the same till 1843, when he moved to Mahaska County, and located a farm on Six Mile Prairie, and also opened a stock of goods. The county was not then laid out, nor the location of the county seat determined. In February, 1844, when the boundaries of the county had been established, he removed his goods to the site of the present City of Oskaloosa, and opened a store in a log cabin, the Winter before the town was laid out. (June, 1844, was the date of the latter event). His brother, John W. Jones, who was State Treasurer from 1859 to 1863, was partner with him in business. They did the first mercantile business in Mahaska County, continuing in Oskaloosa till 1855, when Mr. Jones removed to Indianola, and engaged in dry goods and banking business, which he continued till 1864, when he removed to Des Moines and established the Second National Bank, of which he was cashier and principal stockholder. He sold his banking business and engaged in merchandise in 1865, and sold the latter and went into real estate business in 1867, operating heavily in real estate and city property.

In 1869 he built the hotel which bears his name—the Jones House—on the east side of the river, and is now engaged with his son in keeping a good house for the accommodation of the traveling public and visitors at the Capital.

In 1870 Mr. Jones was elected a member of the Thirteenth General Assembly, and served in the House during the session of that body.

He has always been noted for his integrity and upright moral character, of which his face is an index. He has been twice married; first at Mount Pleasant, in 1842, to Evalina A. Sheldon, and second, at Oskaloosa, in March, 1854, to Miss Ellen Windle, of that place. By the first marriage he has two children living, James H. and Clarence B. Jones, both in business with him at Des Moines.

Honorable GEORGE W. VAN HORNE, Editor of the Muscatine Tribune.—This gentleman, who has the reputation of being one of the ablest writers in the West, was born in Springfield, Massachusetts, October 12, 1835. When quite a young man he began to exhibit those qualities of mind which now find their best expression through his fluent and graphic pen.

Mr. Van Horne is a born editor, and his chosen profession of the law is only secondary to his rank and standing as a journalist. A man starting out in life does not always know what occupation he is best adapted for, till experience inducts him into some calling for which he developes a peculiar fitness; he is then enabled to see that such is the business in which, with the least waste of effort, he can achieve the greatest success. Fortunate for him if his former acquirements are not wasted, or at least ill adapted to facilitate his new calling, in which case he can not make his studies in another profession contribute to the one of his final choice. Not so with Mr. Van Horne; he chose the profession of law, between which and that of an editor there is a natural and fitting relation. Perhaps in no field, except in that of actual legal practice, is a thorough preparation in the study of law so necessary as in that of journalism. Journalism, dealing with politics, is law applied, and an editor, in order to be successful, must understand it in all its various relations and ramifications.

Mr. Van Horne studied law with Hon. E. B. Gillette, of Westfield, and Hon Charles R. Ladd, of Chicopee, Massachusetts, and was admitted to the Iowa bar in 1856, having removed to this state in 1855, and finished his law studies in the office of Cloud & O'Connor, at Muscatine.

In 1861 he was appointed by President Lincoln United States Consul at Marseilles, France, and remained abroad till 1866. During his leisure hours in Europe he employed his pen in writing "Tom Rockley, or the Heir of the Lodge," a romance which at once placed its author in a high rank as a writer. The story appeared in the first volume of The American Publisher, at Hartford, Connecticut, and was widely read and commented favorably upon by the press.

In 1867 Mr. Van Horne was invited by the Republican State Central Committee of Arkansas to take the editorial management of The Arkansas Republican, the state organ, started at Little Rock that year. He declined, but subsequently assisted the United States Registrar in the reconstruction of the State.

In 1868 he removed to Massachusetts, but returned to Iowa in 1870, and established the Muscatine Weekly Tribune. Purchasing the old Courier office, whose daily and weekly publication had run through a history of nearly thirty years, Mr. Van Horne consolidated the two papers, and with Ed. H. and Wm. C. Betts as partners, began the publication of the Muscatine Daily Tribune, the morning paper of the city, in the Spring of 1874.

Mr. Van Horne is best known in the West as a political writer, but some think his best things have been said in his best way in the story referred to above, written during his leisure hours in Europe. Be that as it may, the hurry and brevity of newspaper articles is not generally favorable to fine writing. The editor has got to understand the art of "putting things," and in this regard we think the columns of the Daily or Weekly Tribune are complimentary of Mr. Van Horne as a newspaper writer. He has also the sharp appreciation and quick instinct of what is valuable for publication, which is another good qualification of an editor.

Mr. Van Horne has one of the largest private libraries in the West, mainly works collected by him in Europe.

W. W. HANFORD, of the Vinton Eagle, is a native of Delaware County, New York, born on the 18th of June, 1831. His boyhood days were chiefly spent on a farm in his native county, where he enjoyed such advantages for education as were afforded by the district schools, but was by no means confined to these advantages, for entering a printing office at the age of seventeen, he found there the facilities for a more practical and thorough knowledge of the rudiments of learning than mere school students usually acquire; and being of an active and inquiring mind, improved his opportunities to the best advantage. He thus laid the foundation for that career of success which has attended his efforts as a newspaper man in Iowa for more than twenty years.

Taking Greeley's advice, he came West in 1853, and located at Vinton in 1854.

During his residence of twenty-one years at Vinton, he has been thoroughly identified with the interests of the town and county; every enterprise calculated to enhance the prosperity of either, has received his hearty encouragement, as well as contributions from his purse when it has been of a nature demanding the latter. No man has been more liberal in these respects than Mr. Hanford, in proportion to his means.

In 1855 he was tendered the office of treasurer of the county, but he declined it. In 1862 he accepted the office of Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, and held the position for ten years. He could have held it longer, but resigned in 1872, choosing to devote his entire energies to the business of his choice.

As editor of The Eagle, Mr. Hanford has achieved a decided success, the paper having attained the largest circulation of any in the Cedar Valley. He has been a member of the Republican party since its organization, and through his earnest endeavors to disseminate its principles, much has been accomplished in effecting that revolution of political rule which has made the state thoroughly Republican.

[Condensed from Annals of Iowa.]

Honorable WILLIAM EDWARD MILLER, the present worthy Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Iowa, was born October 18, 1823, near the town of Mount Pleasant, in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania.

The traveler of thirty years ago, whose journey crossed the Alleghanies, will not have forgotten the stage coach of that day, with its profane driver and profaner passengers, and may recollect the pleasant little village on the western side of the mountain, on the turnpike leading from Cumberland to Pittsburgh, called Mount Pleasant, near where the subject of this sketch was born.

His father, the venerable Samuel Miller, Sr., was born in Somerset County, but removed with his parents when a child to the County of Westmoreland, where he was reared, and where he became an active and prominent business man, distinguished for his energy, public spirit and integrity, and also for his zeal as an "old fashioned Methodist," of which church he became a member prior to his marriage, and to which he, with his wife, is still attached. He transferred his residence from Pennsylvania to Johnson County, Iowa, in 1854, where he and his wife, five years ago, he being 74 and she 73 years old, celebrated their "golden wedding," and it may be added here that her father, Henry Eicher, died in Ohio, in 1873, in his 99th year.

In his earlier youth, Judge Miller lived and worked on his father's farm, laboring in summer and attending school in winter. When he had attained his fifteenth year, his father having relinquished farming and gone into the foundry business at Mount Pleasant, manufacturing stoves, plows, and various kinds of machinery, young Miller engaged in this business with his father.

In 1844 he married Miss Mary, daughter of James Robinson, Esq., of the neighboring County of Fayette. Her father, though retaining for part of his family his residence in Pennsylvania, himself became an "Early Settler" of Iowa, having been a purchaser at the government sale of lots in Iowa City in 1841. On his purchase then made he built some of the largest buildings here at that day, and subsequently some which still stand and are counted with the most permanent business structures of Iowa City. Several of his sons-in-law, with their wives and families, followed Mr. Robinson to Iowa, and settled at an early day at Iowa City. Among these was the late Nicholas Harvey White (for several years a member of the Board of Curators of the Historical Society), who died in 1873. Mr. Robinson removed back to Pennsylvania in 1865, where his death occurred the 21st of March, 1874, in his 87th year, his wife having died six months previously, aged 78. Thus were two of the pioneers of Iowa gathered to their fathers at a ripe old age.

Although Judge Miller had not the advantage of a university course, he has a good English education, obtained in the select schools of his early home, for the common school system of Pennsylvania had not yet been established in his youth. But the education of such a mind as his is never finished, and depends little on colleges and schools, the acquisition of one class of learning acting as a stimulus for the acquirement of others, and to-day he is a harder student, and acquires knowledge with greater facility, than ever before.

In 1846 he began the systematic study of the law, which for three years he applied himself to incessantly during his leisure hours and at night, supporting himself and his family meantime by working at his trade as a moulder in his father's foundry. He also, at the same time, with diligence extended his study of ancient and modern history as collateral with that of law, and so captivated was he by the charms of study, and so possessed did he become with the determination to master the profession, that to him this double work seemed no hardship.

By the year 1849 the present Constitution of Pennsylvania had gone into effect, with a more liberal code of laws. Previous to this the office of Justice of the Peace in that Commonwealth had been looked upon as well nigh hereditary in certain families, and was at all events filled by appointment of the Governor, and in Mount Pleasant had been held for half a century by John E. Fleming, with great acceptability to the people; but in this year the "Young America" party of Mount Pleasant elected young Miller to the office, as a tribute to his worth as a rising and persevering young man, and as a mark of their approbation of his efforts, in the face of great difficulties, to master the abstruse science of jurisprudence.

He had now become the most popular youth of the place, and his associates lavished upon him most of their honors. Among other marks of distinction they conferred on him was the title of Captain, by electing and having him commissioned captain of the "Jackson Blues," a military company whose history covered a period dating back to the South Carolina "nullification" troubles, during the Presidency of Andrew Jackson, and which formed part of the "uniformed militia" of the state.

The discharge of his magisterial duties greatly facilitated the prosecution of his law studies, gave him a practical insight into legal technicalities and forms, compelled him constantly to investigate new points of common and statute law, and lent additional interest to a subject he had discovered an innate liking for. At the same time, his close application to his legal studies, which became well known, while it enabled him to give his judicial decisions with more intelligence, invested them with such authority as made them acceptable even to the amerced.

From April, 1849, to September, 1852, he held this office and discharged its duties, at the same time pursuing more closely his law studies as the object of his ambition seemed nearer attainment. In the latter year he doffed the justice's ermine and the captain's cockade, and started with his family for Iowa. This journey was made by steamer from Pittsburg to Keokuk, and thence by stage to Iowa City, where he and his little flock arrived on the 10th of October.

On his arrival here he found the Fall term of the District Court over, and a consideration of this fact and that the prospect of immediate practice for a new young lawyer did not seem flattering, together with his unacquaintance with the practice under the Iowa code, decided him to defer, for a time, entering upon his profession, and to accept the offer of the two Iowa City papers, "The Iowa Republican," and "The Iowa Capital Reporter," to report for them the proceedings of the Senate during the session of the Fourth General Assembly, then about to convene at Iowa City.

At the Spring term of the District Court for Johnson County in the following May (1853), he was admitted to the bar, and at once opened a law office in Iowa City. His first case occurred soon after, being a suit before Squire Peter Ewing, involving a claim of six dollars for injury to a hog. Although the amount at stake was so small, the cause was hotly contested, requiring, besides the justice, four lawyers for its decision. These were, for the plaintiff, James D. Templin and James Harlan, two reverend lawyers of that day, the first of whom has acquired wealth from the keen and intelligent pursuit of business, and a state reputation as a legal author, and wealth and honors have also been the portion of the other as a United States Senator and Cabinet Minister. For the defense, besides Judge Miller, was Col. W. Penn Clarke, whose fortunes, as various as his abilities, after securing for him a seat as a delegate for the Counties of Iowa and Johnson in the Constitutional Convention of 1857, led him through the dangerous paths of a paymaster during the war, then gave him the practical direction of the interior department as its chief clerk, and have finally anchored him at Washington City, as a resistless pleader before the court of claims. These are outlines of the careers of the lawyers, but what became of the justice, clients, or hog, we do not know.

A tin "shingle," attention to business, application to study, and honorable conduct toward his clients, soon brought their rewards in clients with gold in their hands, gave him local popularity, placed him in the front rank of the profession of his town, and finally laid that foundation on which his eminent reputation as a jurist now rests.

In August, 1854, on the ticket opposed to the democracy, he was elected prosecuting attorney for Johnson County, a no despicable tribute to his popularity, for with one other exception, all his associates on the ticket were defeated. The duties of this office he discharged for the full term of two years.

In 1857 he was selected as one of the Republican candidates for representative in the Legislature from the district then composed of Iowa and Johnson counties, but the Democrats having received accessions of strength, their majority was too strong to be overborne by personal popularity, however great, and he was defeated.

At the October election of 1858, the first held under the present Constitution, he was elected judge of the eighth judicial district, comprising the Counties of Benton, Cedar, Iowa, Johnson, Jones, Linn and Tama, and entered upon the difficult and responsible duties of the office on the first day of January, 1859.

At that time the courts were overwhelmed with business. In Judge Miller's district, the cases on the calendar had accumulated for about three years back, having been continued from term to term. He at once set himself to work to clear the dockets in the several counties of his district, and by persistent industry accomplished the task in the first two years of his term.

In 1862, after a service on the bench of nearly four years, in which the public were well and faithfully served and the bar well satisfied, he resigned his judgeship to accept the colonelcy of the 28th Iowa volunteers, then organizing at Camp Pope, near Iowa City. The last year of his service as judge was one of irksome restraint on his inclination. The martial spirit of every one was aroused, and it did not seem to him becoming that the former captain of the "Jackson Blues" should dally at home over law decisions when the very foundation, not only of law but of constitutions, had been submitted to the dread arbitrament of the sword. For two months Colonel Miller performed perhaps the hardest service that falls to a commander—to drill raw recruits under the shadow of their own eaves. He did it, however, with such tact as to gain their applause without sacrificing discipline. In November, with the 28th, he broke up camp and proceeded, via Davenport, by rail and steamer, to Helena, Arkansas, in the environs of which he encamped with his regiment about the 20th of November.

The campaigning done by the troops encamped on the banks of the Mississippi from Helena to Young's Point during the winter of 18C2-3, was of the most exhausting kind. Unwholesome water, and malarial and contagious diseases, undermined the strength or destroyed the lives of many of that army that hovered near Vicksburg that winter, encamped near the levee or close to the bayou (localities which, as hinted at by the historian Ingersoll, in his work on "Iowa and the Rebellion," were salubrious for alligators, but fatal to men), while the bottomless roads and inclement weather disheartened the well.

At Helena Colonel Miller remained all winter in what was denominated winter quarters, but he, with the whole or detachments of the regiment, made frequent expeditions in different directions. It was a detachment of the 28th with a detachment from the 11th Ohio, under command of a captain, that cut the levee and allowed the waters of the Mississippi to rush into the "Yazoo Pass," which afterwards became so famous.

The 28th, with Colonel Miller at its head, also formed a part of the expedition commanded by Gen. Gorman, which ascended White River in January, 1863. Captain Stuart, in his "Iowa Colonels and Regiments," in speaking of this campaign, says:

"If on this expedition Colonel Miller and his regiment won little distinction, it was because no occasion offered. One thing is certain, that the hardships and exposures attending the movement were hardly ever equaled. The weather was cold, and it rained and snowed by turns, almost incessantly. Scores contracted diseases on the White River expedition, which totally disabled them for service."

The arduous services and exposure experienced in this expedition laid the foundation of that disease which finally compelled Colonel Miller, on the entreaty of friends, and the recommendation of surgeons, to resign and come home in March, 1863, the alternatives presented being certain death down there, and the possibility of recovery at home. His constitution was very much impaired, and it was not till long after the war that it recovered its pristine strength.

In the Spring of 1864, his health having been partially renewed, he resumed business as a legal practitioner at Iowa City, and about this time began to prepare "A Treatise on Pleading and Practice in actions and Special Proceedings at Law and in Equity in the Courts of Iowa under the Revision of 1860," the first edition of which was published in 1868, and though a large one, has already been exhausted, and a new one, revised to meet the changes resulting from recent legislation, being called for, is now in course of publication—the best evidence of the appreciation by the bar of the worth of the work.

In 1868 he was again called to the bench by an election as judge of the circuit court in the eighth judicial district, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such at the beginning of January, 1869.

The experience gained while acting as district judge, and now as circuit judge, the approbation with which his decisions were received by the bar and the public, the almost uniform endorsement they met by the superior courts, his high character for integrity and learning, and the general aptitude he had displayed for the bench, singled him out as the proper person to fill a vacancy in the supreme court, which occurred before his term as circuit judge had expired.

Accordingly, at the Republican state convention held at Des Moines in August, 1870, he was nominated, with scarcely any opposition, as the candidate of this great party for the high office of supreme judge, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Honorable John F. Dillon, who had been re-elected supreme judge to fill the term beginning January, 1870, but who had declined to qualify because appointed by the President one of the new circuit judges of the United States. In view of his nomination by the Republican convention, Judge Miller was appointed by the governor, and at the election ensuing in October, chosen by the people, to the office for which he had been nominated, the term of which will expire in January, 1876.

In accordance with a provision of the Constitution requiring the judge having the shortest term to act as chief justice, Judge Miller, since the beginning of the present year, has filled this exalted position, and will be required to do so till the expiration of his term.

Judge Miller's residence, since he came to Iowa, has been at Iowa City. In the Spring of 1873 for the convenience of having easy access to the archives of the supreme court, and to the State library, whose volumes must often be consulted by the supreme judges, he removed with his family to Des Moines, but we believe he considers his residence there only temporary.

In the Spring of 1871 Judge Miller became connected with the law department of the state university as the successor of Judge Wright, up to that time professor of constitutional and criminal law. This connection he still holds, lecturing at stated times during each course on the topics of criminal law, agency, the law of partnerships, and of private corporations.

It would seem, from the foregoing brief and imperfect outline of his biography, that Judge Miller's life has been too much engrossed by private and official affairs to leave much time for attention to religion, philanthropy, charity, benevolence, or politics.

But not so. He early adopted his father's religious views, and remains this day a consistent, sincere, and working member of that noble and progressive order of Christians embodied in the Methodist church, and, according to his ability, has always had as open and full a palm for the worthy poor as any Christian brother, while his benevolent disposition is also attested by his long connection with the great orders of Free Masons and Odd Fellows, in the lodges of each of which he has been over and over again called upon to preside.

Honorable DELANO T. SMITH.—This gentleman, though not an old resident of Iowa, is deserving of mention among her prominent citizens. He is a native of Litchfield, Herkimer County, New York, where he was born on the 6th day of November, 1830. He received his education at the Clinton Liberal Institute, under Dr. Thomas J. Sawyer, and in 1849 commenced the study of law with Hon J. C. Smith, now Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York. In 1852 he was admitted to the bar at Albany, after which he practiced his profession for a time at Dixon, Illinois.

In 1855 he removed to Minnesota, where he resided ten years, and became a prominent actor in the political affairs of that young state. He represented the Minneapolis district in both the House and Senate, and took an active part in many of the interests of the state, both local and general, and particularly in railroad matters, strenuously opposing the loaning of the credit of the state in 1857, which soon proved so disastrous to her interests, in all of which he acquired the reputation of an honest public servant, and a man of eminent financial abilities. So highly were his qualifications esteemed in this regard, that he was very strongly recommended for an auditor in the United States Treasury department, under the Hon. S. P. Chase, during Mr. Lincoln's first administration, and only failed of the appointment to the third auditorship because the place was occupied at the beginning of the rebellion by a gentleman from Ohio, an old democratic appointee, with strong democratic proclivities, yet claiming to be loyal to the government, and being an efficient officer, his removal at the opening of Mr. Lincoln's administration, was not deemed expedient. Mr. Smith had the promise, both of Mr. Lincoln and Secretary Chase, that he should be appointed to the situation as soon as a vacancy should occur, or could judiciously be made, of the early occurrence of which he was assured there was a strong probability. Meantime he was offered the chief clerkship in said bureau, which, although having no particular desire for, he accepted conditionally till the office for which he had been recommended should be vacated. In the midst of the uncertainties of war that time did not come as was anticipated.

During the Autumn of 1863, Mr. Smith was offered the appointment to the office of United States Direct Tax Commissioner for the State of Tennessee, to aid the department in the collection of taxes in the insurrectionary states, which he accepted and prosecuted with unfaltering energy and industry till the close of the war.

In the Winter of 1864 and '65, he went to Washington under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to assist in securing some additional legislation to more efficiently collect the direct taxes in the states in rebellion, and remained there several months. Through his indefatigable labors before the Committee on Ways and Means, and his thorough and practical knowledge of the situation, the law was so amended as to secure the desired object. It was, however, rendered virtually ineffective by the order of Andrew Johnson, in 1865, forbidding the sale of property for the non-payment of taxes in the insurrectionary states, in consequence of which, and a desire to engage in other business, Mr. Smith resigned the office of Tax Commissioner. On this event the New York Tribune thus comments:

"The Hon. Delano T. Smith, Tax Commissioner for Tennessee, has resigned his position, to the regret of the President and Secretary McCullough, by whom he was esteemed a very faithful officer."

Few among the many worthy men who held office under the lamented Lincoln, had better and stronger recommendations, and none proved themselves more deserving of confidence.

While residing in Washington, Mr. Smith was very active in many ways, directing his untiring energies into the channel of loyal subservience to the interests of the imperiled Union. He was a member of the Executive Committee of the National Union League, with Hon. John C. Underwood, Hon. John W. Forney, Governor Randall of Wisconsin, and others; president of a local league, and vice president of a literary association; all of which organizations were auxiliary to the Union cause and the Union soldiers' relief societies.

After Mr. Smith's resignation as Tax Commissioner, he returned to his home in Minneapolis, but soon after decided to remove to New York City, and engage in business there in company with his brother. The Minnesota State Atlas thus spoke of his departure:

"Hons. Delano T. and Mclville C. Smith.—Last week we alluded to the fact that the above named Minnesotians contemplated moving to New York City, and expressed our regret that the state was to lose two so worthy and prominent citizens. We are glad to learn that, although they are to establish a business office in New York, they will retain most of their interest in Minnesota, and may still be considered as largely identified with our state. The Messrs. Smith were early settlers in Minnesota; and from the first, as business men and citizens, ranked among the most enterprising and prominent. Always foremost in whatever concerned the moral and material welfare of the community, earnest and energetic, and honest even above suspicion, they have won the fullest confidence of our people. Though largely involved in real estate transactions at the time of the terrible financial crash of '57, they were among the few who went through that trying ordeal with credit unimpaired and integrity unimpeached. Politically both are effective workers, and on the right side; and, to carry out their present business plans, resigned important positions of trust and confidence. In expressing our regrets at their departure, and heartily wishing them that success they so eminently deserve, we but express the feelings of all who know them."

From 1865 to 1869, Mr. Smith resided in the City of New York, and among other business operations, was interested with his brother, Hon. M. C. Smith, in the enterprise known as the Arcade Railway, a plan for a railway under Broadway, in which his brother is still interested, and not without hope of its final and successful adoption. A bill for it has several times passed different branches of the Legislature of New York, and once was defeated only by the Governor's veto.

Although Mr. Smith was quite successful in business in New York, yet in 1869, in search of better health, he returned to the West and located in Marshalltown, Iowa, and has since been extensively engaged in real estate transactions, in farming and stock raising, and has had little or nothing to do with politics. As a stump speaker in the days of his Minnesota campaigns, Mr. Smith had few superiors, earnest, logical, fluent, forcible and well posted, he produced conviction, and carried his points with the people He is an earnest lover of his country, and takes a just pride in the growth and prosperity of the young and noble state of his adoption.

Honorable FRANK T. CAMPBELL.—At the age of twenty-two this gentleman came to Newton, Jasper County, from his native town, Ripley, Ohio, in 1858, when times were hard and openings few. He paid his way to the West by teaching school, having previously served an apprenticeship to the printers' trade. He found at Newton a newspaper—the Jasper County Express—barely alive, in which an half interest could be bought on credit; this he purchased, and, soon afterwards, his brother, now a prominent lawyer of Newton, bought the other half. The paper was re-christened as the Free Press, and by good management soon rose to prosperity. Leaving the Free Press mainly in charge of his brother, Frank Campbell, in November, 1860, bought the Montezuma (Poweshiek County) Republican, which he continued to edit until the Fall of 1862—meanwhile having been appointed postmaster at Montezuma,—when he sold the paper and resigned the office to enter the Union army, from which he returned to Newton in the Spring of 1865, and became sole editor and proprietor of the Free Press until 1867. In the Spring of 1874 he resumed his connection with the newspaper profession as editor and half owner of the Jasper County Head-Light, a new paper which rapidly gained public favor and a front rank among county papers. Besides his newspaper duties, Mr. Campbell carries on a large mercantile business in the boot and shoe, hat and cap line, which he established at Newton in 1867.

Mr. Campbell enlisted in Company C, 28th Iowa Volunteer Infantry, but was commissioned as captain of Company B, 40th Infantry, November 15, 1862, by desire of the company. He participated with his regiment in the Vicksburg campaign of 1863, in the campaign under General Steele against Little Rock, Arkansas, the same season, and in the Camden expedition under the same general the following year, commanding the regiment on the Little Rock campaign, and distinguishing himself at the sanguinary battle of Saline Cross Roads on the latter expedition in command of two companies on the skirmish line. He resigned his commission in February, 1865.

Mr. Campbell has twice been elected by Jasper County to the Iowa Senate on the Republican ticket—in 1869 and 1873,—and his term will expire January 1, 1878. Good address, energy and ability won him influence in that body, where he has a reputation no less for his valuable industry in committee than for his ability in debate. In the list of committees for the session of 1874 his name appears upon several prominent ones, and he was selected for chairman of the committee on railroads, and bore a conspicuous part in shaping the legislation known as the Iowa Railroad Tariff Law, the most important work of the session. He drew the original Senate Bill, which was enacted with a few modifications, and had charge of it through its several stages until its final passage. His public life, of which this is a very meager outline, has gained him an unsullied record as well as a state reputation.

Mr. Campbell was married in 1861 to Miss Dixon, an estimable lady of Newton; three sons are the fruits of this union. Both himself and wife are prominent members of the M. E. Church.

R. B. LOCKWOOD was born at Stockton-upon-Tees, England, in the year 1816. He practiced as a notary-public and conveyancer in the City of London for thirty years, and in 1857, having bought a farm in Dubuque County, he came with his family to the State of Iowa. Having obtained citizenship, he was elected a member of the Board of Supervisors, and in 1868-69 he represented Dubuque County in the State Legislature. He is now residing at Bennezette Township, Butler County, where he owns a farm of six hundred acres.

Honorable MILO McGLATHERY.—The subject of this sketch was born in Lawrence County, Pennsylvania, November 20, 1834. In his early boyhood he developed a disposition to adopt the profession of law. He read law in the office of Judge L. L. McGuffin, in New Castle, Pennsylvania, for two years, and studied in the Ohio State and Union Law School for one year, graduated at law school in 1856, and was admitted to the bar at the June term of that year.

In September, 1856, he came to Iowa and settled at West Union, Fayette County, forming a law partnership with S. B. Zeigler, Esq. In the Fall of 1857 he was elected prosecuting attorney for Fayette County. In the Fall of 1858 he was elected District Attorney for the Tenth Judicial District, then containing ten counties, and in 1862 was re-elected for four years. In 1866 he was nominated for District Judge, and elected without opposition. In 1870, upon petition of the attorneys of the district, the central committees of both political parties requested him again to become a candidate, recommending the voters of both parties to support him, and he received the unanimous vote of the district.

He has been a Republican in politics ever since the formation of that party; in fact, he was one of the originators.

On December 7th, 1859, he was married at West Union to Miss Anna M. McMasters. Their family consists of two children—one boy, Edwin, born October 9th, 1860, and one girl, Addie, born September 1st, 1862.

The record we have given of Judge McGlathery's success needs no comment from us to assure the reader of his popularity personally, his integrity, or ability.

Judge JAMES G. UPTON.—Judge Upton was born September 28, 1814, at Hillsboro, Hillsboro County, New Hampshire—was brought up on a farm, and at the age of sixteen years apprenticed himself as a millwright, which he mastered.

In 1853 he came to Iowa, and in 1855 moved to Cresco, Howard County. He was elected the first county judge of Howard County, and held that position by re-election when the office was abolished.

He is pleasantly situated on his homestead farm right adjacent to Cresco; takes the world easy and enjoys his very pleasant surroundings.

J. F. ENGLISH.—Mr. English was born at Lyme, Grafton County, New Hampshire, July 3d, 1818. When three-years of age his parents moved to Vermont; but when seventeen years of age he returned to his native town, and received an academic education there. Much of his early life was passed on a farm.

In September, 1851, he was married to Miss Sarah Hatch, of Norwich, Vermont, and started at once for the West, and settled at Janesville, Rock County, Wisconsin.

In 1855 he came to Mitchell County, Iowa, and commenced—in partnership with J. D. Chambers—the erection of the present West Mitchell Mills. The dam and saw mill was built the same year, and the large flouring mill completed and first flour ground, October 10, 1857. At this time Filmore, Blue Earth and Mower Counties Minnesota, were tributary here, and this mill did their grinding.

Mr. Chambers built the first frame house in West Mitchell. Aside from his large milling interests, he has been quite largely interested as a contractor in building of railroads, and has held and completed contracts during the construction of the Cedar Falls and Minnesota R.R., Central Railroad of Iowa, St. Paul and Sioux City R.R., and the Pembina Branch of the Northern Pacific R.R. (on Red River), at which he has been successful for himself and highly satisfactory to the railroad companies.

Mr. and Mrs. English have two children, a daughter and son, M. Frances and A. Samuel.

Captain J. J. WELSH was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, July 2d, 1827. When eight years of age, his father moved to Muskingum County, Ohio. His educational advantages were very limited, but by his own effort he acquired a good general business education. At the age of fifteen years he went among strangers and worked as a common farm hand. August 29th, 1848, he was united in marriage with Miss Isabelle Scott, in Union County, Ohio. In 1855 he moved to Iowa, and settled at West Union. Here he settled on a farm, which he conducted until 1857, when he was appointed Deputy Sheriff for Fayette County, and served until 1860. In this year he was elected to the position he had so satisfactorily conducted as deputy, and served as Sheriff in 1860-61, being the only Democrat ever elected to this responsible position in the county since its organization.

In 1862 he enlisted as a private in Company A, 38th Iowa Volunteers, and, on the organization, was elected captain without a dissenting vote or voice of a company of ninety-nine men. He served with his command during the campaign, siege and surrender of Vicksburg. After this he was by severe and contracted illness compelled to resign his command; returned home and invested in the livery business, and continued successfully in the same until the Spring of 1873, when he disposed of his interests in West Union and went to Topeka, Kansas; but returned to West Union the following Spring, rented the now popular West Union House, which he still conducts, and continues in connection therewith a first-class livery.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Welsh consists of five children: William E., Emily A., Margaret F., Clinton and Jennie Belle.

W. H. MAPLE was born in Peoria County, Illinois, in 1841. In 1856 he removed with his parents to Lucas County, Iowa, and settled on a farm near Chariton. He entered the army in 1862, serving about one year. Afterwards studied law, and was admitted to practice in 1866. In 1868 he was elected Superintendent of Schools for Lucas County, holding the office two years. In the Fall of 1872 he abandoned the practice of law, purchased the Chariton Patriot and assumed the editorial charge, since which time the paper has steadily increased in circulation and influence, and now ranks as one of the best weeklies in the state.

Mr. Maple has taken an active part in politics for a number of years, and in 1874 his name was prominently before the people in connection with the nomination as the Republican candidate for member of Congress.

S. H. MALLORY—President of the First National Bank at Chariton, a leading citizen and prominent railroad man of Southern Iowa—was born in Yates County, New York, in 1835. In 1850 he removed to Batavia, Illinois, and soon after to St. Charles, where he entered a store as a clerk for a short time. In the Spring of 1851 he was employed as axeman in an engineer corps on the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad, from Chicago to Elgin, and in August following engaged as rodman in the survey of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, west from Aurora. Soon after the completion of the road to Burlington, he was appointed its engineer, which position he held until 1857, when he resigned and removed to Fairfield, Iowa, and engaged in the real estate business for one year. He was then appointed division engineer of that part of the B. and M. Railroad between Rome and Ottumwa, and shortly afterwards road master of the line, when he removed to Burlington.

In 1861 he was engineer of the C. B. and Q. Road from Chicago to Aurora, having his headquarters in Chicago. In the Fall of 1865 he contracted to build the bridges from Ottumwa to Chariton, and afterwards all the bridges to Council Bluffs and on the Nebraska City branch.

Upon the road being completed to Council Bluffs, he was appointed Assistant Superintendent, and afterwards Chief Engineer of the road, which position he resigned in 1873, to engage in railroad contracts, in which he has been exceedingly successful.

Mr. Mallory removed to Chariton in 1867, and has been actively engaged in building up the town. He owns a large amount of land in Lucas County, and a great deal of property in Chariton, including the opera block, several business houses, a steam elevator, etc. He is engaged in banking in Chariton, and also at Creston, where he has large interests, as well as at other places along the line of the B. and M. Road and its branches.

Mr. Mallory has devoted a great deal of attention to agricultural matters, and especially to the raising of blooded stock, being the owner of a large and fine stock farm near Chariton.

He is the President of the Lucas County Agricultural Society, a Director of the State Agricultural Society, and President of the Iowa State Board of Centennial Managers.

He is genial and unostentatious in manner, generous in his feelings, enenterprising and public spirited, and in him Southern Iowa has a citizen that she could ill afford to lose.

JOHN CHANEY, Esq., was born in Monroe County, Indiana, July 4, 1832. He was brought up at the business of blacksmithing until the age of twenty-one. Received a common school education during his minority. At the age of seven years he removed with his parents to Illinois, where they remained six years, and returned to Indiana, residing in Vigo County until 1851, when they removed to Iowa, and settled in Lucas County. On reaching his majority, Mr. Chaney attended college at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, three years, and was afterwards engaged in teaching and reading law, and was admitted to the bar in 1862. Shortly after the breaking out of the Rebellion, he entered the Union army as Second Lieutenant in the 34th Iowa Volunteers, was promoted to First Lieutenant, and served till the close of the war.

In June, 1867, he settled in Osceola, and from then to the present time, has been engaged in the practice of his profession.

JOHN HOPLEY.—Among the enterprising and wide-awake business men of Iowa, Mr. John Hopley, of Cass County, deserves mention. He was born in the Village of Over, Cheshire, England, March 10, 1831. In April, 1849, he came to America, landing in June of that year, at Burlington, Iowa, via New Orleans. He worked by the month for a period of four years, when he returned to England and remained one year, and in the meantime married the eldest daughter of Mr. John Barnes, of Newton Bank, near Fordham, Cheshire. Returning again to America, he arrived in Lee County, Iowa, where he worked by the month till he earned money enough to buy a small farm.

Mrs. Hopley died in 1862. He then moved west to Cass County. In 1864 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Perry Disbrow, his present wife. Purchasing a stock farm near Atlantic, Mr. Hopley has since been engaged quite extensively and successfully in raising and shipping cattle and hogs. He is one of the energetic, self-reliant, and enterprising men of Cass County, and by dint of his own indefatigable exertions, has made a place of influence and standing for himself among his fellow citizens.

S. M. BALLARD, M.D., of Atlantic, was born in 1810, near Lynchburg, Virginia, and moved to Ohio with his mother when seven or eight years of age. At the age of twenty-four he graduated at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, and practiced his profession a number of years in Ohio.

In 1841 he removed to Iowa City, where he engaged in the practice of medicine, and continued till 1851, when he removed to his present locality and established himself in farming and stock raising. He has one of the finest stock farms in the State of Iowa, consisting of 3,000 acres, situated in Oakfield and Exira Townships, about ten miles northeast of Atlantic, a bird's-eye view of which will be found in this work.

ROBERT COLES, of Chariton, one of the oldest living settlers of Iowa, was born in the City of New York, August 20, 1804; moved to Long Island and remained there until the year 1815, when he moved to the State of Ohio with his father, and was bound out as an apprentice to the carpenter's trade in 1820. In the year 1824, removed to the State of Illinois and lived in Bond County, and taught the first free school in that part of the state. Married the daughter of Mr. John Hunt, a prominent citizen of Illinois, September 8, 1826. In the Spring of 1831 removed to McDonough County, Illinois; made a farm ten miles west of Macomb, and in February, 1832, removed to Macomb; went into the dry goods business and erected one of the first frame buildings built in that place. Afterward returned to the country, and improved a large farm ten miles west of Macomb. In 1834 removed to Hancock County and improved another farm, and was elected Justice of the Peace the same year. Removed to the Territory of Michigan, west of the Mississippi River, April 6, 1836. Was commissioned Justice of the Peace for Des Moines County the same year, by General Cass, Governor of Michigan Territory, and was Enrolling Clerk in the first Territorial Legislature of Wisconsin. Subsequently appointed a Justice of the Peace and Judge of Probate for Des Moines County, Territory of Wisconsin. Attended and participated in the first meeting held for the purpose of dividing the Territory of Wisconsin, and forming the Territory of Iowa. Joined in the preliminaries for the introduction of the State of Iowa into the Union. Was connected, as Justice of the Peace, in taking proof of pre-emptions, with General Dodge and Mr. Van Antwerp, in the Land Office at Burlington, and assisted at the first land sale in Iowa, held at Burlington in November, 1839. Improved a large farm three miles southwest of Burlington, and in the year 1843 removed to Henry County; elected Justice of the Peace in 1844. Improved another large farm, and in 1846 removed to the neighborhood of Eddyville, Wapello County. In 1847 elected Justice of the Peace. Fenced and improved another large farm, and in 1852 was elected as a Democrat to represent Wapello County in the State Legislature. Attended the Session of 1852–3, and was appointed Register of the Land Office at Chariton, Lucas County, by Franklin Pierce, April 10, 1853. Served four years, and disposed of nearly two million acres of the public lands. Was prominent as a Democrat during the Know Nothing troubles. Was nominated by the Democracy of the Counties of Lucas and Monroe, in 1862, for the State Senate, to fill a vacancy, and in 1863 was again placed in nomination for the same office by the Democracy of Lucas, Clark and Wayne Counties, and was defeated in both elections, Democracy being rather in a minority in the District. Since marriage has owned and improved eleven farms, built himself twelve houses, and fenced and put in cultivation over 600 acres of land. Has raised a family of five sons and two daughters, and for the last thirty years of his life has been a humble local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Honorable L. N. VAN SANDT, of Clarinda, Page County, was born in Brown County, Ohio, May 7, 1825. He received an academical education and studied medicine, graduating at the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati, in 1850. During eight years he was subsequently engaged in the practice of his profession in Troy, Ohio. He came to Iowa in 1858, and settled in Clarinda, where he has continued to practice medicine ever since.

Dr. Van Sandt has by no means confined himself to practice as a physician, but has taken an active part in agricultural matters, and to some extent in politics.

In 1863 he was elected to represent his county in the General Assembly, and re-elected to fill an unexpired term in 1866. The securing and building of the Nodaway Valley Railroad via Clarinda was largely due to the efforts of Dr. Van Sandt. He is at present engaged in the drug business, farming, horticulture and the practice of medicine.

W. E. McDUFFEE, Auditor of Adams County, was born in Rush County, Indiana, January 30, 1831. In 1853 he removed to Jasper County, Illinois, where he remained one year, when he returned to Indiana, and spent about the same length of time, removing thence to Illinois, where he remained two years. Coming to Iowa in 1857, he settled in Mongomery County, and removed to Adams County the following year. He went to Kansas in 1859, returning in the Spring of 1861 to Adams County. The same year he enlisted in the Fourth Iowa Infantry, serving about six months, when he was discharged for disability; since which time he has continued to reside in Adams County. In 1866 he was elected County Recorder, which office he held for two years; was elected County Treasurer in 1867, holding that office four years; and in 1873 was elected to his present position.

Mr. McDuffee is an example of fidelity in public office, and is noted for his information on all county matters, and the readiness and willingness with which he gives his assistance and information to all who seek them.

Doctor JAMES WIDNER, Clerk of Courts of Adams County, was born in Huron County, Ohio, in 1825. He was brought up in Hardin County, in that state, on a farm, till he was about twenty-one years of age, when, in 1846, he came to Iowa with his parents and settled in Van Buren County, and remained there until 1850, when he crossed the Plains to California, returning in the Spring of 1855.

Dr. Widner settled in Adams County in the Spring of 1857, in Quincy, then the county seat. He studied menicine and graduated at Keokuk Medical College in 1865, having been previously engaged in practice. He continued to practice medicine until 1869, when he was elected to the office of Clerk of the Courts, which position he has continued to hold to the present time, the duties of which he has discharged in a faithful and efficient manner.

He served three years in the Fourth Iowa Infantry, during which time he was wounded twice. Enlisted in 1862, and returned at the close of the war.

ARIAL K. EATON.—The name Eaton is derived from the river E, in England. Three brothers of this name were landed in America by the Mayflower. The direct line of relationship can be traced back to when Thomas settled in Haverhill, Mass., in 1650, and transmitted his name through Jonathan, James, Nathaniel and Elijah in the same place to 1800, when Elijah, who had married Elizabeth Vose, moved to Sultan, New Hampshire, where his youngest son, Carlos S., now resides. They had a family of ten children, of whom Arial K. was the eighth, born December 1st, 1813. Both his grandfathers were revolutionary pioneers — Nathaniel followed the British from Concord and Lexington back to Boston, and led a company at Bunker Hill, where James Vose was found fighting for his country with a pitchfork. The subject of this sketch had limited means of education, but acquired sufficient learning that in his nineteenth year he commenced teaching a school, at which he continued until he started west in 1836. For four years he taught school in Fayette County, Ohio, and studied law. In 1839 he was married to Sarah A. McArthur, who lived but about one year, when in 1840 he moved to Randolph County, Indiana, where he was admitted to the bar, and was twice elected County Auditor. In 1844 he came to Iowa City, but returned to Indiana, where he married his present wife, Sarah Jarnagan; returned to Iowa in 1845, and settled at Delhi in 1846; built the second cabin of the town; held various county offices; was twice elected Representative, and practiced his profession.

In 1855 was appointed Receiver in the United States Land Office, and moved to Decorah. In 1856 the office was transferred to Osage, and since which time he has continued to reside there. He continued in office till 1858.

Mr. and Mrs. Eaton have two sons, Willard L., practicing law, and Sumner F., attending school, both at Osage.

GILBERT H. RICE.—In speaking of Mr. Rice we can say that he is one of the representative mill men of upper Iowa, not only in theory but in practice. His constant study from his earliest experience has been of improvements in flour and flouring mills and interests, while his constant associations in the practical and mechanical department have developed many improvements beneficial to his interests and that of his customers

Mr. Rice was born March 13, 1838, in the Town of Harmony, Chautauqua County, New York, and received the advantages of a common school education. In 1852 his father died, and in 1855, with his two brothers, Dennis and Franklin, came to Iowa and settled in Mitchell County, at what is now Riceville—named in honor of the three brothers—and in 1857 laid out the town, where they built the second grist mill in the county, and also built a saw mill.

After a residence at Riceville of twelve years, the brothers sold out their interests and moved to Osage, where Gilbert continues to reside. They built a mill on the Big Cedar, two miles south from Osage, which has six run of stone, and bears the reputation of being one of the best conducted mills in the Northwest, and is under the direct personal supervision of the subject of this sketch, and his determination is to take the lead.

September 17, 1867, he was married to Miss Martha E. Peirce, of Riceville, which marriage has been blessed by the birth of two children, a daughand son, Edith E. and Leonard H.

Mr. Rice's success in life shows how by industry, energy and perseverance, a life may be pleasurably and profitably spent.

[The following are the officers of the Hawkeye Insurance Company, Des Moines.]

E. J. INGERSOLL, President, was born March 18th, 1829, in Pulaski, Oswego County, New York. After passing through the various preliminary educational stages to thoroughly qualify him to enter "The State and National Law School," located at Balston Spa, New York, he entered that school and graduated in the Spring of 1852, "with the degree of Bachelor of Laws," and was thereupon admitted to the bar. In September, 1852, he entered upon the practice of the law in Adams, New York, where he continued in a successful practice until in September, 1858. In that year he moved to Iowa and settled in Des Moines, where he resumed the practice of his profession.

On the 10th of January, 1861, he was married to Miss Elizabeth W. Whitcomb, of Adams, New York.

On the 13th of March, 1865, the Hawkeye Insurance Company was organized by E. J. Ingersoll, James Callanan, F. W. Palmer, B. F. Allen and J. B. Tiffen; Mr. Ingersoll being elected President; Mr. Callanan, Vice-President; J. B. Tiffen, Secretary, and B. F. Allen, Treasurer.

In December, 1870, the State Savings Bank was organized, and Mr. Ingersoll was elected President, Mr. Callanan, Vice-President, and Louis Stutz, Cashier, which offices they continue to still hold.

On July 5th, 1872, Mr. Adam Howell was elected a Director and Secretary of the "Hawkeye Insurance Company."

ADAM HOWELL, Secretary, was born in Port Hope, Canada, April 20th, 1840. He removed to Des Moines in 1868, and engaged in the business of underwriting.

He has proved an efficient and trustworthy officer; active, industrious and reliable, and in every way qualified for the honorable and responsible trust reposed in him by the Company with which he is associated. His abilities and qualifications, both as to his personal merits and as a reliable underwriter, stand undisputed.

JAMES CALLANAN, Treasurer, was born in Albany County, New York, October 20th, 1820. After a thorough preliminary education he was admitted to the practice of law in 1847, and soon thereafter commenced the practice of his profession in Albany, New York, where he acquired a large and lucrative business.

In 1857 he formed a co-partnership with S. R. Ingham, and started the banking house of Callanan & Ingham, at Des Moines, Iowa; in which house Mr. Callanan invested largely, Mr. Ingham being the resident manager. In 1861 this firm was dissolved, and the large investments made by Mr. Callanan, and the large amount of real estate coming into his hands by reason of the transactions of such house, rendered it necessary for him to remove to Des Moines in 1863, to personally supervise his monied interests.

Since residing in Des Moines he has always taken an active and lively interest in its welfare, and has been identified with its leading business enterprise, has become one of the largest land owners and wealthiest men of the State. He is emphatically a friend to the poor and needy, an attentive business man, a fine scholar and effective speaker. At this time is President of the Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, President of the National State Bank of Des Moines, Vice-President and Treasurer of the Hawkeye Insurance Company, and Vice-President of the State Savings Bank. Mr. Callanan has remained the Vice-President of this company since its organization, and in January, 1875, was also elected Treasurer in place of Mr. B. F. Allen.

When Mr. Ingersoll accepted of the Presidency of the "Hawkeye Insurance Company," he had not the remotest intention of ever abandoning the practice of the legal profession, having at that time an extensive and lucrative practice. But the rapid success and extension of the business of the company far exceeded the most sanguine expectation of its founders, hence in the Fall of 1870, such increase of business, with an extended law practice, compelled him to abandon one branch. The force of circumstances, with money investments, and the brilliant prospects of this growing institution, inclined him to decide in favor of continuing with the company. He has continued the President, and the management of its affairs has been under his immediate supervision.

Mr. Ingersoll is a man possessing great force of character and eminent business qualifications, energetic, persistent, faithful and reliable in all business undertakings, and as a manager and financier, has but few superiors. He has ever taken an active interest in every enterprise calculated to promote the general prosperity of the city and state. He is a good citizen and neighbor, and a faithful friend.

No company in the State of Iowa, and, we dare say, in the United States, has been more successful than the Hawkeye Insurance Company. It possesses a thorough organization, and a competent and efficient set of employes and agents. Its arrangements at the home office are complete, and its various departments thoroughly systematized.

In 1869, the company purchased the property on the corner of Court Avenue and Fourth Street, in Des Moines, with a frontage of 44 feet on the former and 100 feet on the latter street, on which their present building stands, which occupies only 40 feet fronting on Fourth Street, the remaining 44x60 feet being vacant, and on which the company expects to erect another office building as their business extends, which, from the increase and rapid extension of its business, will compel the enlargement of their quarters in one or two years. At present the company occupies the entire first floor, which contains two large fire-proof vaults, and yet they are becoming crowded for room.

The Hawkeye Insurance Company has passed the period when people discuss its financial ability. Its stability and soundness has become established and conceded by all, and has become one of the admitted, established and popular institutions of the state, and in which every citizen of Iowa feels a just interest and pride.

A. H. MOORE, M.D.—Judge Moore was the sixth man in the early settlement of Mitchell County. Five had preceded him and were settlers of the county when he arrived at Osage, in 1853. He was prominent in the early settlement of the City of Osage, and by him the first land on which the city is located was bought from the Government and platted. He named it "Cora." He has given largely to the building of churches and the building up of church societies, and contributed as largely to the growth, prosperity and enterprise of Osage, according to his means, as any man; no one has done more than he, and the high esteem in which he is held by his large circle of acquaintances is as well merited as it is freely given.

Doctor Moore was born at Hickory, Washington County, Pennsylvania, December 8, 1818. His father was a farmer, and on a farm he spent his early life. He attended Jefferson College, in Pennsylvania, and in 1846 graduated and received a diploma at the Indiana Medical College, and at once entered upon the practice of his profession at Mottville, St. Joseph County, Michigan, where he continued to reside until 1853, when he moved to Osage, where he at present resides. He has twice been elected county judge of Mitchell County, and held various minor offices.

April 22, 1846, he was married to Miss Sarah E. Nixon, of Mottville, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have had five children, three of whom, Cora L., Francis M. and Alice, are living. Francis is studying medicine at the Iowa State University.

Honorable D. C. CLOUD.—Prominent in the citizenship of Muscatine and the state, is the Hon. D. C. Cloud, Iowa's first Attorney General, a political writer of note, and nestor of the Muscatine County bar. Mr. Cloud was born in Champaign County, Ohio, in 1817. His friends relate of his often contrasting the educational wants of his youth with the superior facilities enjoyed by the school children of Muscatine City and County. He attended school but three months in the year during his childhood, and after his twelfth year saw but six months in a school room. At an early age he began his apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade, which he mastered, and in 1839 moved with his bride to Iowa, selecting Muscatine, then scarcely more than a boat landing, called Bloomington, for his adopted home. In one of these early years in Iowa, he was engaged in work upon a dwelling for Judge S. C. Hastings (now of California), and took his pay in law books. Without tutor or instruction of any kind, he pursued his law studies during his evening hours at home, and was admitted to the bar in 1846. In 1849 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney for his county, and in 1853, when the office was created, he was elected Attorney General of the state. He was re-elected in 1854 for the regular term of two years, and it may be specially noted that he was the only candidate on the Democratic ticket, having an opponent on the opposite ticket who was elected—Governor Grimes, the Whig candidate, coming in with a majority of nearly 1,900, and Mr. Cloud by a majority of 2,100.

On retiring from office in 1856, Mr. Cloud was chosen to the Legislature, where he served, in the House, as chairman of both the committee of Ways and Means, and of Railroads. In his later retirement he has become known to the country as the author of "MONOPOLIES AND THE PEOPLE," a large duodecimo volume, which has received general and flattering attention from the eastern and western press for its full, learned and vigorous treatment of the grave questions embraced under this title.

We have spoken of Mr. Cloud's authorship and political life, but the courts of the state are the scenes of his best labors, and where he will be best remembered. Here he has won his greatest triumph, and if he has one title better deserved than another, it is that of "the busiest lawyer in Iowa."

In politics Mr. Cloud is a Republican, but he supported Mr. Greeley's candidacy in 1872, and he continues to act with the liberal Republican party.

Our subject may be regarded as one of the distinguished self-made men of the country—a notable illustration of what resolution and industry, unaided by the arts or graces of the school, may achieve in the training of the intellect for the severest and highest duties of life.

C. H. LANE, of Red Oak, was born in Rockingham County, New Hampshire, in 1834. When about twenty years of age he went to Boston, where he was engaged in a wholesale grocery house until 1857, when he came to Iowa, and settled in Red Oak in the Fall of that year—there not being as yet a single house on the town site. Two years later he opened the first store in the place, hauling his goods from Glenwood landing, a distance of forty miles, with teams.

With the exception of one year spent in the mountains of Colorado, Mr. Lane has been engaged in commercial business in Red Oak to the present time.

In December, 1873, the First National Bank of Red Oak was organized, and Mr. Lane was chosen president, which position he now holds.

WILLIAM W. BLACKMAN, M.D.—The subject of this sketch was born at Bridgewater, New York, January 7, 1819; had common school advantages, and also received a partial academic course. He taught school Winters, and worked on a farm Summers after the age of seventeen, and gave his wages to his father until he arrived at the age of twenty-one, when he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. King, of Unadilla Forks, Otsego County New York, and graduated at the Medical Department of the New York State University, in 1848, and April 24, of the same year, was married to Miss Lucy A. Brewer, of Unadilla Forks. He moved to Rock County, Wisconsin, and shortly after across into Dane County, at Stoughton, and continued a large practice in Rock and Dane Counties for nineteen years. He was three times elected a member of the Wisconsin Legislature and participated in the sessions of 1859, 1860 and 1864, and took part in the acceptance of the Wisconsin Revised Statutes.

In the year of 1866, he moved to West Mitchell and entered into the drug and general grocery trade, which he largely carries on. He was elected representative to the Iowa Legislature for the years 1872–3, and took part in the revision of the Iowa Statutes.

He has been exceedingly successful in his practice and in his business, and has a large circle of friends and acquaintances, among which he is justly popular, and has become possessed of such a competence as to enjoy pleasure and travel, which with his family, consisting of his wife and one daughter, he wisely and prudently indulgesin.

ALFRED HEBARD was born in Windom, Connecticut, in 1811, and came to Iowa about thirty-five years ago, and settled near Burlington, where he was engaged in farming. He was for several years a member of the territorial legislature from Des Moines County, was engaged in the survey of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, and was one of the founders of the Town of Red Oak, the county seat of Montgomery County, where he now resides.

Honorable L. W. TUBBS, a prominent citizen and early settler of Mills County, is a native of New York, having been born in Binghamton in that state, in 1826.

His parents removed at an early day to Western Reserve, Ohio, where he resided until 1849, when, upon the breaking out of the gold excitement in California, he crossed the Plains to that state.

There he remained until 1855, took an active part in the organization and admission of California into the Union, and was elected a member of the first State Legislature from Bute County. Returning from that state he settled in Mills County, Iowa. He was elected County Judge in 1859, and held that position two years.

During the civil war he was a staunch supporter of the Government, and held commissions from the Governor. Since then he has devoted his time to farming and stock raising. He was one of the originators of the Mills County Agricultural Society, in which he takes an active interest.

Judge Tubbs has been reporter to the Patent Office at Washington, for Mills County, for over sixteen years.

He is the owner of some five thousand acres of land in the county; his home farm at Emerson, where he resides, containing thirty-five hundred acres.

JOSEPH HOBSON.—Was born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania October 17th, 1823. Was educated by private tutors. His father dying in 1834, he was indentured as an apprentice to a cabinet maker; but becoming dissatisfied, his indentures were canceled, and he subsequently learned the trade of a carpenter. In the Spring of 1841, he commenced life for himself.

April 15, 1847, was married to Elizabeth Baker, of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, with whom he still lives. In April, 1855, he removed to Iowa, and located upon a farm in Smithfield Township, Fayette County.

In the Spring of 1858, was admitted to practice as an Attorney at Law, by the District Court of Fayette County, and commenced practice at Fayette, in said county.

In the Fall of 1858, was by the Republicans of the county elected Clerk of the District Court, which position he held by successive re-elections, for ten years.

Upon his election as clerk, he removed with his family to West Union, where he still resides.

In the Fall of 1869, he was elected to the office of Representative in the Thirteenth General Assembly of the State, and served as a member during the session of that body.

In April, 1870, he was appointed U. S. Assessor for the Third Collection and Congressional District of the State of Iowa, which position he held until June 2d, 1873, when the office was abolished, since which time he has applied himself to the practice of his profession.

In 1872, he was elected President of the "Fayette County National Bank," which position he still holds.

Originally a Whig, a Republican from the organization of the party, and an active and influential worker therein, decided in his convictions, and outspoken in his sentiments, such has been his course that his integrity has never been questioned, and he numbers among his warmest personal friends, many of his bitterest political opponents.

PEOPLE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.

A copy of the above work, published by the People's Encyclopedia Company (our neighbors in the Lakeside Building) has been in our office for several months past. It has been of such value to us, that we desire thus publicly to bear testimony to its excellence Hours of valuable time have been saved, as it is complete and from its condensed style a minute's time suffices to obtain all necessary information on any subject, or of any term or proper name.

THE PEOPLE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA is a compilation by L. Colange, LL.D., Editor of Zell's Encyclopedia, and contains in one volume the essence of that voluminous and costly work.

We are informed by the Publishers that the complete work will be sold at the low price of $6.75, which places it within reach of all, and which should place it in the possession of every family.

The following is from their prospectus:

"THE PEOPLE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA, combined and abbreviated in one volume of over 1,000 pages and 700 illustrations, pronouncing every term and proper name.

"For information and general usefulness no book compares with an Encyclopedia, but until the publication of this work, they have been issued in so many volumes, and sold at such enormous prices, that but few have been able to purchase. They also dwell at such length, that too much time is required for ordinary use. The object of this volume has been to condense all that is found in other works of this kind, and tell, in as few words as possible, just what people want to know, omitting details, dry figures and statistics, in most of which few people take interest.

"The following subjects are embraced: Agriculture, Anatomy, Architecture, Archæology, Astronomy, Banking, Biblical Science, Biography, Botany, Chemistry, Commerce, Conchology, Cosmography. Ethics, The Fine Arts, Geography, Geology, Grammar, Heraldry, History, Hydraulics, Hygiene, Jurisprudence, Legislation, Literature, Logic, Mathematics, Mechanical Arts, Metallurgy, Metaphysics, Mineralogy, Military Science, Mining Medicine, Mythology, Natural History and Philosophy, Navigation and Nautical Affairs, Physics, Physiology, Political Economy, Rhetoric, Theology, Zoology, Etc., Etc."

STATE OF IOWA.

GEOGRAPHICAL SITUATION.

The State of Iowa has an outline figure nearly approaching that of a rectangular parallelogram, the northern and southern boundaries being nearly due east and west lines, and its eastern and western boundaries determined by southernly flowing rivers —the Mississippi on the east, and the Missouri, together with its tributary, the Big Sioux, on the west. The northern boundary is upon the parallel of forty-three degrees thirty minutes, and the southern is approximately upon that of forty degrees and thirty-six minutes. The distance from the northern to the southern boundary, excluding the small prominent angle at the southeast corner, is a little more than two hundred miles. Owing to the irregularity of the river boundaries, however, the number of square miles does not reach that of the multiple of these numbers; but according to a report of the Secretary of the Treasury to the United States Senate, March 12, 1863, the State of Iowa contains 35,228,200 acres, or 55,044 square miles. When it is understood that all this vast extent of surface, except that which is occupied by our rivers, lakes and peat beds of the northern counties, is susceptible of the highest cultivation, some idea may be formed of the immense agricultural resources of the state. Iowa is nearly as large as England, and twice as large as Scotland; but when we consider the relative area of surface which may be made to yield to the wants of man, those countries of the Old World will bear no comparison with Iowa.

TOPOGRAPHY.

No complete topographical survey of the State of Iowa has yet been made. Therefore all the knowledge we yet have upon the subject has been obtained from incidental observations of geological corps, from barometrical observations by authority of the General Government, and levellings done by railroad engineer corps within the state.

Taking into view the facts that the highest point in the state is but a little more than twelve hundred feet above the lowest point, that these two points are nearly three hundred miles apart, and that the whole state is traversed by gently flowing rivers, it will be seen that in reality the State of Iowa rests wholly within, and comprises a part of, a vast plain, with no mountain or hill ranges within its borders.

A clearer idea of the great uniformity of the surface of the state may be obtained from a statement of the general slopes in feet per mile, from point to point, in straight lines across it.

From the N. E. corner to the S. E. corner of the state.. ..1 foot 1 inch per mile.
From the N. E. corner to Spirit Lake .. . . . . .5 feet 5 inches per mile.
From the N. W. corner to Spirit Lake.....5 feet 0 inches per mile.
From the N. W. corner to the S. W. corner of the state...2 feet 0 inches per mile.
From the S. W. corner to the highest ridge between the two great rivers (in Ringgold County).....4 feet 1 inch per mile.
From the dividing ridge in the S. E. corner of the state...5 feet 7 inches per mile.
From the highest point in the state (near Spirit Lake) to the lowest point in the state (at the mouth of Des Moines River).. . . . . 4 feet 0 inches per mile.

It will be seen, therefore, that there is a good degree of propriety in regarding the whole state as a part of a great plain, the lowest point of which within its borders, the southeastern corner of the state, is only four hundred and forty-four feet above the level of the sea. The average height of the whole state above the level of the sea is not far from eight hundred feet, although it is more than a thousand miles inland from the nearest sea coast. These remarks are, of course, to be understood as applying to the surface of the state as a whole. When we come to consider its surface features in detail, we find a great diversity of surface by the formation of valleys out of the general level, which have been evolved by the action of streams during the unnumbered years of the terrace epoch.

It is in the northeastern part of the state that the river valleys are deepest; consequently the country there has the greatest diversity of surface, and its physical features are most strongly marked.

DRAINAGE SYSTEM.

The Mississippi and Missouri Rivers form the eastern and western boundaries of the state, and receive the eastern and western drainage of it.

The eastern drainage system comprises not far from two-thirds of the entire surface of the state. The great watershed which divides these two systems is formed by the highest land between those rivers along the whole length of a line running southward from a point on the northern boundary line of the state near Spirit Lake, in Dickenson County, to a nearly central point in the northern part of Adair County.

From the last named point, this highest ridge of land, between the two great rivers, continues southward without change of character through Ringgold County into the State of Missouri; but southward from that point in Adair County it is no longer the great watershed. From that point another and lower ridge bears off more nearly southeastward, through the counties of Madison, Clarke, Lucas and Appanoose, and becomes itself the great watershed.

RIVERS.

All streams that rise in Iowa rise upon the incoherent surface deposits, occupying at first only slight depressions in the surface, and scarcely perceptible. These, successively coalesce to form the streams.

The drift and bluff deposits are both so thick in Iowa that its streams not only rise upon their surface, but they also reach considerable depth into these deposits alone, in some cases to a depth of nearly two hundred feet from the general prairie level.

The majority of streams that constitute the western system of Iowa drainage run, either along the whole or a part of their course, upon that peculiar deposit known as bluff deposit. Their banks are often, even of the small streams, from five to ten feet in height, quite perpendicular, so that they make the streams almost everywhere unfordable and a great impediment to travel across the open country where there are no bridges.

The material of this deposit is of a slightly yellowish ash color, except where darkened by decaying vegetation, very fine and siliceous, but not sandy, not very cohesive, and not at all plastic. It forms excellent soil, and does not bake or crack in drying, except limy concretions, which are generally distributed throughout the mass, in shape and size resembling pebbles; not a stone or pebble can be found in the whole deposit. It was called "siliceous marl" by Dr. Owen, in his geological report to the General Government, and its origin referred to an accumulation of sediment in an ancient lake, which was afterward drained, when its sediment became dry land. Professor Swallow gives it the name of "bluff," which is here adopted; the term Lacustral would have been better. The peculiar properties of this deposit are that it will stand securely with a precipitous front two hundred feet high, and yet is easily excavated with a spade. Wells dug in it require only to be walled to a point just above the water line. Yet, compact as it is, it is very porous, so that water which falls on its surface does not remain, but percolates through it; neither does it accumulate within its mass, as it does upon the surface of and within the drift and the stratified formations.

The bluff deposit is known to occupy a region through which the Missouri runs almost centrally, and measures, as far as is known, more than two hundred miles in length and nearly one hundred miles in width. The thickest part yet known in Iowa is in Fremont County, where it reaches two hundred feet. The boundaries of this deposit in Iowa are nearly as follows: Commencing at the southeast corner of Fremont County, follow up the watershed between the East Nishnabotany and the West Tarkio Rivers to the southern boundary of Cass County, thence to the center of Audubon County, thence to Tip Top station, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, thence by a broad curve westward to the northwest corner of Plymouth County.

This deposit is composed of fine sedimentary particles, similar to that which the Missouri River now deposits from its waters, and is the same which that river did deposit in a broad depression in the surface of the drift that formed a lake-like expansion of that river in the earliest period of the history of its valley. That lake, as shown by its deposit, which now remains, was about one hundred miles wide and more than twice as long. The water of the river was muddy then as now, and the broad lake became filled with the sediment which the river brought down, before its valley had enough in the lower portion of its course to drain it. After the lake became filled with the sediment, the valley below became deepened, by the constant erosive action of the waters, to a depth more than sufficient to have drained the lake of its first waters; but the only effect then was to cause it to cut its valley out of the deposits its own muddy waters had formed. Thus along the valley of that river, so far as it forms the western boundary of Iowa, the bluffs which border it are composed of that sediment known as bluff deposit, forming a distinct border along the broad, level flood-plain, the width of which varies from five to fifteen miles, while the original sedimentary deposit stretches far inland.

All the rivers of the western system of drainage, except the Missouri itself, are quite incomplete as rivers, in consequence of their being really only branches of other larger tributaries of that great river; or, if they empty into the Missouri direct, they have yet all the usual characters of upper branches of Iowa rivers, from their sources to their mouths.

Charlton and Grand Rivers both rise and run for the first twenty-five miles of their courses upon the drift deposit alone. The first strata that are exposed by the deepening valleys of both these streams belong to the upper coal-measures, and they both continue upon the same formation until they make their exit from the state (the former in Appanoose County, the latter in Ringgold County), near the boundary of which they have passed nearly or quite through the whole of that formation to the middle coal-measures. Their valleys gradually deepen from their upper portions downward, so that within fifteen or twenty miles they have reached a depth of near a hundred and fifty feet below the general level of the adjacent high land. When the rivers have cut their valley down through the series of limestone strata, they reach those of a clayey composition. Upon these they widen their valley and make broad flood-plains (commonly termed "bottoms"), the soil of which is stiff and clayey, except where modified by sandy washings.

A considerable breadth of woodland occupies the bottoms and valley sides along a great part of their length; but their upper branches and tributaries are mostly prairie streams.

Platte River.—This river belongs mainly to Missouri. Its upper branches pass through Ringgold County, and with the west fork of Grand River drain a large region of country.

Here the drift deposit reaches its maximum thickness on an east and west line across the state, and the valleys are eroded in some instances to a depth of two hundred feet, apparently, through this deposit alone.

The term "drift deposit" applies to the soil and sub-soil of the greater part of the state, and in it alone many of our wells are dug and our forests take root. It rests upon the stratified rocks. It is composed of clay, sand, gravel and boulders, promiscuously intermixed, without stratification, varying in character in different parts of the state.

The proportion of lime in the drift of Iowa is so great that the water of all our wells and springs is too "hard" for washing purposes; and the same substance is so prevalent in the drift clays that they are always found to have sufficient flux when used for the manufacture of brick.

One, Three and Two Rivers is represented in Taylor County, the valleys of which have the same general character as those just described. The country around and between the east and west forks of this stream is almost entirely prairie.

Nodaway River.—This stream is represented by east, middle and west branches. The two former rise in Adair County, the latter in Cass County. These rivers and valleys are fine examples of the small rivers and valleys of Southern Iowa. They have the general character of drift valleys, and with beautiful undulating and sloping sides. The Nodaways drain one of the finest agricultural regions in the state, the soil of which is tillable almost to their very banks. The banks and the adjacent narrow flood-plains are almost everywhere composed of a rich, deep, dark loam.

Nishnabotany River.—This river is represented by east and west branches, the former having its source in Anderson County, the latter in Shelby County. Both these branches, from their source to their confluence—and also the main stream, from thence to the point where it enters the great flood-plain of the Missouri—run through a region the surface of which is occupied by the bluff deposit. The West Nishnabotany is probably without any valuable mill-sites. In the western part of Cass County the East Nishnabotany loses its identity by becoming abruptly divided up into five or six different creeks. A few good mill-sites occur here on this stream. None, however, that are thought reliable exist on either of these rivers, or on the main stream below the confluence, except perhaps one or two in Montgomery County. The valleys of the two branches, and the intervening upland, possess remarkable fertility.

Boyer River.—South it enters the flood-plain of the Missouri, the Boyer runs almost, if not quite, its entire course through the region occupied by the bluff deposit, and has cut its valley entirely through it along most of its passage. The only rocks exposed are the upper coal-measures, near Reed's mill, in Harrison County. The exposures are slight, and are the most northerly now known in Iowa. The valley of this river has usually gently sloping sides, and an indistinctly defined flood-plain. Along the lower half of its course the adjacent upland presents a surface of the billowy character, peculiar to the bluff deposit. The source of this river is in Sac County.

Soldier River.—The east and middle branches of this stream have their source in Crawford County, and the west branch in Ida County. The whole course of this river is through the bluff deposit. It has no exposure of strata along its course.

Little Sioux River.—Under this head are included both the main and west branches of that stream, together with the Maple, which is one of its branches. The west branch and the Maple are so similar to the Soldier River that they need no separate description. The main stream has its boundary near the northern boundary of the state, and runs most of its course upon drift deposit alone, entering the region of the bluff deposit in the southern part of Cherokee County. The two principal upper branches, near their source in Dickinson and Osceola Counties, are small prairie creeks, with indistinct valleys. On entering Clay County, the valley deepens, and at their confluence has a depth of one hundred feet, which still further increases until along the boundary line between Clay and Buena Vista Counties, it reaches a depth of two hundred feet. Just as the valley enters Cherokee County, it turns to the southward and becomes much widened, with its sides gently sloping to the uplands. When the valley enters the region of the bluff deposit it assumes the billowy appearance. No exposures of strata of any kind have been found in the valley of the Little Sioux or any of its branches.

Floyd River.—This river rises upon the drift in O'Brien County, and flowing southward enters the region of the bluff deposit a little north of the center of Plymouth County. Almost from its source to its mouth it is a prairie stream, with gently sloping valley sides, which blend gradually with the uplands. A single slight exposure of sandstone of cretaceous age occurs in the valley near Sioux City, and which is the only known exposure of rock of any kind along its whole length. Near this exposure is a mill-site, but farther up the stream it is not valuable for such purposes.

Rock River.—This stream passes through Lyon and Sioux Counties. It was evidently so named from the fact that considerable exposures of the red Sioux quartzite occur along the main branches of the stream in Minnesota, a few miles north of our state boundary. Within this state the main stream and its branches are drift streams, and strata are exposed. The beds and banks of the streams are usually sandy and gravelly, with occasional boulders intermixed.

Big Sioux River.—The valley of this river, from the northwest corner of the state to its mouth, possesses much the same character as all the streams of the surface deposits. At Sioux Falls, a few miles above the northwest corner of the state, the stream meets with remarkable obstructions from the presence of Sioux quartzite, which outcrops directly across the stream, and causes a fall of about sixty feet within a distance of half a mile, producing a series of cascades. For the first twenty-five miles above its mouth, the valley is very broad, with a broad, flat flood-plain, with gentle slopes occasionally showing indistinctly defined terraces. These terraces and valley bottoms constitute one of the finest agricultural land of the region. On the Iowa side of the valley the upland presents abrupt bluffs, steep as the materials of which they are composed will stand, and from one hundred to nearly two hundred feet high above the stream. At rare intervals, about fifteen miles from its mouth, the cretaceous strata are found exposed in the face of the bluffs of the Iowa side. No other strata are exposed along that part of the valley which borders our state, with the single exception of Sioux quartzite at its extreme north-western corner. Some good mill-sites may be secured along that portion of this river which borders Lyon County, but below this the fall will probably be found insufficient and the location for dams insecure.

Missouri River.—This is one of the muddiest streams on the globe, and its waters are known to be very turbid far toward its source. The chief peculiarity of this river is its broad flood-plains, and its adjacent bluff deposits. Much the greater part of the flood-plain of this river is upon the Iowa side, and continuous from the south boundary line of the state to Sioux City, a distance of more than one hundred miles in length, varying from three to five miles in width. This alluvial plain is estimated to contain more than half a million acres of land within the state, upward of four hundred thousand of which are now tillable.

The rivers of the eastern system of drainage have quite a different character from those of the western system. They are larger, longer, and have their valleys modified to a much greater extent by the underlying strata. For the latter reason, water-power is much more abundant upon them than upon the streams of the western system.

Des Moines River.—This river has its source in Minnesota, but it enters Iowa before it has attained any size, and flows almost centrally through it from northwest to southeast, emptying into the Mississippi at the extreme southeastern corner of the state. It drains a greater area than any river within the state. The upper portion of it is divided into two branches known as the east and west forks. These unite in Humboldt County. The valleys of these branches above their confluence are drift-valleys, except a few small exposures of subcarboniferous limestone about five miles above their confluence. These exposures produce several fine mill-sites. The valleys vary from a few hundred yards to half a mile in width, and are the finest agricultural lands. In the northern part of Webster County, the character of the main valley is modified by the presence of ledges and low cliffs of the subcarboniferous limestone and gypsum. From a point a little below Fort Dodge to near Amsterdam in Marion County, the river runs all the way through and upon the lower coal-measure strata. Along this part of its course the flood-plain varies from an eighth to half a mile or more in width. From Amsterdam to Ottumwa the subcarboniferous limestone appears at intervals in the valley sides. Near Ottumwa the subcarboniferous rocks pass beneath the river again, bringing down the coal-measure strata into its bed; but they rise again from it in the extreme northwestern part of Van Buren County, and subcarboniferous strata resume and keep their place along the valley to the north of the river. From Fort Dodge to the western part of Lee County, the strata of the lower coal-measures are present in the valley. Its flood-plain is frequently sandy, from the debris of the sandstone and sandy shales of the coal-measures produced by their removal in the process of the formation of the valley.

The principal tributaries of the Des Moines are upon its western side. These are the Raccoon and the three rivers, viz.: South, Middle and North Rivers. The three latter have their source in the region occupied by the upper coal-measure limestone formation, flow eastward over the middle coal-measures, and enter the valley of the Des Moines upon the lower coal-measures. These streams, especially South and Middle Rivers, are frequently bordered by high rocky cliffs. Raccoon River has its source upon the heavy surface deposits of the middle region of Western Iowa, and along the greater part of its course it has excavated its valley out of those deposits and the middle coal-measures alone. The valley of the Des Moines and its branches are destined to become the seat of extensive manufactures in consequences of the numerous mill-sites of immense power, and the fact that the main valley traverses the entire length of the Iowa coal fields.

Skunk River.—This river has its source in Hamilton County, and runs almost its entire course upon the border of the outcrop of the lower coal-measures, or more properly speaking, upon the subcarboniferous limestone, just where it begins to pass beneath the coal-measures by its southerly and westerly dip. Its general course is southeast. From the western part of Henry County, up as far as Story County, the broad, flat flood-plain is covered with a rich deep clay soil, which in time of long-continued rains and overflows of the river, has made the valley of Skunk River a terror to travelers from the earliest settlement of the country. There are some excellent mill-sites on the lower half of this river, but they are not so numerous or valuable as on other rivers of the eastern system.

Iowa River.—This river rises in Hancock County, in the midst of a broad, slightly undulating drift region. The first rock exposure is that of sub-carboniferous limestone, in the southwestern corner of Franklin County. It enters the region of the Devonian strata near the southwestern corner of Benton County, and in this it continues to its confluence with the Cedar in Louisa County. Below the junction with the Cedar, and for some miles above that point, its valley is broad, and especially on the northern side, with a well marked flood plain. Its borders gradually blend with the uplands as they slope away in the distance from the river. The Iowa furnishes numerous and valuable mill sites.

Cedar River.—This stream is usually understood to be a branch of the Iowa, but it ought really to be regarded as the main stream. It rises by numerous branches in the northern part of the state, and flows the entire length of the state through the region occupied by the Devonian strata, and along the trend occupied by that formation.

The valley of this river in the upper part of its course is narrow, and the sides slope so gently as to scarcely show where the low lands end and the up lands begin. Below the confluence with the Shellrock, the flood plain is more distinctly marked, and the valley broad and shallow. The valley of the Cedar is one of the finest regions in the state, and both the main stream and its branches afford abundant and reliable mill sites.

Wapsipinnicon River.—This river has its source near the source of the Cedar, and runs parallel and near it almost its entire course, the upper half upon the same formation—the Devonian. In the northeastern part of Linn County it enters the region of the Niagara limestone, upon which it continues to the Mississippi. It is one hundred miles long, and yet the area of its drainage is only from twelve to twenty miles in width. Hence its numerous mill sites are unusually secure.

Turkey River.—This river and the Upper Iowa are in many respects unlike other Iowa rivers. The difference is due to the great depth they have eroded their valleys, and the different character of the material through which they have been eroded. Turkey River rises in Howard County, and in Winneshiek County, a few miles from its source, its valley has attained a depth of more than two hundred feet, and in Fayette and Clayton Counties its depth is increased to three and four hundred feet. The summit of the uplands, bordering nearly the whole length of the valley, is capped by the Maquoketa shales. These shales are underlaid by the Galena limestone, between two and three hundred feet thick. The valley has been eroded through these and runs upon the Trenton limestone. Thus all the formations along and within this valley are lower silurian. The valley is usually narrow, and without a well marked flood-plain. Water power is abundant, but in most places inaccessible.

Upper Iowa River.—This river rises in Minnesota, just beyond the northern boundary line, and enters our state in Howard County, before it has attained any considerable size. Its course is nearly eastward until it reaches the Mississippi. It rises in the region of the Devonian rocks, and flows across the outcrops respectively of the Niagara, Galena, and Trenton limestone, the lower magnesian limestone, and Potsdam sandstone, into and through all of which, except the last, it has cut its valley, which is the deepest of any in Iowa. The valley sides are almost every where high and steep, and cliffs of lower magnesian and Trenton limestone give them a wild and rugged aspect. In the lower part of the valley the flood-plain reaches a width sufficient for the location of small farms, but usually it is too narrow for such purposes. On the higher surface, however, as soon as you leave the valley, you come immediately upon a cultivated country. This stream has the greatest slope per mile of any in Iowa, consequently it furnishes immense water power. In some places, where creeks come into it, the valley widens and affords good locations for farms. The Town of Decorah, in Winneshiek County, is located in one of these spots, which makes it a lovely location, and the power of the river, and the small spring streams around it, offer fine facilities for manufacturing. This river and its tributaries are the only trout streams in Iowa.

Mississippi River.—This river may be described, in general terms, as a broad canal cut out of the general level of the country through which the river flows. It is bordered by abrupt hills or bluffs. The bottom of the valley ranges from one to eight miles in width. The whole space between the bluffs is occupied by the river and its bottom, or flood-plain only, if we except the occasional terraces or remains of ancient flood-plains, which are not now reached by the highest floods of the river. The river itself is from half a mile to nearly a mile in width. There are but four points along the whole length of the state where the bluffs approach the stream on both sides. The lower silurian formations compose the bluffs in the northern part of the state, but they gradually disappear by a southerly dip, and the bluffs are continued successively by the upper silurian, Devonian, and sub-carboniferous rocks, which are reached near the southeastern corner of the state.

Considered in their relation to the present general surface of the state, the relative ages of the river valley of Iowa date back only to the close of the glacial epoch; but that the Mississippi, and all the rivers of Northeastern Iowa, if no others, had at least a large part of the rocky portions of their valleys eroded by pre-glacial, or perhaps even by paleozoic rivers, can scarcely be doubted.

LAKES.

The lakes of Iowa may be properly divided into two distinct classes. The first may be called drift lakes, having had their origin in the depressions left in the surface of the drift at the close of the glacial epoch, and have rested upon the undisturbed surface of the drift deposit ever since the glaciers disappeared. The others may be properly fluviatile or alluvial lakes, because they have had their origin by the action of rivers while cutting their own valleys out from the surface of the drift as it existed at the close of the glacial epoch, and are now found resting upon the alluvium, as the others rest upon the drift. By the term alluvium is meant the deposit which has accumulated in the valleys of rivers by the action of their own currents. It is largely composed of sand and other coarse material, and upon that deposit are some of the best and most productive soils in the state. It is this deposit which form the flood-plains and deltas of our rivers, as well as the terraces of their valleys.

The regions to which the drift lakes are principally confined are near the head waters of the principal streams of the state. We consequently find them in those regions which lie between the Cedar and Des Moines Rivers, and the Des Moines and Little Sioux. No drift lakes are found in Southern Iowa. The largest of the lakes to be found in the state are Spirit and Okoboji, in Dickinson County; Clear Lake, in Cerro Gordo County; and Storm Lake, in Buena Vista County.

Spirit Lake. The width and length of this lake are about equal; and it contains about twelve square miles of surface its northern border resting directly on the boundary of the state. It lies almost directly upon the great watershed. Its shores are mostly gravelly, and the country about it fertile.

Okoboji Lake.—This body of water lies directly south of Spirit Lake, and has somewhat the shape of a horse-shoe, with its eastern projection within a few rods of Spirit Lake, where it receives the outlet of the latter. Okoboji Lake extends about five miles southward from Spirit Lake, thence about the same distance westward, and then bends northward about as far as the eastern projection. The eastern portion is narrow, but the western is larger, and in some places a hundred feet deep. The surroundings of this and Spirit Lake are very pleasant. Fish are abundant in them, and they are the resort of myriads of water fowl.

Clear Lake.—This lake is situated in Cerro-Gordo County, upon the water-shed between the Iowa and Cedar rivers. It is about five miles long, and two or three miles wide, and has a maximum depth of only fifteen feet. Its shores and the country around it are like that of Spirit Lake.

Storm Lake.—This body of water rests upon the great water-shed in Buena Vista County. It is a clear, beautiful sheet of water, containing a surface area of between four and five square miles.

The outlets of all these drift-lakes are dry during a portion of the year, except Okoboji.

Walled Lakes.—Along the water-sheds of northern Iowa great numbers of small lakes exist, varying from half a mile to a mile in diameter. One of the lakes in Wright County, and another in Sac, have each received the name of "Walled Lake," on account of the existence of embankments on their borders which are supposed to be the work of ancient inhabitants. These embankments are from two to ten feet in height, and from five to thirty feet across. They are the result of natural causes alone, being referable to the periodic action of ice, aided to some extent by the force of the waves. These lakes are very shallow and in winter freeze to the bottom, so that but little unfrozen water remains in the middle. The ice freezes fast to every thing upon the bottom, and the expansive power of the water in freezing, acts in all directions from the center to the circumference, and whatever was on the bottom of the lake has been thus carried to the shore, and this has been going on from year to year, from century to century, forming the embankments which have caused so much wonder.

SPRINGS.

Springs issue from all formations, and from sides of almost every valley, but they are more numerous, and assume proportions which give rise to the name of sink-holes, along the upland borders of the Upper Iowa River, owing to the peculiar fissured and laminated character and great thickness of the strata of the age of the Trenton limestone which underlies the whole region of the valley of that stream.

No mineral springs, properly so-called, have yet been discovered in Iowa, though the waters of several artesian wells is frequently found charged with soluble mineral substances.

ORIGIN OF THE PRAIRIES.

It is estimated that seven-eighths of the surface of the state was prairie when first settled. They are not confined to level surfaces, nor to any particular variety of soil, for within the state they rest upon all formations from those of the Azoic to those of the Cretaceous age inclusive. Whatever may have been their origin, their present existence in Iowa is not due to the influence of climate, nor the soil, nor any of the underlying formations. The real cause is the prevalence of the annual fires. If these had been prevented fifty years ago, Iowa would now be a timbered country. The encroachment of forest trees upon prairie farms as soon as the bordering woodland is protected from the annual prairie fires, is well known to farmers throughout the state.

The soil of Iowa is justly famous for its fertility, and there is probably no equal area of the earth's surface that contains so little unfillable land, or whose soil has so high an average of fertility. Ninety-five per cent. of its surface is tillable land.

GEOLOGY.

The soil of Iowa may be separated into three general divisions, which not only possess different physical characters, but also differ in the mode of their origin. These are drift, bluff and alluvial, and belong respectively to the deposits bearing the same names. The drift occupies a much larger part of the surface of the state than both the others; the bluff has the next greatest area of surface, and the alluvial least.

All soil is disintegrated rock. The drift deposit of Iowa was derived to a considerable extent from the rocks of Minnesota; but the greater part of Iowa drift was derived from its own rocks, much of which has been transported but a short distance. In general terms, the constant component element of the drift soil is that portion which was transported from the north, while the inconstant elements are those portions which were derived from the adjacent, or underlying, strata. For example, in Western Iowa, wherever that cretaceous formation known as the Nishnabotany sandstone exists, the soil contains more sand than elsewhere. The same may be said of the soil of some parts of the state occupied by the lower coal-measures, the sandstones and sandy shales of that formation furnishing the sand.

In Northern and Northwestern Iowa the drift contains more sand and gravel than elsewhere. This sand and gravel was doubtless derived from the cretaceous rocks that now do, or formerly did, exist there, and also in part from the conglomerate and pudding-stone beds of the Sioux quartzite.

In Southern Iowa the soil is frequently stiff and clayey. This preponderating clay is doubtless derived from the clayey and shaley beds which alternate with the limestones of that region.

The bluff soil is that which rests upon, and constitutes a part of, the bluff deposit. It is found only in the western part of the state and adjacent to the Missouri River. Although it contains less than one per cent. of clay in its composition, it is in no respect inferior to the best drift soil.

The alluvial soil is that of the flood-plains of the river valleys, or bottom lands. That which is periodically flooded by the rivers is of little value for agricultural purposes; but a large part of it is entirely above the reach of the highest floods, and is very productive.

The stratified rocks of Iowa range from the Azoic to the Mesozoic, inclusive; but the greater portion of the surface of the state is occupied by those of the Paleozoic age. The table below will show each of these formations in their order:

Systems. AGES.	Groups. PERIODS.	Formations. EPOCHS.	Thickness. IN FEET.
Cretaceous	Post Tertiary	Drift	10 to 200
	Lower Cretaceous	Inoceramus bed	50
		Woodbury Sandstone and Shales	130
		Nishnabotany Sandstone	100
Carboniferous	Coal Measures	Upper Coal Measures	200
		Middle Coal Measures	200
		Lower Coal Measures	200
	Sub-Carboniferous	St. Louis Limestone	75
		Keokuk Limestone	90
		Burlington Limestone	196
		Kinderhook beds	175
Devonian	Hamilton	Hamilton Limestone and Shales	200
Upper Silurian	Niagara	Niagara Limestone	350
	Cincinnati	Maquoketa Shales	80
Lower Silurian	Trenton	Galena Limestone	250
		Trenton Limestone	200
	Primordial	St. Peter's Sandstone	80
		Lower Magnesian Limestone	250
		Potsdam Sandstone	300
Azoic	Huronian	Sioux Quartzite	50

THE AZOIC SYSTEM.

The Sioux quartzite is found exposed in natural ledges only upon a few acres in the extreme northwest corner of the state, upon the banks of the Big Sioux River, for which reason the specific name of Sioux Quartzite has been given them. It is an intensely hard rock, breaks in splintery fracture, and a color varying in different localities from a light to deep red. The process of metamorphism has been so complete throughout the whole formation that the rock is almost everywhere of uniform texture. The dip is four or five degrees to the northward, and the trend of the outcrop is eastward and westward. This rock may be quarried in a few rare cases, but usually it can not be secured in dry form except that into which it naturally cracks, and the tendency is to angular pieces. It is absolutely indestructible.

LOWER SILURIAN SYSTEM.

PRIMORDIAL GROUP.

Potsdam Sandstone.—This formation is exposed only in a small portion of the northeastern portion of the state. It is only to be seen in the bases of the bluffs and steep valley sides which border the river there. It may be seen underlying the lower magnesian limestone. St. Peter's sandstone and Trenton limestone, in their regular order, along the bluffs of the Mississippi from the northern boundary of the state as far south as Guttenburg, along the Upper Iowa for a distance of about twenty miles from its mouth, and along a few of the streams which empty into the Mississippi in Allamakee County.

It is nearly valueless for economic purposes.

No fossils have been discovered in this formation in Iowa.

Lower Magnesian Limestone.—This formation has but little greater geographical extent in Iowa than the Potsdam sandstone. It lacks a uniformity of texture and stratification, owing to which it is not generally valuable for building purposes.

The only fossils found in this formation in Iowa are a few traces of crinoids, near McGregor.

St. Peter's Sandstone.—This formation is remarkably uniform in thickness throughout its known geographical extent; and it is evident it occupies a large portion of the northern half of Allamakee County, immediately beneath the drift.

TRENTON GROUP.

Trenton Limestone. With the exception of this, all the limestones of both upper and lower silurian age in Iowa are magnesian limestones—nearly pure dolomites. This formation occupies large portions of Winneshiek and Allamakee Counties and a portion of Clayton. The greater part of it is useless for economic purposes, yet there are in some places compact and evenly bedded layers, which afford fine material for window caps and sills.

In this formation fossils are abundant, so much so that in some places the rock is made up of a mass of shells, corals and fragments of trilobites, cemented by calcareous material into a solid rock. Some of these fossils are new to science and peculiar to Iowa

The Galena Limestone.—This is the upper formation of the Trenton group. It seldom exceeds twelve miles in width, although it is fully one hundred and fifty miles long. The outcrop traverses portions of the counties of Howard, Winneshiek, Allamakee, Fayette, Clayton, Dubuque and Jackson. It exhibits its greatest development in Dubuque County. It is nearly a pure dolomite, with a slight admixture of siliceous matter. It is usually unfit for dressing, though sometimes near the top of the bed good blocks for dressing are found. This formation is the source of the lead ore of the Dubuque lead mines. The lead region proper is confined to an area of about fifteen miles square in the vicinity of Dubuque. The ore occurs in vertical fissures which traverse the rock at regular intervals from east to west; some is found in those which have a north and south direction. The ore is mostly that known as Galena, or sulphuret of lead, very small quantities only of the carbonate being found with it.

CINCINNATI GROUP.

Maquoketa Shales.—The surface occupied by this formation is singularly long and narrow, seldom reaching more than a mile or two in width, but more than a hundred miles in length. Its most southerly exposure in the bluffs of the Mississippi near Bellevue, in Jackson County, and the most northerly yet recognized in the western part of Winneshiek County. The whole formation is largely composed of bluish and brownish shales, sometimes slightly arenaceous, sometimes calcareous, which weather into a tenacious clay upon the surface, and the soil derived from it is usually stiff and clayey.

Its economic value is very slight.

Several species of fossils which characterize the Cincinnati group are found in the Maquoketa shales; but they contain a larger number that have been found nowhere else than in these shales in Iowa, and their distinct faunal characteristics seem to warrant the separation of the Maquoketa shales as a distinct formation from any others of the group.

UPPER SILURIAN SYSTEM.

NIAGARA GROUP.

Niagara Limestone.—The area occupied by the Niagara limestone is nearly one hundred and sixty miles long from north to south, and forty and fifty miles wide.

This formation is entirely a magnesian limestone, with in some places a considerable proportion of siliceous matter in the form of chert or coarse flint. A large part of it is evenly bedded, and probably affords the best and greatest amount of quarry rock in the state. The quarries at Anamosa, LeClaire and Farley are all opened in this formation.

DEVONIAN SYSTEM.

HAMILTON GROUP.

Hamilton Limestone.—The area of surface occupied by the Hamilton limestone and shales is fully as great as those by all the formations of both upper and lower silurian age in the state. It is nearly two hundred miles long and from forty to fifty miles broad. The general trend is northwestward and southeastward.

Although a large part of the material of this formation is practically quite worthless, yet other portions are valuable for economic purposes; and having a large geographical extent in the state, is one of the most important formations, in a practical point of view. At Waverly, Bremer County, its value for the production of hydraulic lime has been practically demonstrated. The heavier and more uniform magnesian beds furnish material for bridge piers and other material requiring strength and durability.

All the Devonian strata of Iowa evidently belong to a single epoch, and referable to the Hamilton, as recognized by New York geologists.

The most conspicuous and characteristic fossils of this formation are brachiopod, mollusks and corals. The coral Acervularia Davidsoni occurs near Iowa City, and is known as "Iowa City marble," and "bird's-eye marble."

CARBONIFEROUS SYSTEM.

Of the three groups of formations that constitute the carboniferous system, viz.: the sub-carboniferous, coal-measures, and permian, only the first two are found in Iowa.

SUB-CARBONIFEROUS GROUP.

The area of surface occupied by this group is very large. Its eastern border passes from the northeastern part of Winnebago County, with considerable directness in a southeasterly direction to the northern part of Washington County. Here it makes a broad and direct bend nearly eastward, striking the Mississippi River at Muscatine. The southern and western boundary is to a considerable extent the same as that which separates it from the coal-field. From the southern part of Pocahontas County it passes southeast to Fort Dodge, thence to Webster City, thence to a point three or four miles northeast of Eldora, in Hardin County, thence southward to the middle of the north line of Jasper County, thence southeastward to Sigourney, in Keokuk County, thence to the northeastern corner of Jefferson County, thence sweeping a few miles eastward to the southeast corner of Van Buren County. Its area is nearly two hundred and fifty miles long, and from twenty to fifty miles wide.

The Kinderhook Beds.—The most southerly exposure of these beds is near the mouth of Skunk River, in Des Moines County. The most northerly now known is in the eastern part of Pocahontas County, more than two hundred miles distant. The principal exposures of this formation, are along the bluffs which border the Mississippi and Skunk Rivers, where they form the eastern and northern boundary of Des Moines County; along English River, in Washington County; along the Iowa River, in Tama, Marshall, Hamlin and Franklin Counties; and along the Des Moines River, in Humboldt County.

The economic value of this formation is very considerable, particularly in the northern portion of the region it occupies. In Pocahontas and Humboldt Counties it is almost invaluable, as no other stone except a few boulders are found there. At Iowa Falls the lower division is very good for building purposes. In Marshall County all the limestone to be obtained comes from this formation, and the quarries near LeGrand are very valuable. At this point some of the layers are finely veined with per-oxyd of iron, and are wrought into ornamental and useful objects.

In Tama County, the oolitic member is well exposed, where it is manufactured into lime. It is not valuable for building, as upon exposure to atmosphere and frost, it crumbles to pieces.

The remains of fishes are the only fossils yet discovered in this formation that can be referred to the sub-kingdom VERTEBRATA; and so far as yet recognized, they all belong to the order selachians.

Of ARTICULATES, only two species have been recognized, both of which belong to the genus phillipsia.

The sub-kingdom MOLLUSCA is largely represented.

The RADIATA are represented by a few crinoids, usually found in a very imperfect condition.

The sub-kingdom is also represented by corals.

The prominent feature in the life of this epoch was molluscan; so much so in fact as to overshadow all other branches of the animal kingdom. The prevailing classes are: lamellibranchiata, in the more arenaceous portions; and brachiopods, in the more calcareous portions.

No remains of vegetation have been detected in any of the strata of this formation.

The Burlington Limestone.—This formation consists of two distinct calcareous divisions, which are separated by a series of siliceous beds. Both divisions are eminently crinoidal.

The southerly dip of the Iowa rocks carries the Burlington limestone down, so that it is seen for the last time in this state in the valley of Skunk River, near the southern boundary of Des Moines County. The most northerly point at which it has been recognized, is in the northern part of Washington County. It probably exists as far north as Marshall County.

This formation affords much valuable material for economic purposes. The upper division furnishes excellent common quarry rock.

The great abundance and variety of its fossils—crinoids—now known to be more than three hundred—have justly attracted the attention of geologists in all parts of the world.

The only remains of vertebrates discovered in this formation, are those of fishes, and consist of teeth and spines—bone of bony fishes like those most common at the present day, are found in these rocks. On Buffington Creek, in Louisa County, is a stratum in an exposure so fully charged with these remains, that it might with propriety be called bone breccia.

Remains of articulates are rare in this formation. So far as yet discovered, they are confined to two species of trilobites of the genus phillipsia.

Fossil shells are very common.

The two lowest classes of the sub-kingdom radiata, are represented in the genera zaphrentis, amplexus, and syringapora, while the highest class—echinoderms—are found in most extraordinary profusion.

The Keokuk Limestone.—It is only in the four counties of Lee, Van Buren, Henry and Des Moines, that this formation is to be seen.

In some localities the upper siliceous portion of this formation is known as the Geode bed. It is not recognizable in the northern portion of the formation, nor in connection with it where it is exposed, about eighty miles below Keokuk.

The geodes of the Geode bed are more or less spherical masses of silex, usually hollow and lined with crystals of quartz. The outer crust is rough and unsightly, but the crystals which stud the interior are often very beautiful. They vary in size from the size of a walnut to a foot in diameter.

The economic value of this formation is very great. Large quantities of its stone have been used in the finest structures in the state, among which are the post-offices at Dubuque and Des Moines. The principal quarries are along the banks of the Mississippi, from Keokuk to Nauvoo.

The only vertebrate fossils found in this formation are fishes, all belonging to the order selachians, some of which indicate that their owners reached a length of twenty-five or thirty feet.

Of the articulates, only two species of the genus phillipsia have been found in this formation.

Of the mollusks, no cephalopods have yet been recognized in this formation in this state; gasteropods are rare; brachiopods and polyzoans are quite abundant.

Of radiates, corals of genera zaphrentes, amplexus and auloporo are found, but crinoids are most abundant.

Of the low forms of animal life, the protozoans, a small fossil related to the sponges, is found in this formation in small numbers.

The St. Louis Limestone.—This is the uppermost of the sub-carboniferous group in Iowa. The superficial area it occupies is comparatively small, because it consists of long narrow strips, yet its extent is very great. It is first seen resting on the geode division of the Keokuk limestone, near Keokuk. Proceeding northward, it forms a narrow border along the edge of the coal-fields in Lee, Des Moines, Henry, Jefferson, Washington, Keokuk and Mahaska Counties. It is then lost sight of until it appears again in the banks of Boone River, where it again passes out of view under the coal-measures, until it is next seen in the banks of the Des Moines, near Fort Dodge. As it exists in Iowa, it consists of three tolerably distinct sub-divisions,—the magnesian, arenaceous, and calcareous.

The upper division furnishes excellent material for quicklime, and when quarries are well opened, as in the northwestern part of Van Buren County, large blocks are obtained. The sandstone, or middle division, is of little economic value. The lower, or magnesian division, furnishes a valuable and durable stone, exposures of which are found on Lick Creek, in Van Buren County, and on Long Creek, seven miles west of Burlington.

Of the fossils of this formation, the vertebrates are represented only by the remains of fish, belonging to the two orders—selachians, and ganoids. The articulates are represented by one species of the trilobite, genus phillipsia, and two ostracoid, genera, cythre and beyricia. The mollusks distinguish this formation more than any other branch of the animal kingdom. Radiates are exceedingly rare, showing a marked contrast between this formation and the two preceding it.

The rocks of the sub-carboniferous period have in other countries, and in other parts of our own country, furnished valuable minerals, and even coal, but in Iowa the economic value is confined to its stone alone.

The lower silurian, upper silurian, and Devonian rocks of Iowa are largely composed of limestone. Magnesia also enters largely into the sub-carboniferous group. With the completion of the St. Louis limestone, the production of the magnesian limestone seems to have ceased among the rocks of Iowa.

Although the Devonian age has been called the age of fishes, yet so far as Iowa is concerned, the rocks of no period can compare with the sub-carboniferous in the abundance and variety of the fish remains, and for this reason, the Burlington and Keokuk limestones will in the future become more famous among geologists, perhaps, than any other formations in North America.

It will be seen that the Chester limestone is omitted from the sub-carboniferous group, and which completes the full geological series. It is probable the whole surface of Iowa was above the sea during the time of the formation of the Chester limestone to the southward about one hundred miles.

At the close of the epoch of the Chester limestone, the shallow seas in which the lower coal-measures were formed, again occupied the land, extending almost as far north as that sea had done in which the Kinderhook beds were formed, and to the northeastward its deposits extended beyond the sub-carboniferous groups, outliers of which are found upon the next, or Devonian rock.

THE COAL-MEASURE GROUP.

The coal-measure group of Iowa is properly divided into three formations, viz., the lower, middle and upper coal-measures, each having a vertical thickness of about two hundred feet.

A line drawn upon the map of Iowa as follows, will represent the eastern and northern boundaries of the coal-fields of the state: Commencing at the southeast corner of Van Buren County, carry the line to the northeast corner of Jefferson County by a slight easterly curve through the western portions of Lee and Henry Counties. Produce this line until it reaches a point six or eight miles northward from the one last named, and then carry it northwestward, keeping it at about the same distance to the northward of Skunk River and its north branch that it had at first, until it reaches the southern boundary of Marshall County, a little west of its center. Then carry it to a point three or four miles northeast from Eldorado, in Hardin County; thence westward to a point a little north of Webster City, in Hamilton County; and thence further westward to a point a little north of Fort Dodge, in Webster County.

Lower Coal-measures.—In consequence of the recedence to the southward of the borders of the middle and upper coal-measures, the lower coal-measures alone exist to the eastward and northward of Des Moines River. They also occupy a large area westward and southward of that river, but their southerly dip passes them below the middle coal-measures at no great distance from the river.

No other formation in the whole state possesses the economic value of the lower coal-measures. The clay that underlies almost every bed of coal furnishes a large amount of material for potters' use. The sandstone of these measures are usually soft and unfit, but in some places, as near Redrock, in Marion County, blocks of large dimension are obtained which make good building material, samples of which can be seen in the State Arsenal, at Des Moines. On the whole, that portion of the state occupied by the lower coal-measures, is not well supplied with stone.

But few fossils have been found in any of the strata of the lower coal-measures, but such animal remains as have been found, are without exception of marine origin.

Of fossil plants found in these measures, all probably belong to the class acrogens. Specimens of calamites, and several species of ferns, are found in all of the coal-measures, but the genus lepidodendron seems not to have existed later than the epoch of the middle coal-measures.

Middle Coal-Measures.—This formation within the state of Iowa occupies a narrow belt of territory in the southern-central portion of the state, embracing a superficial area of about fourteen hundred square miles. The counties more or less underlaid by this formation, are Guthrie, Dallas, Polk, Madison, Warren, Clarke, Lucas, Monroe, Wayne, and Appanoose.

This formation is composed of alternating beds of clay, sandstone, and limestone, the clays or shales constituting the bulk of the formation, the limestone occurring in their bands, the lithological peculiarities of which offer many contrasts to the limestones of the upper and lower coal-measures. The formation is also characterized by regular wave-like undulations, with a parallelism which indicates a widespread disturbance, though no dislocation of the strata have been discovered.

Generally speaking, few species of fossils occur in these beds. Some of the shales and sandstone have afforded a few imperfectly preserved land plants—three or four species of ferns, belonging to the genera. Some of the carboniferous shales afford beautiful specimens of what appear to have been sea-weeds. Radiates are represented by corals. The molluscs are most numerously represented. Tribolites and ostracoids are the only remains known of articulates. Vertebrates are only known by the remains of selachians, or sharks, and ganoids.

Upper Coal-Measures.—The area occupied by this formation in Iowa is very great, comprising thirteen whole counties, in the southwestern part of the state. It adjoins by its northern and eastern boundaries the area occupied by the middle coal-measures.

The prominent lithological features of this formation are its limestones, yet it contains a considerable proportion of shales and sandstones. Although it is known by the name of upper coal-measures, it contains but a single bed of coal, and that only about twenty inches in maximum thickness.

The limestone exposed in this formation furnishes good material for building as in Madison and Fremont Counties. The sandstones are quite worthless. No beds of clay for potter's use are found in the whole formation.

The fossils in this formation are much more numerous than in either the middle or lower coal-measures. The vertebrates are represented by the fishes of the orders selachians and ganoids. The articulates are represented by the trilobites and ostracoids. Mollusks are represented by the classes cephalopoda, gasteropoda, lamelli branchiata, brachiopoda and polyzoa. Radiates are more numerous than in the lower and middle coal-measures. Protogoans are represented in the greatest abundance, some layers of limestone being almost entirely composed of their small fusiform shells.

CRETACEOUS SYSTEM.

There belng no rocks in Iowa of permian, triassic or jurassic age, the next strata in the geological series are of the cretaceous age. They are found in the western half of the state, and do not dip, as do all the other formations upon which they rest, to the southward and westward, but have a general dip of their own to the north of westward, which, however, is very slight. Although the actual exposures of cretaceous rocks are few in Iowa, there is reason to believe that nearly all the western half of the state was originally occupied by them; but being very friable, they have been removed by denudation, which has taken place at two separate periods. The first period was during its elevation from the cretaceous sea, and during the long tertiary age that passed between the time of that elevation and the commencement of the glacial epoch. The second period was during the glacial epoch, when the ice produced their entire removal over considerable areas.

It is difficult to indicate the exact boundaries of these rocks; the following will approximate the outlines of the area

From the northeast corner to the southwest corner of Kossuth County; thence to the southeast corner of Guthrie County; thence to the southeast corner of Cass County; thence to the middle of the south boundary of Montgomery County; thence to the middle of the north boundary of Pottawattamie County; thence to the middle of the south boundary of Woodbury County; thence to Sergeant's Bluffs; up the Missouri and Big Sioux Rivers to the northwest corner of the state; eastward along the state line to the place of beginning.

All the cretaceous rocks in Iowa are a part of the same deposits farther up the Missouri River, and in reality form their eastern boundary.

Nishnnibotany Sandstone.—This rock has the most easterly and southerly extent of the cretaceous deposits of Iowa, reaching the southeastern part of Guthrie County and the southern part of Montgomery County. To the northward it passes beneath the Woodbury sandstones and shales, the latter passing beneath the Inocernmas, or chalky, beds.

This sandstone is, with few exceptions, almost valueless for economic purposes.

The only fossils found in this formation are a few fragments of angiospermous leaves.

Woodbury Sandstones and Shales.—These strata rest upon the Nishnabotany sandstone, and have not been observed outside of Woodbury County, hence their name. Their principal exposure is at Sergeant's Bluffs, seven miles below Sioux City.

This rock has no value except for purposes of common masonry.

Fossil remains are rare. Detached scales of a lepidoginoid species have been detected, but no other vertebrate remains. Of remains of vegetation, leaves of salix meekii and sassafras cretaceum have been occasionally found.

Inoceramus Beds.—These beds rest upon the Woodbury sandstones and shales. They have not been observed in Iowa, except in the bluffs which border the Big Sioux River in Woodbury and Plymouth Counties. They are composed almost entirely of calcareous material, the upper portion of which is extensively used for lime. No building material is to be obtained from these beds; and the only value they possess except lime are the marls, which at some time may be useful on the soil of the adjacent region.

The only vertebrate remains found in the cretaceous rocks are the fishes. Those in the inoceramus beds of Iowa are two species of sqnoloid selachians, or cestratront, and three genera of teliosts. Molluscan remains are rare.

PEAT.

Extensive beds of peat exist in northern Middle Iowa, which it is estimated contain the following areas:

Cerro Gordo	1,500
Worth	2,000
Winnebago	2,000
Hancock	1,500
Wright	500
Kossuth	700
Dickenson	80

Several other counties contain peat beds, but the character of the peat is inferior to that in the northern part of the state. The character of the peat named is equal to that of Ireland. The beds are of an average depth of four feet. It is estimated that each acre of these beds will furnish two hundred and fifty tons of dry fuel for each foot in depth. At present, owing to the sparseness of the population, this peat is not utilized; but owing to its great distance from the coal fields, and the absence of timber, the time is coming when their value will be realized, and the fact demonstrated that Nature has abundantly compensated the deficiency of other fuel.

GYPSUM

The only deposits of the sulphates of the alkaline earths of any economic value in Iowa, are those of gypsum at and in the vicinity of Fort Dodge, in Webster County. All others are small and unimportant. The deposit occupies a nearly central position in Webster County, the Des Moines River running nearly centrally through it, along the valley-sides of which the gypsum is seen in the form of ordinary rock cliff and ledges, and also occurring abundantly in similar positions along both sides of the valleys of the smaller streams and of the numerous ravines coming into the river valley

The most northerly known limit of the deposit is at a point near the mouth of Lizard Creek, a tributary of the Des Moines River, and almost adjoining the town of Fort Dodge. The most southerly point at which it has been found exposed, is about six miles, by way of the river, from this a ortherly point before mentioned. Our knowledge of the width of the area occupied by it is limited by the exposures seen in the valleys of the small streams and in the ravines which come into the river valley within the distance mentioned. As one goes up these ravines and minor valleys, the gypsum becomes lost beneath the overlying drift. There can be no doubt that the different parts of this deposit, now disconnected by the valleys and ravines having been cut through it, were originally connected as a continuous deposit, and there seems to be as little reason to doubt that the gypsum still extends to considerable distance on each side of the valley of the river beneath the drift which covers the region to a depth of from twenty to sixty feet.

The country round about this region has the prairie surface approximating a general level, which is so characteristic of the greater part of the state, and which exists irrespective of the character or original age of the strata beneath. The boulder clay or drift is so deep and uniformly distributed that it frequently, almost alone, gives character to the surface. The valley-sides of the Des Moines River, in the vicinity of Fort Dodge, are somewhat abrupt, having a depth there from the general level of the upland of about one hundred and seventy feet, and consequently presents somewhat bold and interesting features in the landscape.

As one walks up and down the creeks and ravines which come into the valley of the Des Moines River there, he sees the gypsum exposed on either side of them, jutting out from beneath the drift in the form of ledges and bold quarry fronts, having almost the exact appearance of ordinary limestone exposures, so horizontal and regular are its lines of stratification, and so similar in color is it to some varieties of that rock. The principal quarries now opened are on Two Mile Creek, a couple of miles below Fort Dodge.

The reader will please bear in mind, that the gypsum of this remarkable deposit does not occur in "beaps" or "nests," as it does in most deposits of gypsum in the states farther eastward, but that it exists here in the form of a regularly stratified, continuous formation, as uniform in texture, color, and quality throughout the whole region, and from top to bottom of the deposit as the granite of the Quincy quarries is Its color is a uniform gray, resulting from alternating fine horizontal lines of nearly white, with similar lines of darker shade. The gypsum of the white lines is almost entirely pure, the darker lines containing the impurity. This is at intervals barely sufficient in some cases to cause the separation of the mass upon those lines into beds or layers, thus facilitating the quarrying of it into desired shapes. These bedding surfaces have occasionally a clayey feeling to the touch, but there is nowhere any intercalation of clay or other foreign substance in a separate form. The deposit is known to reach a thickness of thirty feet at the quarries referred to, but although it will probably be found to exceed this thickness at some other points, at the natural exposures, it is seldom seen to be more than from ten to twenty feet thick.

Since the drift is usually seen to rest directly upon the gypsum, with nothing intervening, except at a few points where traces appear of an overlying bed of clayey material without doubt of the same age as the gypsum, the latter probably lost something of its thickness by mechanical denudation during the glacial epoch; and it has, doubtless, also suffered some diminution of thickness since then by solution in the waters which constantly percolate through the drift from the surface. The drift of this region being somewhat clayey, particularly in its lower part, it has doubtless served in some degree as a protection against the diminution of the gypsum by solution in consequence of its partial imperviousness to water. If the gypsum had been covered by a deposit of sand instead of the drift clays, it would no doubt have long since disappeared by being dissolved in the water that would have constantly reached it from the surface. Water merely resting upon it would not dissolve it away to any extent, but it rapidly disappears under the action of running water. Where little rills of water at the time of every rain run over the face of an unused quarry from the surface above it, deep grooves are thereby cut into it, giving it somewhat the appearance of melting ice around a waterfall. The fact that gypsum is now suffering a constant, but of course, a very slight diminution, is apparent in the fact that the springs of the region contain more or less of it in solution in their waters. An analysis of water from one of these springs will be found in Professor Emery's report.

Besides the clayey beds that are sometimes seen to rest upon the gypsum, there are occasionally others seen beneath them that are also of the same age, and not of the age of the coal-measure strata upon which they rest.

Age of the Gypsum Deposit.—In neither the gypsum nor the associated clays has any trace of any fossil remains been found, nor has any other reason of its geological age been observed, except that which is afforded by its stratigraphical relations, and the most that can be said with certainty is that it is newer than the coal-measures, and older than the drift. The indications afforded by the stratigraphical relations of the gypsum deposit of Fort Dodge are, however, of considerable value.

As already shown, it rests in that region directly and unconformably upon the Lower coal-measures; but going southward from there, the whole series of coal-measure strata from the top of the Sub-carboniferous group to the Upper coal-measures, inclusive, can be traced without break or unconformability. The strata of the latter also may be traced in the same manner up into the Permian rocks of Kansas; and through this long series, there is no place or horizon which suggests that the gypsum deposit might belong there.

Again, no Tertiary deposits are known to exist within or near the borders of Iowa to suggest that the gypsum might be of that age; nor are any of the paleozoic strata newer than the Sub-carboniferous unconformable upon each other as the other gypsum is unconformable upon the strata beneath it. It therefore seems, in a measure conclusive, that the gypsum is of Mesozoic age, perhaps older than the Cretaceous.

Lithological Origin.—As little can be said with certainty concerning the lithological origin of this deposit as can be said concerning its geological age, for it seems to present itself in this relation, as in the former one, as an isolated fact. None of the associated strata show any traces of a double decomposition of pre-existing materials, such as some have supposed all deposits of gypsum to have resulted from. No considerable quantities of oxide of iron, nor any trace of native sulphur have been found in connection with it; nor has any salt been found in the waters of the region. These substances are common in association with other gypsum deposits, and are regarded by some persons as indicative of the method of or resulting from their origin as such. Throughout the whole region the Fort Dodge gypsum has the exact appearance of a sedimentary deposit. It is arranged in layers like the regular layers of limestone, and the whole mass from top to bottom is traced with fine horizontal laminæ of alternating white and gray gypsum, parallel with the bedding surfaces of the layers, but the whole so intimately blended as to form a solid mass. The darker lines contain almost all the impurity there is in the gypsum, and that impurity is evidently sedimentary in its character. From these facts, and also from the further one that no trace of fossil remains has been detected in the gypsum, it seems not unreasonable to entertain the opinion that the gypsum of Fort Dodge originated as a chemical precipitation in comparatively still waters which were saturated with sulphate of lime and destitute of life; its stratification and impurities being deposited at the same time as clayey impurities which had been held suspended in the same waters.

Physical Properties.—Much has already been said of the physical properties or characters of this gypsum, but as it is so different in some respects from that of other deposits, there are yet other matters worthy of mention in connection with those. According to the results of a complete and exhaustive analysis by Professor Emery, the ordinary gray gypsum contains only about eight per cent of impurity; and it is probable that the average impurity for the whole deposit will not exceed that proportion, so uniform in quality is it from top to bottom and from one end of the region to the other.

When it is remembered that plaster for agricultural purposes is sometimes prepared from gypsum that contains as much as thirty per cent of impurity, it will be seen that ours is a very superior article for such purposes. The impurities are also of such a character that they do not in any way interfere with its value for use in the arts. Although the gypsum rock has a gray color, it becomes quite white by grinding, and and still whiter by the calcining process necessary in the preparation of plaster of paris. These tests have all been practically made in the rooms of the Geological Survey, and the quality of the plaster of paris still further tested by actual use and experiment. No hesitation, therefore, is felt in stating that the Fort Dodge gypsum is of as good quality as any in the country, even for the finest uses.

In view of the bounteousness of the primitive fertility of our Iowa soils, many persons forget that a time may come when Nature will refuse to respond so generously to our demand as she does now, without an adequate return. Such are apt to say that this vast deposit of gypsum is valueless to our commonwealth except to the small extent that it may be used in the arts. This is undoubtedly a short-sighted view of the subject, for the time is even now rapidly passing away, when a man may purchase a new farm for less money than he can re-fertilize and restore the partially wasted primitive fertility of the one he now occupies. There are farms even now in a large part of the older settled portions of our state that would be greatly benefited by the proper application of plaster, and such areas will continue to increase until it will be difficult to estimate the value of the deposit of gypsum at Fort Dodge. It should be remembered, also, that the inhabitants of an extent of country adjoining our state more than three times as great as its own area, will find it more convenient to obtain their supplies from Fort Dodge than from any other source.

For want of direct railroad communication between this region and other parts of the state, the only use yet made of the gypsum by the inhabitants for the purposes of ordinary building-stone. It is so compact that it is found to be comparatively unaffected by the frost, and its ordinary situation in walls of houses is such that it is protected from the dissolving action of water, which can at most reach it only from occasional rains, and the effect of these is too slight to be perceived after the lapse of several years.

One of the citizens of Fort Dodge, Honorable John F. Duncombe, built a large, fine residence of it in 1861, the walls of which appear as unaffected by exposure and as beautiful as they were when first erected. It has been so long and successfully used for building-stone by the inhabitants, that they now prefer it to the limestone of good quality, which also exists in the immediate vicinity. This preference is due to the cheapness of the gypsum as compared with the stone. The cheapness of the former is largely due to the facility with which it is quarried and wrought. Several other houses have been constructed of it in Fort Dodge, including the depot building of the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad. The company have also constructed a large culvert of the same material to span a creek near the town, limestone only being used for the lower courses which come in contact with the water. It is a fine arch, each stone of gypsum being nicely hewn, and it will doubtless prove a very durable one. Many of the sidewalks in the town are made of the slabs or flags of gypsum which occur in some of the quarries in the form of thin layers. They are more durable than their softness would lead one to suppose. They also possess an advantage over stone in not becoming slippery when worn.

The method adopted in quarrying and dressing the blocks of gypsum is peculiar, and quite unlike that adopted in similar treatment of ordinary stone. Taking a stout auger-bit of an ordinary brace, such as is used by carpenters, and filling the cutting parts of it into a peculiar form, the quarryman bores his holes into the gypsum quarry for blasting in the same manner and with as great facility as a carpenter would bore hard wood. The pieces being loosened by blasting, they are broken up with sledges into convenient sizes, or hewn into the desired shapes by means of hatchets or ordinary chopping axes, or cut by means of ordinary wood-saws. So little grit does the gypsum contain that these tools, made for working wood, are found to be better adapted for working the former substance, than those tools are which are universally used for working stone.

MINOR DEPOSITS OF SULPHATE OF LIME

Besides the great gypsum deposit of Fort Dodge, sulphate of lime in the various forms of fibrous gypsum, selenite, and small, amorphous masses, has also been discovered in various formations in different parts of the state, including the coal-measure shales near Fort Dodge, where it exists in small quantities, quite independently of the great gypsum deposit there. The quantity of gypsum in these minor deposits is always too small to be of any practical value, and frequently minute. They usually occur in shales and shaly clays, associated with strata that contain more or less sulphuret of iron, (iron pyrites). Gypsum has thus been detected in the coal-measures, the St. Louis limestone, the cretaceous strata, and also in the lead-caves of Dubuque. In most of these cases it is evidently the result of double decomposition of iron pyrites and carbonate of lime, previously existing there; in which cases the gypsum is of course not an original deposit as the great one of Fort Dodge is supposed to be.

The existence of these comparatively minute quantities of gypsum in the shales of the coal-measures and the sub-carboniferous limestone with which are exposed within the region of, and occupy a stratigraphical position beneath the great gypsum deposits, suggests the possibility that the former may have originated as a precipitate from percolating waters, holding gypsum in solution which they had derived from that deposit in passing over or through it. Since, however, the same substance is found in similar small quantities and under similar conditions in regions where they could have had no possible connection with that deposit, it is believed that none of those mentioned have necessarily originated from it, not even those that are found in close proximity to it.

The gypsum found in the lead caves is usually in the form of efflorescent fibres, and is always in small quantity. In the lower coal-measure shale near Fort Dodge, a small mass was found in the form of an intercalated layer, which had a distinct fibrous structure, the fibres being perpendicular to the plane of the layer. The same mass had also distinct, horizontal planes of cleavage at right angles with the perpendicular fibres. Thus, being more or less transparent, the mass combined the characters of both fibrous gypsum and selenite. No anhydrous sulphate of lime (anhydrite) has been found in connection with the great gypsum deposit, nor elsewhere in Iowa, so far as yet known.

SULPHATE OF STRONTIA. (Celestine).

The only locality at which this interesting mineral has yet been found in Iowa, or so far as is known, in the great valley of the Mississippi, is at Fort Dodge. It occurs there in very small quantity in both the shales of the lower coal-measures and in the clays that overlie the gypsum deposit and which are regarded as of the same age with it. The first is just below the city, near Rees' coal-bank and occurs as a layer intercalated among the coal-measure shales, amounting in quantity to only a few hundred pounds weight. The mineral is fibrous and crystalline, the fibres being perpendicular to the plane of the layer. Breaking also with more or less distinct horizontal planes of cleavage it resembles, in physical characters the layer of fibro-crystaline gypsum before mentioned. Its color is light blue, is transparent and shows crystaline facets upon both the upper and under surfaces of the layer; those of the upper surface being smallest and most numerous. It breaks up readily into small masses along the lines of the perpendicular fibres or columns. The layer is probably not more than a rod in extent in any direction and about three inches in maximum thickness. Apparent lines of stratification occur in it, corresponding with those of the shales which imbed it.

The other deposit was still smaller in amount, and occurred as a mass of crystals imbedded in the clays that overlie the gypsum at Cummins' quarry in the valley of Soldier Creek, upon the north side of town. The mineral is in this case nearly colorless, and but for the form of the separate crystals would closely resemble masses of impure salt. The crystals are so closely aggregated that they enclose but little impurity in the mass, but in almost all cases their fundamental forms are obscured. This mineral has almost no real practical value, and its occurrence, as described, is interesting only as a mineralogical fact.

SULPHATE OF BARYTA.—(Barytes, Heavy Spar).

This mineral has been found in only minute quantities in Iowa. It has been detected in the coal-measure shales of Decatur, Madison and Marion Counties; the Devonian limestone of Johnson and Bremer Counties and in the lead caves of Dubuque. In all these cases, it is in the form of crystals or small crystalline masses.

SULPHATE OF MAGNESIA.—(Epsomite).

Epsomite, or native epsom salts, having been discovered near Burlington, we have thus recognized in Iowa all the sulphates of the Alkaline earths of natural origin; all of them, except the sulphate of lime, being in very small quantity. Even if the sulphate of magnesia were produced in nature, in large quantities, it is so very soluble that it can accumulate only in such positions as afford it complete shelter from the rains or running water. The epsomite mentioned, was found beneath the overhanging cliffs of Burlington limestone, near Starr's mill, which are represented in the sketch upon another page, illustrating the sub-carboniferous rocks. It occurs in the form of efflorescent encrustations upon the surfaces of stones and in similar small fragile masses among the fine debris that has fallen down beneath the overhanging cliff. The projection of the cliff over the perpendicular face of the strata beneath amounts to near twenty feet at the point where epsomite was found. Consequently the rains never reach far beneath it from any quarter. The rock upon which the epsomite accumulates is an impure limestone containing also some carbonate of magnesia, together with a small proportion of iron pyrites in a finely divided condition. It is doubtless by double decomposition of these that the epsomite results. By experiments with this native salt in the office of the Survey, a fine article of epsom salts was produced, but the quantity that might be annually obtained there would amount to only a few pounds, and of course is of no practical value whatever, on account of its cheapness in the market.

CLIMATOLOGY.

No extended record of the climatology of Iowa has been made, yet much of great value may be learned from observations made at a single point. Professor T. S. Parvin, of the State University, has recorded observations made from 1839 to the present time. Previous to 1860 these observations were made at Muscatine. Since that date they were made at Iowa City. The result is that the atmospheric conditions of the climate of Iowa are in the highest degree favorable to health.

The following table will show the annual mean at the three hours named, and the annual maximum and mean temperatures from 1839 to 1870:

The following table will show the temperature of the seasons from 1850 to 1869:

SEASONS.	TEMPERATURE.	MONTHS NEAREST SEASONS.
Spring	47° 44′	April	48° 50′
Summer	70° 37′	August	70° 70′
Autumn	44° 52′	October	49° 50′
Winter	23° 37′	December	23° 25′
Year	47° 57′

RANGE of TEMPERATURE.

Highest—99° 00′, August 31, 1854.
Lowest — 30° 00′, January 18, 1857.
Range —129° 00′.

The highest temperature here occurs in August, while July is the hottest month in the year by two degrees, and January the coldest by three degrees.

The mean temperatures of April and October most nearly correspond to the mean temperature of the year, as well as their seasons of Spring and Fall, while that of Summer and Winter is best represented in that of August and December.

The period of greatest heat ranges from June 22 to August 31; the next mean time being July 27. The lowest temperature extends from December 16 to February 15, the average being January 20—the range in each case being two full months.

The following table will show the

It will be seen by the foregoing table no snow has fallen in May, June, July, August and September, while there was rain in each month of the year.

The monthly and annual quantity of rain and snow—also the quantity of snow—from 1848 to 1869, reduced to inches, will be shown by the following table:

The mean amount, 44.27 inches, for rain and snow, is greater than meteorologists on the seaboard have been led to expect. August is the month in which the greatest amount falls, and January the least. The greatest fall of snow for a month was December, 1848, 29.52 inches; for the year 1868, 61.97 inches. The least in any year, 1850, when only 7.90 fell. The most snow falls in December.

The greatest fall of rain, 10.71 inches, was August 10, 1851, in four hours; wind N. E.

The earliest snow, October 17, 1859; latest, April 29, 1851; greatest, December 21, 1848, when the fall was 20.50. December 28, 1863, 15.10 inches fell in twelve hours.

The rain winds are from the southwest, directly opposite to the rain winds of the Atlantic coast. Twenty per cent. of the rainy days are accompanied with N. N. E. winds; 18 per cent. by E. S. E. winds; 42 per cent by S. S. W. winds; and 18 per cent. by W. N. W. winds; and 62 per cent. occur with winds from a westerly course.

The number of clear days in relation to the whole number for twenty years, are 32 per cent; variable, 46 per cent.; cloudy, 22 per cent.

The relation of clear days to the direction of the wind, for 20 years, was 17.5 when wind N. N. E.; 22.9 when wind E. S. E.; 32.3 when wind S. S. W.; 36.4 when wind W. N. W. Thus the greatest number of rainy days occur when the wind is S. S. W.; while the clear days occur when it is W. N. W.

The distribution of rain throughout the seasons, Winter, Spring, Summer and Fall from 1850 to 1869, was as follows:

Winter, total, 117.29 inches; mean, 5.86 inches.
Spring, total, 237.11 inches; mean, 11.85 inches.
Summer, total, 278.06 inches; mean, 13.90 inches.
Fall, total, 216.73 inches; mean, 10.83 inches.

Winter taken as unit, as 1.00, 2.02, 2.38, 1.88.

The mean time for late frost from 1839 to 1869 was May 5; early in the Fall, September 24. The latest in the Spring was May 26, 1847; the earliest, August 29, 1863. In this year frost occurred each month; October was very cold. But once or twice during the last thirty years has the frost, over a great area, injured the corn in Iowa. When the Spring is late, the Fall is either hot, or lengthened so as to afford the crop to mature.

The mean time for fruit trees to bloom in this state is May 5, and as that late frosts is May 4, it will be seen that young buds are often injured in Spring, and a partial loss occurs, but fruit growers are adapting the culture to facts, and Iowa is fast becoming a fruit growing state. The following is the mean, earliest and latest flowering of fruit trees, from 1848 to 1869:

	Apple.	Cherry.	Plum.	Pear.	Quince.

The peach is winter killed in this state to such an extent as to be valueless.

To show the length of the winters, the average time of closing of the Mississippi river at Muscatine for twenty years was December 23; of opening, February 26; the mean number of days closed was 67, or a little over two months.

The array of facts here presented will, it is hoped, prove of interest not only for the residents of, but all interested in this State, as furnishing data from which a comparison may be drawn as to the difference in the temperature, amount of rain-fall, the source thereof, etc., etc., as also their distribution through the several seasons of the year. Eastern meteorologists have been greatly surprised at the large amount of rain and snow-fall in the valley, overlooking the fact that there the rain winds are N.E., here S.W. The amount precipitated has not diminished since the first settlement of the country, and probably will not, as the area covered by timber has not decreased with the settlements of the State and is not likely to in the future; on the contrary, is increasing and will continue to increase with the growth of settlements, in age and extent. The peculiarities of our soil and climate are such that the past thirty-five years have demonstrated that our state can endure an extreme of drought or rain with as little or less loss than any other cultivated region of our country.

The climate of Iowa embraces the range of that of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. The seasons are not characterized by the frequent and sudden changes so common in latitudes further south. The temperature of the winters is somewhat lower than states eastward, but of other seasons it is higher. The atmosphere is dry and invigorating. The surface of the State being free at all seasons of the year from stagnant water, with good breezes at nearly all seasons, the miasmatic and pulmonary diseases are unknown. Mortuary statistics show this to be one of the most healthful states in the Union, being one death to every ninety-four persons. The Spring, Summer, and Fall months are delightful; indeed, the glory of Iowa is her Autumn, and nothing can transcend the splendor of her Indian Summer, which lasts for weeks, and finally blends, almost imperceptibly, into Winter.

History of the State of Iowa.

By W. W. CLAYTON.

At the beginning of the present century the territory now embraced in the State of Iowa belonged to the Spanish province of Louisiana. The United States, at the close of the Revolution, was bounded on the west by the Mississippi River, from its source to the thirty-first parallel of north latitude, which was the dividing line between the United States and the Spanish possessions in Florida and on the Gulf of Mexico. Spain, through her agent, Ferdinand de Soto, the conqueror of Florida, had discovered the Mississippi at the mouth of the Washita in the Spring of 1542, and after the sudden death of De Soto, in May of that year, his followers had constructed a vessel, and in July, 1543, descended the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico. Thus the mouth of the Mississippi was discovered by the Spanish explorers, one hundred and thirty years prior to the discovery of its upper valley by the French missionaries.

By virtue of this discovery and the conquest of Florida, Spain claimed the country bordering on the Mississippi and the Gulf of Mexico, but made no permanent establishment within its borders. According to the policy of European nations, with reference to territory discovered in America, it was held that the discovery of a country gave the nation by whose agency or authority the discovery had been made, a title to the soil, but that title must be consummated by possession; and Spain having made no permanent settlement in the lower Mississippi valley, the country was left to be re-discovered and taken possession of by the French at a later period.

In this great enterprise the French missionaries from Canada led the way, penetrating the Indian countries from Quebec along all the waters of the St. Lawrence and the great chain of northern lakes to the Mississippi, and establishing missions and trading posts among all the tribes of the Northwest. This movement began in 1611, when La Caron, a Franciscan friar, the friend and companion of Champlain, the father of French settlements in Canada, journeyed to the rivers of Lake Huron on foot and paddling a bark canoe. After the restoration of Quebec by the English in 1632, and the establishment of the Government of New France under the charter of Louis XIII, the great work of converting the nations, and enlarging the boundaries of French dominion in America, was transferred from the Franciscans to the rival order of Jesuits.

Burning with zeal, and animated by a spirit of self sacrifice that has never been paralleled in the history of missions, they penetrated the wilds of the Canadian frontiers, and carried the cross to the remotest tribes in the Mississippi Valley. "The history of their labors," says Bancroft, "is connected with the origin of every celebrated town in the annals of French America; not a cape was turned, nor a river entered, but a Jesuit led the way."

In 1634, the Jesuits Brebeuf and Daniels, followed by Lallemand, made their way to the West. They had joined a party of Hurons returning from Quebec, and after undergoing untold fatigues and sufferings by lakes, rivers and forests, penetrated to the heart of the Huron wilderness. Near the shores of Lake Iroquois, northwest of Lake Toronto, was raised the first house of the Society of Jesus, and soon two villages named St. Louis and St. Ignatius sprang up among the Huron forests. The mission of Brebeuf gave to the world a knowledge of the water courses of the St. Lawrence Valley, and from the map published in 1660, it appears that the Jesuits had examined the country from the waters of the Niagara to the head of Lake Superior, and had gained some knowledge of Lake Michigan. But these advantages were gained at the cost of the martyrdom of the missionaries by their savage enemies.

The hostility of the Five Nations prevented the access of Raymbault and Picard to the West in 1640, but the following year, at a great Feast of the Dead, held by the Algonquins at Lake Nipising, the Jesuits were invited to visit the nation of the Chippewas, at Sault Sainte Marie; and on the 17th of September, 1641, we find Fathers Raymbault and Jogues, the first envoys from Christendom, leaving the Bay of Penetanguishene in a bark canoe for the appointed place of meeting, where, after a passage of seventeen days, they met two thousand Indians assembled to receive them. In this great convention the worthy fathers learned of many unknown nations; they here first heard of the Sioux, living eighteen days journey to the west, beyond the Great Lake, then without a name. Thus "the French were looking towards the homes of the Sioux, in the great Valley of the Mississippi, five years before the New England Eliot had addressed the tribes of Indians that dwelt within six miles of Boston harbor." In the ardor of his enthusiasm for discovery, Raymbault expected to reach the "ocean that divides America from China;" but he sickened and died in the wilderness in 1642.

In August, 1654, two fur traders joined a band of Ottawas, and ventured on a western voyage "five hundred leagues." In two years they returned, accompanied by fifty canoes, and two hundred and fifty natives. They described the vast lakes and rivers of the West, and the tribes whose homes stretched away to the Northern Sea, and spoke of the Sioux who dwelt beyond Lake Superior, and demanded commerce with the whites. Traders pressed forward to Green Bay; two of them passed the Winter of 1659 on the banks of Lake Superior. In 1660, the Bishop of Quebec sent Father Mesnard, who reached the south shore of Lake Superior in the month of October, and eight months after, while crossing the Keweena Portage to visit the Hurons at the Isle of St. Michael, he was lost in the forest, and never more seen.

In September, 1665, Pierre Claud Allouez reached the Falls of St. Mary, and entered Lake Superior; sailing along the southern shore in the vain search for masses of pure copper, of which he had heard from the Indians, he came at length upon the great village of the Chippewas, at Chegoincegon. Here a grand council was held of ten or twelve of the different Indian nations. The Pottawattomies of Lake Michigan, the Sacs and Foxes of the West, the Hurons from north of the lakes, the Illinois from the south, the Sioux from the land of the prairie and wild rice, all were assembled. The Illinois told of their ancient glory, and diminished numbers in consequence of wars with the Sioux on one side and the Iroquois on the other. They told about their noble river on which they dwelt, and their boundless prairies, over which roamed the deer and the buffalo; the Sioux told about the great river on which they dwelt; and to these assembled nations Allouez promised commerce, and the protection of the French nation against their enemies.

The explorations and discoveries thus briefly summarized, lead us to the expedition of Marquette and Joliet, wherein Iowa was first discovered, coetaneously with the rest of the Mississippi on both sides, from the mouth of the Wisconsin to the mouth of the Arkansas.

The purpose of discovering the Mississippi, about which the nations had told so much, seems to have originated with Marquette in 1669. The year previous, Marquette and Claud Dablon had established the Mission of St. Mary's, the oldest settlement begun by Europeans within the bounds of the present State of Michigan. During the interval of delay which preceded the carrying out of his purpose, Marquette spent his time in studying the language of the Illinois Indians, among whom he expected chiefly to travel.

Circumstances at this time were favorable to such an undertaking. The protection afforded to the Algonquins of the West by the commerce with France had confirmed their attachment, and created a political interest which extended to Colbert and the French Ministry. The Intendant, Talon, determined to spread the power of France to the utmost borders of Canada, and for this purpose Nicholas Perrot was dispatched to the West as the agent of Talon, to propose a Congress of Indian Nations at St. Mary's. The invitation was extended far and near. Perrot arrived at Green Bay, and, escorted by Pottawattomies, repaired on a mission of friendship to the Miamis at Chicago. The day appointed arrived in May, 1671, and at that date was assembled at the Falls of St. Mary a great Congress of Indian Nations, gathered from all parts of the Northwest, from the head springs of the St. Lawrence, the Mississippi, and the Red River, and it was announced that they were placed under the protection of the French Government.

In the same year Marquette gathered the remains of one branch of the Hurons at Point St. Ignace, which establishment was long considered the key to the West. The countries south of this had been explored by Allouez and Dablon, who had borne the cross through western Wisconsin and northern Illinois, visiting the Musquotines and Kickapoos on the Milwaukee, and the Miamis at the head of Lake Michigan, and extending their journeys to the Foxes on the river of the same name, fearless of danger and indefatigable in religious zeal.

The grand enterprise of discovering the Great River of the West was now at hand. On the 13th of May, 1673, Marquette and Joliet, with five assistant French Canadians, set out from their Mission on the daring and adventurous enterprise of exploring the country and discovering the nations of the unknown West. The Indians gathered to witness their departure were astonished at the boldness of the undertaking, and endeavored to dissuade them by representing the Indians of the Mississippi as exceedingly savage and cruel, and the river itself full of all sorts of frightful monsters, ready to swallow the men and their canoes together. But nothing daunted by these terrifying descriptions, Marquette told them he was willing to lay down his life for the cause in which the salvation of souls was concerned; and having prayed together, they separated.

By the way of Green Bay the adventurers entered Fox River, which they ascended till they came to a village of the Miamis and Kickapoos, the extreme point to which the explorations of the French had yet extended, where Marquette was delighted to find "a beautiful cross planted in the middle of the town, ornamented with white skins, red girdles, and bows and arrows, which those good people had offered to the great Manitou, or God, to thank him for the pity he had bestowed on them during the winter, in having given them an abundant chase." Here Marquette drank of mineral waters, and was taught the secret of a root which cures the bite of the venomous rattlesnake. He assembled the chiefs and old men of the village, and told them that Joliet had been sent on the part of the Governor of Canada to discover new countries, and he himself on the part of God, to spread the light of the holy Evangelists, and that in this work he feared not death itself, to which he was exposed in his perilous journeys.

Two Miami guides were here furnished to conduct them to the Wisconsin River, and they set out from the Indian village on the 10th of June. A great crowd of natives was present to witness their departure upon their hazardous expedition. After conducting them across the Portage, the guides returned. The explorers descended the Wisconsin to the Mississippi, and proceeded down its unknown waters.

It has been noticed as a remarkable fact, that the first Indians Marquette and Joliet discovered after leaving the Portage between the Fox and the Wisconsin rivers, were in Iowa — probably on the Des Moines River. The narrative proceeds: On the 25th of June, footsteps and a path were perceived on the western bank. Leaving their men to guard the canoes, Marquette and Joliet fearlessly followed these indications of human beings, and after a walk of six miles discovered a village on the banks of a river, and two others on the rising ground about half a league distant. They boldly penetrated into the village, and were received with great astonishment by the inhabitants, as they were unquestionably the first Europeans who had ever trod the soil of what is now Iowa. The calumet, or peace pipe, with its accompanying hospitalities, was freely tendered them by the Indians. They were informed that this band was a part of the nation of the Illinois. The river Des Moines they called Mon-in-gou-ma, which was also the name of their village. The adventurers stayed six days with their new friends, obtaining information respecting their customs, and were then accompanied to their canoes by the chiefs and hundreds of warriors. Marquette was presented with the sacred calumet, the mysterious arbiter of peace and war, and safeguard among the nations, and with these tokens of friendship, embarked for the rest of his journey.

It is not our purpose to follow Marquette and Joliet farther than to connect their voyage of exploration with the discovery of IOWA. The rest of their excursion down the river, and their return by the way of the Illinois and Chicago rivers to the Lakes, is well known, and belongs more properly to the history of another state. Enough has been said to show consecutively the order of events which led to the visit of the first white men on these shores on the 25th of June, 1673, more than two hundred years ago.

The re-discovery of the Lower Mississippi remained for the gallant, daring, and indefatigable LaSalle, to whose labors, privations and enterprises the French settlements in the Mississippi Valley were largely indebted. LaSalle was a poor man, having in youth relinquished his patrimony by entering the College of the Jesuits, which, however, he retired from with honor, and in 1667 appeared as a fur trader, near the site of the present City of Montreal, in which capacity he explored the lakes — Ontario and Erie. Full of enthusiasm for discovery, and the colonization of the West, he repaired to France, where he received the rank of nobility, and valuable grants of land at Fort Frontenac, now Kingston, Dominion of Canada. Returning in 1678, he settled at Fort Frontenac. In that year he conveyed a party from the Fort to the vicinity of Niagara Falls, in a boat of ten tons, which was the first that ever sailed up the Niagara River. In 1679 he built a vessel of seventy tons burden, above the Falls of Niagara, and on the 7th of August, amidst the astonishment of the Indians, the chant of the Te Deum and the discharge of artillery, unfurled his sails to the breezes of Lake Erie. Passing over the Lake and through Detroit River into Lake Huron, he sailed thence to Mackinaw, where he constructed a trading house, and entering Lake Michigan, he at length cast anchor in Green Bay. LaSalle named his vessel the "Griffin," in honor of the arms of Frontenac, Governor of Canada. He expected to employ her in a regular commerce with the Indians, and in bringing supplies for his colony in Illinois, but in this he was doomed to disappointment. Having loaded the "Griffin" with furs and peltries, and ordered her return to the Niagara River, LaSalle repaired to the head of Lake Michigan, and passing up the St. Joseph's River, discovered a portage over swamps and logs to the Kankakee, which he descended to the Illinois. He first met with the natives at Lake Peoria, with whom he formed an alliance, and learning the direction of the Mississippi to its mouth, received the promise of guides to conduct him thither.

But here misfortunes began to overtake the brave LaSalle. His vessel was wrecked on her return voyage down the lakes, his cargo of furs lost, and his expected store of supplies for colonization cut off. In this extremity his men became discontented and threatened to desert him. Yet under these discouraging circumstances his indomitable courage and energy did not forsake him. He erected a fort below Lake Peoria, which he named Crevecœur — Broken Heart; he sent Hennepin on his noted voyage of discovery up the Mississippi, and set his men to work in the construction of a barge with which to descend the river. But as sails and cordage were necessary to his contemplated trip, he determined on endeavoring to reach the nearest French settlement, fifteen hundred miles distant, on foot, in the depth of winter, without food or drink except such as the chase or the brooks would supply, and with only three traveling companions. But in all his plans for future action, he succeeded only where he held personal supervision. During his absence to Fort Frontenac, Tonti, whom he had left in command, with instructions to build a new fort on the bluff near the Indian village, being surprised by the Indians, deserted and fled to a village of the Pottawattomies, on Lake Michigan. On LaSalle's return he found his fort abandoned. He spent some time in searching for Tonti and his men, but could find no trace of them; and finally, after being delayed a whole year, he succeeded in carrying out his great undertaking. He descended the Mississippi to the sea, and took formal possession of the whole country watered by the great river from its source to its mouth, in the name of the King of France, April 9, 1682.

Thus was the Mississippi re-discovered and taken possession of as French territory. Meantime Hennepin had discovered the Upper Valley to the Falls of St. Anthony. LaSalle named the Territory of the Mississippi "Louisiana," in honor of Louis XIV; the Mississippi he named "Colbert," after the French Minister. He erected a column and a cross at the mouth of the great river, bearing the inscription: "LOUIS THE GREAT, KING OF FRANCE AND NAVARRE, REIGNING APRIL 9TH, 1682." He ascertained the three channels by which the river entered the Gulf, in latitude about twenty-seven degrees, and in May, 1683, returned to Quebec for the purpose of sailing to France. He visited France, and in 1685, returned with a fleet and emigrants, for the purpose of colonizing the country, and sailed into the Gulf of Mexico. Here he met with unexpected difficulties, for the mouth of the river was not easily found from the Gulf, and beating about in search of it without success, he was finally abandoned by Beaujeau, who commanded a portion of the fleet, the latter deserting him and returning to France. LaSalle, with his store ship and two hundred and thirty passengers, was driven ashore and wrecked on Matagorda Bay. Hastily constructing a fort out of the fragments of his stranded vessel, LaSalle formed the nucleus of a settlement which he named St. Louis. That settlement, as it were by accident, on Matagorda Bay, made Texas a part of Louisiana.

After a fruitless search of four months for the mouth of the Mississippi in canoes, LaSalle, in April, 1686, turned his steps towards New Mexico, with twenty companions, in hope of discovering the rich mines of St. Barbe, the fabled El Dorado of Northern Mexico. Returning once more, he found his little colony reduced to about forty, and he then resolved to travel to his settlement in Illinois and to Canada on foot, and to return with emigrants and supplies for the renewal of his colony in Texas. Accordingly, on the 12th of January, 1687, he departed with sixteen men, leaving his fort and settlement in charge of Sieuer Barbier. The travelers passed the basin of the Colorado, and had reached a branch of the Trinity River; and here, on the 20th of March, 1687, the daring, adventurous, and unfortunate LaSalle was assassinated by three of his own companions.

Thus perished the father of French settlements in the Mississippi Valley. His biographer says truly of him: "Not a hint appears in any writer that has come under our notice that casts a shade upon his integrity and honor. Cool and intrepid at all times, never yielding for a moment to despair, or even to despondency, he bore the heavy burdens of his calamities to the end; and his hopes only expired with his last breath. To him must be mainly ascribed the discovery of the vast regions of the Mississippi Valley, and the subsequent occupation and settlement of them by the French; and his name justly holds a prominent place among those which adorn the history of civilization in the New World."

We shall briefly trace the progress of events in Louisiana till this immense country came into possession of the United States by purchase from France.

At the close of the 17th century, France, by right of discovery and occupancy, claimed not only New France and Acadia (Nova Scotia), Hudson's Bay and Newfoundland, but portions of Maine, Vermont and New York, together with the whole Valley of the Mississippi, and possessions on the Gulf of Mexico, including Texas as far as the Rio del Norte. The English Revolution of 1688, and the peace of Ryswick, in 1697, did not affect the possessions of France in America; for notwithstanding the reverses of war, she retained at the close all the territory she had at the beginning, except a portion of eastern Newfoundland, relinquished to the English as a fishing ground. At this period none of the French possessions in America occupied the attention of the Ministry so much as Louisiana. In 1697, M. D'Iberville aroused the attention of the French Government to the colony, and inspired the Count de Ponchartrain with the design of constructing a fort at the mouth of the Mississippi, which D'Iberville promised himself to discover. Accordingly, two vessels were fitted out for this purpose, the command of one of which was given to the Marquis Chateaumorand, the other to D'Iberville. They sailed in October, 1698; in January, 1699, they touched at Pensacola; March 2d, they entered the mouth of the Mississippi. M. Chateaumorand returned to St. Domingo; D'Iberville ascended the river as far as Bayagoulas. Here an incident occurred relating to LaSalle and Tonti which is very remarkable. On the arrival of D'Iberville up the river he was met by an Indian chief, who handed him a letter written by Tonti, and addressed to M. De LaSalle, Governor of Louisiana. It read as follows:

"SIR:—Having found the posts on which you had set up the King's arms thrown down by the driftwood, I caused another one to be fixed on this side, about seven leagues from the sea, where I have left a letter in a tree by the side of it. All the nations have smoked the calumet with me; they are people who fear us exceedingly since you had captured this village.

"I conclude by saying it is a great grief to me that we shall return with the ill fortune of not having found you, after we had coasted with two canoes thirty leagues on the Mexican side, and twenty-five on that of Florida."

The receipt of this letter was twelve years after the death of LaSalle, and nineteen years after he and Tonti had parted at Lake Peoria. Neither knew what had become of the other; both had in turn sought for each other without success. The letter is interesting, not only as having been preserved for so long a time by the Indian chief, but as throwing light on the fate of Tonti, who, it appears, had been quite a successful explorer among the Indians, and had so far followed the track of LaSalle as to find his pillar at the mouth of the Mississippi, and search for him along the Gulf coast.

D'Iberville returned to the Bay of Biloxi, between the Mississippi and the Mobile rivers, where he built a fort, which became the nucleus of a settlement, and finally the foundation of the Commonwealth of Mississippi. From this period, trading posts, missionary stations and settlements began to increase in various parts of the country. As early as 1712 land titles were issued in Kaskaskia, and deeds and titles came into use to designate the acquisition of private property. Traders at this and other settlements opened commerce with the remote port on Mobile Bay, and regular intercourse was established between Quebec on the north and Louisiana on the south.

Settlements continued to be formed on the Mississippi below the mouth of the Illinois. The French resolved to circumvent the English Provinces on the Atlantic coast by the establishment of a cordon of military posts, extending from the lakes of Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. This had been suggested by LaSalle on his visit to Paris in 1684. His plans were now about to be adopted for the purpose of occupying the great Valley of the Mississippi before the English settlers could cross the mountains from their Atlantic colonies. Some of these plans were carried into execution. Fort Chartres was constructed on the east side of the Mississippi, sixty-five miles below the mouth of the Missouri, and was designed to be one of the strongest places on the Continent. A hundred years afterwards its massive ruins could be seen overgrown with trees and vines almost impenetrable to the traveler. For many years Fort Chartres was the most celebrated fortress in all the Mississippi Valley. It was the headquarters of the Commandant of Louisiana, and the centre of wealth and fashion of the West.

Soon after the construction of this celebrated fort, the villages of Cahokia, Prairie de Rocher and others sprang into note. As early as 1721 the Jesuits had established a college and a monastery in Kaskaskia.

At this period the French dominion of Louisiana was claimed to embrace all the territory on the Mississippi and its tributary waters. It stretched to the head springs of the Alleghany, the Monongahela, the Kanawha and the Tennessee. Half a mile from the southern branch of the Savannah River is Herbert's Spring, which flows to the Mississippi, and strangers who drank out of that spring would say they had tasted French waters. "France," says Bancroft, "had obtained, under Providence, the guardianship of this immense district of country, not, as it proved, for her own benefit, but rather as a trustee for the infant nation by which it was one day to be inherited."

By the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, France ceded to England her possessions in Hudson's Bay, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. England also obtained supremacy in the fisheries, and stipulations that France should not molest the Five Nations, subject to the dominion of Great Britain, France still retained Louisiana; but the province had so far failed to meet the expectations of the crown and the people that a change in the government and policy of the country was deemed indispensable. Accordingly, in 1711, the province was placed in the hands of a Governor General, with headquarters at Mobile. But this scheme only lasted one year, and in 1712 another change was made. The resources of the province were transferred to individual enterprise. A charter was granted to Anthony Crozat, a wealthy merchant of Paris, giving him the entire control and monopoly of all the trade and resources of Louisiana. But this scheme also failed. Crozat met with no success in his commercial operations; every Spanish harbor on the Gulf was closed against his vessels; the occupation of Louisiana was deemed an encroachment on Spanish territory; and Spain looked with jealousy on the ambition of the French. Having failed with the Spaniards, Crozat sought to develop the internal resources of Louisiana by causing trading posts to be opened, and explorations to be made to its remotest borders. But he actually accomplished nothing for the advancement of the colony. The only prosperity which it ever possessed grew out of the enterprise of humble individuals, who had succeeded in instituting a little barter between themselves and the natives, and a petty trade with neighboring European settlements. These small sources of profit were cut off by the profitless and fatal monopoly of the Parisian merchant. The Indians were too numerous to be resisted by his factors; the English gradually appropriated the trade of the natives; and every Frenchman in Louisiana, except his agents, fomented opposition to his exclusive privileges. In all his calculations and expectations, Crozat was doomed to sad disappointment, and after nearly three years spent in fruitless negotiations with the Spanish viceroy of Mexico relative to commercial intercourse with the Spanish ports of the Gulf, and after much delay, vexation and expense, his vessels were finally prohibited from trading in any of the Spanish ports. He then attempted to institute commercial relations by land for supplying the interior settlements of New Mexico, but his goods were seized and his agents imprisoned; and after a persevering effort of nearly five years, he surrendered his charter in August, 1717.

The national government of France becoming seriously involved in debt, and the colonies nearly bankrupt, the famous scheme of John Law, called the "Bank of France," or in its relation to Louisiana, "The Mississippi Company," was inaugurated in 1717, immediately upon the surrender of the charter of Crozat. The legal existence of this scheme was limited to twenty-five years. The charter conferred upon the Company more extensive powers and privileges than those which had been granted to Crozat. It invested them with the exclusive privilege of the entire commerce of Louisiana, and of New France, and with authority to enforce their rights. The Company was authorized to monopolize all the trade in the country; to make treaties with the Indians; to declare and prosecute war; to grant lands, erect forts, open mines of precious metals, levy taxes, nominate civil officers, commission those of the army, and to appoint and remove judges, to cast cannon, and build and equip ships of war. All this was to be done, not on a basis of hard money, but with the paper currency of John Law's Bank of France. He had succeeded in getting His Majesty the French King to adopt and sanction his scheme of financial operations both in France and in the colonies, and probably there never was such a huge financial bubble ever blown by a visionary theorist. Still, such was the condition of France, that it was accepted as a national deliverance. Orders were given to the officers of the revenue in all parts of the kingdom to receive the currency without discount in the payment of taxes, and this, together with its convenience, and the quickness and punctuality of payment, soon brought it into great repute. In a little while it rose to one per cent. above par; its advantages became so apparent, that on the fourth of December, 1718, the bank was declared to be a Royal Bank of France, thenceforward to be administered in the name of the King. In May, 1719, the Company obtained from the Regent a monopoly of the trade with the East Indies, China and the South Seas, and thus enlarged, it changed its original name to the "Company of the Indias," at the same time creating fifty thousand additional shares of stock at an increased price. In July, 1719, the National Mint was made over to it. In August following it assumed the forming of all the taxes of the nation. Other interests quickly followed; so that before the end of 1719 the Company of the Indias had incorporated within itself nearly every commercial and financial interest of the country. Law was now the most powerful man in France. He became a Catholic, and was appointed Comptroller General of Finance.

Among the first operations of the Company was to send eight hundred emigrants to Louisiana, who arrived at Dauphine Island in 1718. For the future home of these, and the capital of the country, Bienville had selected the site of New Orleans. But he had brought over a very poor class of people to build a city. At the end of three years the place was still a wilderness, where two hundred of the emigrants had only encamped in the unsubdued cane brakes. Of the eight hundred brought out by Bienville, some perished for want of enterprise, others from the sickliness of the climate. Instead of ascending the river in ships, they all blindly disembarked on the miserable coast, to make their way as best they could to the lands that had been ceded to them.

The Mississippi scheme was at its full height in January, 1720; the following May bankruptcy was declared. The French people had remained faithful to the gigantic delusion till France was impoverished, public and private credit subverted, the income of capitalists swallowed up, and labor left without employment. The effect on the colony of Louisiana was most disastrous. The search for mines of immense and fabulous wealth, which were supposed to exist in the country, occupied the chief attention of the French, to the exclusion of the development of wealth in the cultivation of the soil, and permanent improvements. The contrast between the French colonists of Louisiana and the descendants of the English, who have since built up populous and prosperous states within the territory, is in this respect most marked. The latter have achieved their success in making the wilderness a fruitful field by each man having his home and his farm, and being content to develop his immediate surroundings by agriculture, manufactures and the mechanic arts. This mode of life, which has made the descendants of the English the colonists of America, was little understood or practiced by the French inhabitants of Louisiana. They were constantly deluded by the imagination of rich and valuable mines, which were never discovered, although much time and money were spent in the search for them.

In 1719, Philipe Francis Renault arrived in Illinois with two hundred miners and artisans. He had been appointed Director General of the mines of Louisiana. The extent of country explored for mines at that time embraced the head waters of the Minnesota, the Arkansas, the tributaries of the Missouri, and even extended to the Rocky Mountains.

The war between France and Spain at this time made it probable that the Mississippi Valley might become the theater of Spanish hostilities against the French settlements; and to prevent this, as well as to extend French claims, a chain of forts was begun, to keep open the connection between the mouth and the sources of the Mississippi. Fort Orleans, high up the Missouri River, was erected as an outpost in 1720. The Lower Mississippi had also been threatened by the Spaniards, and it became apparent to the Western Company, and also to Bienville, the royal commandant, that the western bank of the river should be protected. At this time a complete survey of the mouth of the Mississippi, with all its bars, passes and channels below New Orleans, was made by M. Pauger, a royal engineer. It was thought beyond a doubt that shipping could be brought up the river to the site selected by Bienville, and it was decided to make New Orleans a commercial port. Accordingly, the Mississippi Company removed its principal depot and offices to New Orleans, now about to become the great commercial city of Louisiana.

While this was going on in Lower Louisiana, the region about the lakes was the theater of Indian hostilites, rendering the passage from Canada to Louisiana extremely dangerous for many years. The English had not only extended their Indian trade into the vicinity of the French settlements, but through their friends the Iroquois, had gained an ascendancy over the Foxes, a fierce and powerful tribe, of Iroquois descent, whom they incited to hostilities against the French. The Foxes began their hostilities with the siege of Detroit in 1712, a siege which they continued for nineteen consecutive days, and although the expedition resulted in diminishing their numbers and humbling their pride, yet it was not until after several successive campaigns, embodying the best military resources of New France, had been directed against them, that they were finally defeated at the great battles of Butte des Morts, and on the Wisconsin River, and driven west in 1746.

The nation of the Natchez had their villages on the banks of the Lower Mississippi, among the most fertile plains of the southwest. They were a people differing somewhat from the rest of the Indians of the Mississippi Valley — a sort of semi-civilized connecting link between the Aztecs of Mexico and the entirely barbarous savages of North America. The French who resided among them coveted their soil; one Chopart demanded for a plantation the site of one of their principal villages. The Natchez, in council with the Chickasaws and Choctaws, decided upon a general massacre of the French intruders. On the morning of the 28th of November, 1729, the work of blood began, and before noon nearly every Frenchman in the colony was murdered. The news spread terror and dismay into New Orleans; each house was supplied with arms, and the city was speedily fortified by a ditch. The number of the citizens at that time was about four thousand, and two thousand negro slaves. The French forces were assembled on the bank of the river, and placed under command of Lubois. The famous explorer, Le Sueur, was then in New Orleans. He immediately repaired to the country of the Choctaws, won them to his aid, and was followed across the country by seven hundred warriors, arriving first at the villages of the Natchez. On the morning of the 29th of January, 1730, the Choctaws made an attack upon the Natchez village, and, losing only two of their men, brought off sixty scalps and eighteen prisoners. Lubois arrived on the 8th of February, and completed the work of victory. Some of the surviving Natchez fled for protection to the neighboring tribes; the remainder crossed the Mississippi. Both parties were pursued, and their places of refuge taken. Their chief, Great Sun, and some four hundred prisoners, were shipped to Hispaniola and sold as slaves. Thus ended the nation of the Natchez, which is now numbered among the extinct races.

The Company of the Indias having found that the cost of defending Louisiana exceeded the returns from its commerce, sought wealth by conquest or traffic on the coast of Guinea and Hindostan, and solicited leave to surrender the Mississippi wilderness to the home government. Accordingly, on the 10th of April, 1732, the jurisdiction and control over the commerce reverted to the crown of France. The Company had held possession of Louisiana fourteen years. In 1735, Bienville re-appeared to assume command for the King.

To secure the eastern valley of the Mississippi, and protect the connection between the Illinois country and New Orleans, it became necessary to subdue the Chickasaws, who had ever been the dreaded enemies of the French. D'Artaguette, a young and chivalrous officer who held command in Illinois, in 1736, summoned the tribes to meet at Fort Chartres, and the friendly chiefs, with Chicago, chief of the Illinois, at their head, descended to New Orleans, and presented the pipe of peace to the Governor. When it was decided to commence the campaign against the Chickasaws, Bienville gave orders for the whole force of the colony at the south, with D'Artaguette and his command, to meet him on the 10th of May, 1736, in the country of the enemy. For some cause the two branches of the army failed to form a junction at the appointed time. D'Artaguette, with Father Senat and Vincennes (founder of the old French city of that name on the Wabash), his lieutenant, arrived on the 9th, the evening before the time appointed, and stealing softly into the country of the Chickasaws, awaited in concealment the arrival of Bienville at the place of rendezvous, among the sources of the Yallabusha. Meantime Bienville, with his southern forces, reinforced by about twelve hundred Choctaws who had joined his standard, was on the march, but did not arrive at the place appointed till the 25th of May, fifteen days after the appointed time. On his arrival he camped within a league of the great village of the Chickasaws. Without seeking for the branch of the army under D'Artaguette, he advanced in the morning, before day, to surprise the enemy, which he failed to do, the wary Chickasaws being on the watch in a strongly intrenched fortification. The English flag waved over their fort, and English traders had assisted them in preparing their defences. The French made two attempts to storm the log citadel, but were each time repulsed with heavy loss. On the 29th, the final retreat began; on the 31st of May Bienville dismissed his Choctaw allies, and throwing his cannon into the Tombigbee, he and his party gloriously floated down the river, and landed about the first of June on the Bayou St. John.

D'Artaguette, meanwhile, had been waiting among the sources of the Yallabusha for the army from below. He had waited ten days after the appointed time. His impatient allies threatened desertion, and at length he consented to an attack. His measures were wisely taken; one fort was carried, and the Chickasaws driven from the cabins which it protected; at the second fort the intrepid youth was equally successful; but on attacking the third he received first one wound, and then another, and in the moment of victory was disabled. The Indians from Illinois were dismayed, and fled precipitately. Voisin, a lad only sixteen, conducted the retreat, the enemy at his heels for twenty-five leagues; he marched forty-five leagues without food, while the men carried such of the wounded as could endure the fatigue. The unhappy D'Artaguette lay weltering in his blood, and by his side fell others of his bravest troops. The Jesuit, Senat, might have fled, but he remained to receive the last sigh of the wounded, regardless of danger, mindful only of duty. Vincennes, too, refused to fly, and shared the captivity of his gallant leader. According to the Indian custom, their wounds were stanched, and they were received into the Chickasaw cabins and bountifully feasted. At last, when Bienville had retreated, the Chickasaws brought the captives to their lodges, and while one was spared to relate the tragedy, the brave and gallant D'Artaguette, the faithful Senat, true to his mission, and Vincennes, whose name will be perpetuated as long as the Wabash shall flow by the dwellings of civilized man — these, with the rest of the captives, were bound to the stake, and neither valor nor pity could save them from death by a slow and torturing fire.

Although the Chickasaws sued for peace, which was granted in 1740, yet they remained the undoubted masters of their own territory.

In all the vast extent of country claimed by France, her jurisdiction was little more than a name. For three-fourths of a century after the first attempt at colonization by La Salle, the Valley of the Mississippi was still a wilderness. Its whole population, including whites and blacks, did not amount to ten thousand. Its fortunes had been fostered by the liberal patronage of two French kings, Louis XIV and XV; the affluence and ambition of Crozat had been employed to bring into effect its mercantile resources; the Mississippi Company, aided by boundless but transient credit, had made it the foundation of their hopes and endeavors; priests and friars, dispersed among the Indian tribes from Biloxi to the Dakotas, had propitiated the favor of the savages; yet all its patrons and benefactors had not been able to accomplish for it, in three-fourths of a century, a tithe of the prosperity which, within the same period, sprang naturally from the benevolence of William Penn to the peaceful settlers on the Delaware.

A glance at a few of the old French settlements will show the progress made in portions of Louisiana during the early part of the eighteenth century. As early as 1705, traders and hunters had penetrated the fertile regions of the Wabash, and from this region, at that early date, fifteen thousand hides and skins had been collected and sent to Mobile for the European market.

In the year 1716, the French population on the Wabash kept up a lucrative commerce with Mobile by means of traders and voyageurs. The Ohio River was comparatively unknown.

In 1746 agriculture on the Wabash had attained to greater prosperity than in any of the French settlements besides, and in that year six hundred barrels of flour were manufactured and shipped to New Orleans, together with considerable quantities of hides, peltry, tallow and beeswax.

In the Illinois country, also, considerable settlements had been made, so that, in 1730, they embraced one hundred and forty French families, about six hundred "converted Indians," and many traders and voyageurs. In that portion of the country on the east side of the Mississippi, there were five distinct settlements, with their respective villages, viz., Cahokia, near the mouth of the Cahokia Creek, and about five miles below the present site of St. Louis; St. Philip, forty-five miles below Cahokia, and four miles above Fort Chartres; Fort Chartres, twelve miles above Kaskaskia; Kaskaskia, situated on the Kaskaskia River, five miles above its mouth; and Prairie du Rocher, near Fort Chartres. To these must be added St. Genevieve, on the west side of the Mississippi. These are among the oldest French towns in the Mississippi Valley. Kaskaskia, in its best days, was a town of some two or three thousand inhabitants. After it passed from the crown of France, its population for many years did not exceed fifteen hundred. Under British dominion, in 1773, the population had decreased to four hundred and sixty.

In 1753 the first actual conflict arose between Louisiana and the Atlantic colonies. A jealousy and rivalry had for a long period existed. From the earliest advent of the Jesuit fathers, up to the period of which we speak, the great ambition of the French had been, not alone to preserve their possessions in the West, but by every possible means to prevent the slighest attempt of the English, east of the mountains, to extend their settlements towards the Mississippi. France was resolved on retaining possession of the great territory which her missionaries had discovered and revealed to the world. French commandants had avowed their purpose of seizing every Englishman within the Ohio Valley.

The colonies of Pennsylvania, New York and Virginia were most affected by the encroachments of France in the extension of her dominion, and particularly in the great scheme of uniting Canada with Louisiana. To carry out this purpose the French had taken possession of a tract of country claimed by Virginia, and had commenced a line of forts extending from the lakes to the Ohio River. Virginia was not only alive to her own interests, but attentive to the vast importance of an immediate and effectual resistance on the part of all the English colonies to the actual and contemplated encroachments of the French.

In 1753, Governor Dinwiddie, of Virginia, sent George Washington, then a young man, just twenty-one, to demand of the French commandant "a reason for invading British dominions while a solid peace subsisted." Washington, surmounting all the difficulties of a winter journey over mountains and through forests, met the French commandant, Gardeur de St. Pierre, on the head-waters of the Alleghany, and having communicated to him the object of his journey, received the insolent answer that the French would not discuss the matter of right, but would make prisoners of every Englishman found trading on the Ohio and its waters. The country, he said, belonged to the French by virtue of the discoveries of La Salle, and they would not withdraw from it.

In January, 1754, Washington returned to Virginia, and made his report to the Governor and Council. Forces were at once raised, and Washington, as lieutenant-colonel, was dispatched at the head of a hundred and fifty men, to the forks of the Ohio, with orders to "finish the fort already begun there by the Ohio Company, and to make prisoners, kill or destroy all who interrupted the English settlements."

On his march through the forests of Western Pennsylvania, Washington, through the aid of friendly Indians, discovered the French concealed among the rocks, and as they ran to seize their arms, ordered his men to fire upon them, at the same time, with his own musket, setting the example. An action, lasting about a quarter of an hour, ensued; ten of the Frenchmen were killed, among them Jumonville, the commander of the party, and twenty-one were made prisoners. The dead were scalped by the Indians, and the chief, bearing a scalp and a hatchet, went to all the tribes of the Miamis, inviting their great war-chief and braves to go hand in hand with the Six Nations and the English. But the French being soon reinforced by superior numbers, Washington was compelled to fall back upon Fort Necessity, a rude stockade at Green Meadows. On the 3d of July Monsieur de Villiers confronted him with six hundred French and one hundred Indians, a vastly superior force, and Washington was compelled to accept terms of capitulation, and on the Fourth of July the English garrison withdrew from the basin of the Ohio.

The attack of Washington upon Jumonville aroused the indignation of France, and war was now imminent between the two nations. In May, 1756, war was formally declared. The signal and unfortunate defeat of General Braddock, near Fort Du Quesne, on the banks of the Monongahela, occurred July 9, 1755, and from that period to the victory of General Wolfe, at Quebec, on the 13th of September, 1759, various engagements had taken place, with various fortunes, between the English and the French and their Indian allies. On the 8th of September, 1760 Montreal, Detroit and all Canada were given up to the English. On the 10th of February, 1763, the treaty of Paris was concluded, by which Great Britain became possessed of all of New France, and all of that portion of the province of Louisiana lying on the east side of the Mississippi, except the island and town of New Orleans, which remained to the French.

The treaty of Paris had been signed, though not formally concluded, on the 3d of November, 1762. On the same day France, in a secret treaty, ceded to Spain all her possessions on the west side of the Mississippi, including the whole country to the head-waters of the Great River and west to the Rocky Mountains. Thus was the great province of Louisiana divided between England and Spain, and the dominion of France in America, which had lasted nearly a hundred years, passed away.

At the treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States, in 1783, the former ceded to the latter all her possessions on the east side of the Mississippi River. At the same time Great Britain ceded to Spain all the Floridas, comprising all the territory east of the Mississippi and south of the southern limits of the United States.

The free navigation of the Mississippi, as a channel of commerce with New Orleans and the Gulf of Mexico, was an important question during the time that Louisiana was a Spanish possession. We have seen that Spain possessed all the territory on the west of the Mississippi, and Florida on the east, to the thirty-first parallel of north latitude. The Mississippi, therefore, for the last three hundred miles of its course, flowed wholly within the Spanish dominions; and the Spanish government claimed exclusive right to the use of it below the southern boundary of the United States. As the American people occupied and exercised dominion over the whole eastern portion of the Mississippi Valley, comprising all the country drained by its great eastern tributaries, they had a natural right according to the admitted laws of nations to follow their rivers to the sea. In addition to this the Mississippi River was necessary and absolutely indispensable to the Western settlements, now fast rising into political and commercial importance. Situated, as they were, in the heart of the Great Valley, with expansive energies and accumulating resources, no power on earth could prevent the final appropriation of the rivers below them to their use, whenever their numbers should enable them to maintain their rights by force.

At an early period after the ratification of the treaty of 1783, the Western people had begun to demand as a right the free navigation of the Mississippi. In 1786, Spain occupied both banks below the mouth of the Ohio, and no less than four military posts on the east bank confirmed her power to collect heavy duties on all imports by way of the river from the Ohio region. Every boat descending the river was compelled to land and submit to the arbitrary revenue exactions. Although the rigor of these exactions was somewhat relaxed under Governor Miro, from 1787 to 1790, yet they were held as a right by Spain, and in 1791 it appeared that the Spanish were engaged in a scheme to dismember the Union upon this very question of the free navigation of the Mississippi. Their plan was to offer the Western people such inducements in the way of commerce and liberal grants of land as would lead them to separate from the Eastern states. It was therefore disseminated among the people of Ohio and Kentucky, that the Spanish government would grant them easy commercial privileges, provided they would disconnect themselves from the Federal government east of the mountains. This plan was avowed by the Spanish minister-resident in the United States, who declared unequivocally, to his confidential correspondent, that unless the Western people would declare themselves independent of the United States, Spain would never allow them the free navigation of the Mississippi. The Baron de Carondelet, who succeeded Governor Miro, also favored the scheme, but his intriguing in that direction was effectually thwarted by the treaty of Madrid, October 20, 1795, by which the King of Spain stipulated with the United States that the Mississippi for its whole width, from its source to the sea, should be free to American trade and commerce, and that the people of the United States should be permitted, for a term of three years, to use the port of New Orleans as a place of deposit for their produce and merchandise, free of duty.

The treaty of Madrid, by which the above privileges were so opportunely secured to the United States, was induced by a war then pending between the allied powers of Spain and France against Great Britain, which was declared in 1796. The British authorities in Canada having planned an invasion of Upper Louisiana, by way of the lakes and the Illinois River, Spain thought to prevent the great danger threatened by placing the neutral territory of the friendly power in the way of their military operations, and therefore ceded the privileges granted in the treaty.

The right to New Orleans as a port of deposit expired or was revoked by Morales, the Intendant of Louisiana, October 16, 1802, and led to instant remonstrance on the part of the United States. On the 7th of January, 1803, a resolution was adopted by the House of Representatives affirming their "unalterable determination to maintain the boundaries and the rights of navigation and commerce through the river Mississippi, as established by existing treaties." The act of Morales was not, however, acquiesced in by the Governor, and in April, 1803, orders from the King of Spain reached the United States restoring the right of deposit.

To effectually secure the rights and interests of the United States in the navigation and commerce of the Mississippi, President Jefferson, in January, 1803, sent a message to the Senate, nominating Robert R. Livingston and James Monroe ministers to the Court of France, and Charles Pinkney and James Monroe to the Court of Spain, with full powers to form treaties to effect these objects. The Government had, in November, 1801, received through Hon. Rufus King, United States minister to the Court of St. James, a copy of a treaty signed at Madrid, March 21st, 1801, by which the Prince of Parma, son-in-law of the King of Spain, had been established on the throne of Tuscany, in consideration of which, Spain, on the previous Autumn, had ceded Louisiana to France, and that cession was now confirmed.

Thus Louisiana got back into the possession of France by the treaty of Madrid, signed March 21, 1801.

This change made it a favorable opportunity to secure the interests of the United States in relation to the Mississippi. Our ministers had been instructed to procure a cession of New Orleans and Florida, but all ideas of purchasing Louisiana west of the Mississippi had been disclaimed by Mr. Jefferson and his cabinet up to January, 1803. Mr. Livingston, however, on the 10th of this month, proposed to the minister of Napoleon to cede to the United States, not only New Orleans and Florida, but all of Louisiana above the Arkansas River. That such were not the views entertained by Mr. Jefferson's Cabinet is evident from the fact that on the 2d of March, 1803, instructions were sent to our ministers, containing a plan which expressly left to France "all her territory on the west side of the Mississippi.' On the 11th of April, this plan was broached to Talleyrand, the French minister, when that gentleman suggested the cession of the whole French domain in North America, and asked how much would be given for it. Mr. Livingston intimated that twenty millions of francs might be a fair price. Talleyrand thought that would be too little, but asked the Americans to think about it. In a few days Napoleon, in an interview with Mr. Livingston, virtually told the latter that he had secured Louisiana in a contract with Spain for the purpose of turning it over to the United States for a mere nominal sum. He had been compelled to provide for the safety of Louisiana by the treaty, and he was "anxious to give the United States a magnificent bargain, an empire for a trifle." One hundred and twenty-five millions of francs was the price proposed, which was subsequently modified to fifteen millions of dollars. The treaty was signed on the 30th of April, 1803. On the 20th of December following, the province of Louisiana was officially delivered over to Governor Claiborne, of Mississippi, and General Wilkinson, of the United States Army. To this transfer Spain at first objected, but early in 1804 renounced her opposition.

Thus the United States became possessed of a territory extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the sources of the Mississippi, and from the Atlantic Ocean to the Rocky Mountains. If the purpose of Mr. Jefferson and his Cabinet had been carried out, her dominion at that grand period of her enlargement would have been limited to the east side of the Mississippi, and the fertile and vast empire on the west would have remained in the possession of a foreign power. To that act of Mr. Livingston's, in transcending his instructions, which was only acquiesced in when the deed was done, Iowa owes her position as part of the United States by the Louisiana purchase.

INDIANS OF IOWA.

For more than a century after the discovery of Iowa by Marquette and Joliet, not a trading post had been established, nor a settlement made within her borders. The country remained in the undisputed possession of the natives, who roamed over her beautiful and fertile prairies, and hunted and fished in her woods and streams. Even these had changed very much during the century, the tribe that knew Marquette had passed away, and others had come in their places. That the soil of Iowa had been the theater of fierce and bloody contests between rival tribes prior to its settlement by the white man, there can be no doubt; and in these contests the weaker yielded to the stronger, and were either slain in the savage battles that ensued, or conquered and driven from their ancient hunting grounds. The Sacs and Foxes had come from the East, whose boast it was that they had pursued a conquering march over all the tribes from Lake Erie to the Mississippi, and had met their equally warlike foes, the northern Sioux, on the soil of Iowa, where for years they maintained a constant warfare.

The Sacs and Foxes were originally two distinct nations, and resided on the waters of the St. Lawrence. In 1685, we hear of the Foxes occupying the banks of the Detroit River, and being unfriendly to the French, while the English strengthened their alliance with them by frequent messages and valuable presents. In 1712 they planned the destruction of the French post at Detroit, and instigated by their friends and allies, the Six Nations, laid siege to the place with great vehemence and persistence. The French commandant called in the aid of the friendly Indians, the Ottawas, Pottawattomies and Hurons. The Foxes retreated to the eastern boundary of Detroit, where they intrenched themselves in their camp, and were attacked by the French, who erected a block house near their position. Being cut off from all supplies of water by the constant fire of the French, the Foxes became desperate, and rushing from their besieged camp, seized possession of a house near the Fort, which they fortified, and proceeded again to attack the French. They were again dislodged by the cannon, and driven back to their former intrenchment. Finding their efforts likely to be unsuccessful, they soon sent to the commandant for terms of capitulation, which being rejected, they became enraged, and discharged showers of blazing arrows upon the Fort. The lighted matches set fire to many of the houses, which were thatched with straw, and until the precaution was taken to cover some of them with wet skins, many of the buildings were consumed. The Foxes, naked and furious, fought like tigers in this siege, the commandant, at one time being upon the point of giving up and abandoning the fort. But being dissuaded by friendly Indians, who promised to redouble their efforts, the siege was continued. After the war song and the dance, the painted savages on the side of the French renewed the onset with increased fury. The trenches were soon heaped with the dying and the dead. The Foxes again sued for terms of surrender, but during its pendency saw an opportunity and escaped in the night, repairing to Lake St. Clair, where they again intrenched themselves. The French and their allies pursued them to their camp. In the first attack the French were repulsed. They then erected a battery and brought their guns to bear upon the Foxes, and only succeeded in bringing them to a surrender on the fifth day of the siege. The siege of Detroit had been kept up by these Indians nineteen consecutive days.

After the surrender at Lake St. Clair, the French commenced a deadly slaughter of the Foxes, destroying all their warriors who bore arms, while the rest, about one hundred and fifty, besides the women and children, were divided as slaves among the French confederates. Not, however, being able to make slaves of them, they were all in a short time massacred. The loss of the French and their Indian allies amounted to sixty men killed and wounded, while this expedition cost the Foxes more than a thousand of their tribe. But more enraged than enfeebled, they gathered their scattered bands on the Fox River, of Wisconsin, to wreak vengeance on the French by intercepting their passage from the lakes to the Mississippi. Here they robbed and murdered the emigrants, traders and voyageurs, and for a year or two nearly cut off all communication between Canada and Louisiana. The Indian nations which were on commercial terms with the French, suffered greatly by their devastations.

In 1714 a comprehensive movement was entered into by the French to exterminate the Fox nation, and thus rid their territory of them at once and forever. The plan was to ally all the rest of the Indian tribes in war against them, under a French commander. The Governor of Canada espoused the scheme, and gave the command to De Louvigney, who soon found himself at the head of eight hundred Indians, all resolved not to lay down their arms while a member of the Fox tribe remained on French territory. When the Foxes saw the storm that was gathering against them, they resolved to sell their lives as dearly as possible, and selecting a stronghold on Fox River, now known as the "Butte des Morts," or Hill of the Dead, they intrenched themselves in a fort surrounded by three ranges of oak palisades, with a ditch in the rear. Here were gathered more than five hundred warriors and three thousand women and children. Three hundred warriors were on the route to reinforce them, but did not arrive in time. De Louvigney, finding them strongly intrenched, attacked them in form; having two field pieces and a grenade mortar, he began opening his trenches thirty-five toises from the fort, and on the third day, when he was only twelve toises distant, the Foxes made a great attack by firing on the French. The battle raged fiercely for a time, but the besieged were soon compelled to surrender, and a treaty of peace was agreed upon, which, however, the Indians did not respect, but soon renewing their old course, a second expedition was fitted out against them, under the command of De Lignerie, in 1728. Finally, in 1746, they were driven out of the Fox River country westward, and probably at that time a majority of them crossed the Mississippi.

The Foxes as first known in Iowa were found in alliance with the Sacs, forming the united nation of the Sacs and Foxes. At what period the union took place is not definitely known, but it must have been subsequent to the year 1746, for at that time the Foxes were a separate nation, engaged in war with the French. They probably united for the conquest of their new hunting grounds west of the Mississippi, as these grounds were disputed by other powerful tribes of Indians.

The Sacs emigrated from the State of New York, where they had spent a great deal of their strength in wars with the Iroquois, or Six Nations. After the union the nation became strong and powerful, and in wars with the Illinois, dispossessed them of a large portion of their hunting grounds. At one time the Illinois were a very powerful nation, extending from the valley of the Rock River to the Ohio, and on the west of the Mississippi to the Des Moines. Marquette and Joliet discovered two villages of the Illinois on the Des Moines River when they descended the Mississippi on their voyage of discovery; but when the country was again visited by white men, not a vestige of the nation was found on the west side of the Mississippi. They had in the meantime been driven out by the conquering Sacs and Foxes. A war arose between the latter and the Illinois nation on account of the murder of the distinguished Sac chief, Pontiac. This act aroused the vengeance of the Sacs and Foxes, and forming an alliance with other tribes, they commenced a fierce and bloody war against the Illinois, which was continued till the great nation was nearly destroyed, and their hunting grounds possessed by the conquerors.

At the time the United States came in possession of the Valley of the Mississippi, the Sac and Fox nation occupied most of the State of Illinois, and nearly all the country on the west of the Mississippi, from the Jeffreon to the Upper Iowa, and west to the Missouri River. The Sacs had four chief villages, where most of them resided, viz.: one at the head of the Des Moines Rapids, near the present site of Montrose, consisting of thirteen lodges; another on the east bank of the Mississippi, near the mouth of the Henderson River; the third on Rock River, near Rock Island, which was their largest and most important village, and from which emanated the chief difficulties encountered by the Government in the extinguishment of the Indian titles to the lands, as we shall see farther on in our history; the fourth village was on the west side of the Mississippi, near the mouth of the Upper Iowa.

The Foxes had three principal villages, to wit: one on the west side of the Mississippi, six miles above the rapids of Rock River; another about twelve miles back from the river, in the rear of the Dubuque lead mines, and the third on Turkey River.

The Iowas, from whom the state derived its name, were at one time identified with the Sacs of Rock River, but for some cause they separated and started out as a band by themselves. The eight leading families of this band formed classes, or parties, known by the names of the different animals or birds which they chose as the types or symbols of their respective families—the Eagle, the Pigeon, the Wolf, the Bear, the Elk, the Beaver, the Buffalo and the Snake—and were known severally in their tribe by the peculiar manner in which they cut their hair. The Eagle family were marked by two locks of hair on the front part of the head and one on the back left part; the Wolf family had scattered bunches of hair left, representing islands, whence their families were supposed to have sprung; the Bear family left one side of the hair of the head much longer than the other; the Buffalo family left a strip of long hair from the front to the rear part of the head, with two bunches on each side to represent horns; and so on, through all the families.

For a time the Iowas occupied common hunting grounds with the Sacs and Foxes, but feuds eventually sprang up between them, and they became greatly diminished in numbers and strength by their powerful enemies. The principal village of the Iowa nation was on the Des Moines, in what is now Van Buren County, and on the site of the town of Iowaville. This was the scene of the last great battle between the Iowas and the Sacs and Foxes, in which Black Hawk, then a young man, commanded one division of the attacking forces. The following account has been given of the battle:

"Contrary to long established custom of Indian attack, this battle was brought on in the day time, the attending circumstances justifying this departure from the well settled usages of Indian warfare. The battle field is a level river bottom about four miles in length, and two miles wide near the middle, narrowing down to a point at either end. The main area of the bottom rises perhaps twenty feet above the river, leaving a narrow strip of low bottom along the shore, covered with trees that belted the prairie on the river side with a thick forest, and the immediate bank was fringed with a dense growth of willows. Near the lower end of the prairie, and near the river bank, was situated the Iowa village, and about two miles above the town, and near the middle of the prairie, is situated a small neutral ground, covered at the time with a tuft of small trees and brush growing on its summit. In the rear of this mound lay a belt of wet prairie, which, at the time spoken of, was covered with a dense crop of rank, coarse grass. Bordering this wet prairie, on the north, the country rises abruptly into elevated broken river bluffs, covered with a heavy forest for many miles in extent, and portions thickly clustered with undergrowth, affording a convenient shelter for the stealthy approach of the foe.

"Through this forest the Sac and Fox war party made their way in the night, and secreted themselves in the tall grass spoken of above, intending to remain in ambush during the day and make such observations as this near proximity to their intended victims might afford, to aid them in their contemplated attack on the town during the following night. From this situation their spies could take a full survey of the village and watch every movement of the inhabitants, by which means they were soon convinced that the Iowas had no suspicion of their presence.

"At the foot of the mound above mentioned, the Iowas had their race-course, where they diverted themselves with the excitements of the horse, and schooled their young warriors in cavalry evolutions. In these exercises mock battles were fought, and the Indian tactics of attack and defense carefully inculcated, by which means a skill in horsemanship was acquired rarely excelled. Unfortunately for them, this day was selected for their equestrian sports, and wholly unconscious of the proximity of their foes, the warriors repaired to the race-ground, leaving most of their arms in the village, and their old men and women and children unprotected.

"Pash-a-pa-ho, who was chief in command of the Sacs and Foxes, perceived at once the advantage this state of things afforded for a complete surprise of his now doomed victims, and ordered Black Hawk to file off with his young warriors through the tall grass and gain the cover of the timber along the river bank, and with the utmost speed reach the village and commence the battle, while he remained with his division in the ambush, to make a simultaneous assault on the unarmed men, whose attention was engrossed with the excitement of the races. The plan was skillfully laid and most dexterously executed. Black Hawk with his forces reached the village undiscovered and made a furious onslaught upon the defenseless inhabitants, by firing one general volley into their midst, and completing the slaughter with the tomahawk and scalping-knife, aided by the devouring flames with which they enveloped the village as soon as the fire-brand could be spread from lodge to lodge.

"On the instant of the report of fire-arms at the village, the forces under Pash-a-pa-ho leaped from their couchant position in the grass, and sprang tiger-like upon the astonished and unarmed Iowas in the midst of their racing sports. The first impulse of the latter naturally led them to make the utmost speed towards their arms in the village, and protect, if possible, their wives and children from the attacks of a merciless assailant. The distance, from the place of attack on the prairie was two miles, and a great number fell in their flight by the bullets and tomahawks of their enemies, who pressed them closely with a running fire the whole way; and they only reached their town in time to witness the horrors of its destruction. Their whole village was in flames, and the dearest objects of their lives lay in slaughtered heaps amidst the devouring elements; and the agonizing groans of the dying, mingled with the exulting shouts of the victorious foe, filled their hearts with a maddening despair. Their wives and children, who had been spared the general massacre, were prisoners, and, together with their arms, were in the hands of the victors; and all that could now be done was to draw off their shattered and defenseless forces, and save as many lives as possible by a retreat across the Des Moines River, which they effected in the best possible manner, and took a position among the Soap Creek hills."

The Sacs and Foxes, prior to the settlement of their village on Rock River, had a fierce war with the Winnebagoes, in which they subdued them, and took possession of their lands. Their village, at Rock River, at one time contained upwards of sixty lodges, and was among the largest Indian villages on the continent. In 1825 the Secretary of War estimated the entire number of the Sacs and Foxes at four thousand six hundred souls. Their village was situated in the immediate vicinity of the upper rapids of the Mississippi, where the beautiful and flourishing towns of Rock Island and Davenport are now situated. The beautiful scenery of the Island, the extensive prairies, dotted over with groves, the picturesque bluffs along the river banks, the rich and fertile soil, producing large crops of corn, squash, and other vegetables, with little labor; the abundance of wild fruit, game, fish, and almost every thing calculated to make it a delightful spot for an Indian village, which was found there, had made this place a favorite home of the Sacs, and secured for it the strong attachment and veneration of the whole nation.

North of the hunting-grounds of the Sacs and Foxes, were those of the Sioux, a fierce and warlike nation, which often disputed possession with their rivals in savage and bloody warfare. The possessions of these tribes were mostly located in Minnesota, but extended over a portion of northern and western Iowa to the Missouri River. Their descent from the north upon the hunting-grounds of Iowa, frequently brought them into collision with the Sacs and Foxes; and after many a conflict and bloody struggle, a boundary line was established between them by the government of the United States, in a treaty held at Prairie du Chien, in 1825. But this, instead of settling the difficulties, caused them to quarrel all the more, in consequence of alleged trespasses upon each others' side of the line. These contests were kept up and became so unrelenting that, in 1830, Government bought of the respective tribes of the Sacs and Foxes, and the Sioux, a strip of land twenty miles in width, on both sides of the line, and thus throwing them forty miles apart by creating between them a "neutral ground," commanded them to cease their hostilities. Both the Sacs and Foxes, and the Sioux, however, were allowed to fish and hunt on this ground unmolested, provided they did not interfere with each other on United States territory. The Sioux were the deadly enemies of the Sacs and Foxes. (See history of the "Neutral Ground" and Indian Treaties further on in this work.)

BLACK HAWK.

The most noted chief among the Sacs and Foxes was Black Hawk, who was born at the Sac village, on Rock River, in 1767. Black Hawk was not the great war-chief of the united nation of the Sacs and Foxes, but a chief of his own band of Sac warriors. In early manhood he attained some distinction as a fighting chief, having led campaigns against the Osages, and other neighboring tribes. About the begining of the present century he began to appear prominent in affairs on the Mississippi, though it does not appear that he was ever a great general, or possessed any of the qualifications of a successful leader. He was the victim of a narrow prejudice and ill-will towards the Americans, which seems to have been engendered before he had any knowledge of them or their character, and this ill-advised and hasty judgment became the ruling passion of his life. His pretext for bringing on the war, which ended in his entire defeat and overthrow, in 1832, was the treaty of St. Louis, made in 1804, wherein certain chiefs of his tribe had ceded to the United States their lands on the east side of the Mississippi. But prior to the date of this treaty he had shown his unfriendliness to the Americans, by refusing to be present when the transfer of Louisiana was made to the Commissioners of the United States, early in the same year. It will be remembered that Spain did not give up possession of the country to France on its cession to the latter power, in 1801, but retained possession of it, and, by the authority of France, transferred it to the United States, in 1804. Black Hawk and his band were in St. Louis at the time, and were invited to be present and witness the ceremonies of the transfer, but, instead of accepting the proffered courtesy, skulked off in a fit of spleen, and departed in their canoes for Rock Island. He says, in his Life:

"I found many sad and gloomy faces because the Unites States were about to take possession of the town and country. Soon after the Americans came I took my band and went to take leave of our Spanish father. The Americans came to see him also. Seeing them approach, we passed out of one door as they entered another, and immediately started in our canoes for our village, on Rock River, not liking the change any more than our friends appeared to at St. Louis. On arriving at our village, we gave the news that strange people had arrived at St. Louis, and that we should never see our Spanish father again. The information made all our people sorry."

The treaty referred to above, which Black Hawk always objected to, and which finally brought on the war of 1832, was made at St. Louis, on the 3d of November, 1804, between William Henry Harrison, then Governor of Indiana Territory and Commissioner on behalf the United States, and five chiefs of the Sac and Fox nation. In this treaty they ceded to the United States their lands on the east side of the Mississippi, extending from a point opposite the Jeffreon, in Missouri, to the Wisconsin River, embracing an area of over fifty-one millions of acres, in consideration of two thousand two hundred and thirty-four dollars, in goods then delivered, and a yearly annuity of one thousand dollars, to be paid in goods at first cost.

Black Hawk, in giving his account of this treaty, claimed that the chiefs who made it had no authority to cede the lands, and, moreover, that they were sent to St. Louis on quite a different errand, namely, to get one of their people released, who had been imprisoned at St Louis for killing a white man. In his Life, certified to by Antoine Le Claire, to whom it was dictated by Black Hawk himself, he says:

"The party started with the good wishes of the whole nation, hoping they would accomplish the object of their mission. The relations of the prisoner blacked their faces and fasted, hoping the Great Spirit would take pity on them and return the husband and father to his wife and children. Quash-qua-me and party remained a long time absent. They at length returned and encamped a short distance below the village, but did not come up that day, nor did any person approach their camp. They appeared to be dressed in fine coats, and had medals. From this circumstance we were in hopes they had brought us good news. Early the next morning the Council lodge was convened. Quash-qua-me and party came up and gave us the following account of their mission:

"'On their arrival at St. Louis they met their American father, and explained to him their business, and urged the release of their friend. The American chief told them he wanted land, and they agreed to give him some on the west side of the Mississippi River, and some on the Illinois side, opposite the Jeffreon. When the business was all arranged they expected to have their friend released to come home with them; but about the time they were ready to start, their friend was let out of prison, who ran a short distance, and was shot dead.'

"This was all they could recollect of what had been said or done. They had been drunk the greater portion of the time they were in St. Louis. This is all myself or nation know of the treaty of 1804. It has been explained to me since. I find by that treaty all our country east of the Mississippi, and north of the Jeffreon, was ceded to the United States for one thousand dollars a year! I will leave it to the people of the United States to say whether our nation was properly represented in this treaty, or whether we received a fair consideration for the extent of country ceded by those five individuals. I could say much more about this treaty, but I will not at this time. It has been the origin of all our disputes."

The year following this treaty (1805), Lieutenant Zebulon M. Pike came up the river for the purpose of holding friendly councils with the Indians and selecting sites for forts within the territory recently acquired from France by the United States. Lieutenant Pike seems to have been the first American whom Black Hawk ever met or had a personal interview with; and he was very much prepossessed in Pike's favor. He gives the following account of his visit to Rock Island:

"A boat came up the river with a young American chief and a small party of soldiers. We heard of them soon after they passed Sault River. Some of our young braves watched them every day, to see what sort of people he had on board. The boat at length arrived at Rock River, and the young chief came on shore with his interpreter, and made a speech and gave us some presents. We in turn presented them with meat and such other provisions as we had to spare. We were well pleased with the young chief. He gave us good advice, and said our American father would treat us well."

The events which soon followed Pike's expedition were the erection of Fort Edwards, at what is now Warsaw, Illinois, and Fort Madison, on the site of the present town of that name, the latter being the first Fort erected in Iowa. These movements gave the Indians great uneasiness. When work was commenced on Fort Edwards, a delegation from their nation, headed by some of their chiefs, went down to see what the Americans were doing, and had an interview with the commander; after which they returned home apparently satisfied. In like manner, when Fort Madison was being erected, they sent down another delegation from a council of the nation held at Rock River. According to Black Hawk's account, the American chief told them that he was building a house for a trader who was coming to sell them goods cheap, and that the soldiers were coming to keep him company, —a statement which Black Hawk says they distrusted at the time, believing that the fort was an encroachment upon their rights, and designed to aid in getting their lands away from them.

It has been held by good American authorities, that the erection of Fort Madison at the point where it was located was a violation of the treaty of 1804. By the eleventh article of that treaty, the United States had a right to build a fort near the mouth of the Wisconsin River; by article six they had bound themselves "that if any citizen of the United States or any other white persons should form a settlement upon their lands, such intruders should forthwith be removed." Probably the authorities of the United States did not regard the establishment of military posts as coming properly within the meaning of the term "settlement," as used in the treaty. At all events, they erected Fort Madison within the territory reserved to the Indians, and this made the Indians very indignant. Not long after the fort was built, a party headed by Black Hawk attempted its destruction. They sent down spies to watch the movements of the soldiers, who ascertained that they were in the habit of marching out of the fort every morning and evening for parade, and the plan of the party was to conceal themselves near the fort, and attack and surprise them when they were outside. On the morning of the proposed day of attack, five soldiers came out and were fired upon by the Indians, two of them being killed. The Indians were too hasty in their movement, for the regular drill had not yet commenced. However, they kept up the attack for several days, attempting the old Fox strategy of setting fire to the fort with blazing arrows; but finding their efforts unavailing, they soon gave up and returned to Rock River.

In his hostility to the Americans Black Hawk was undoubtedly influenced by a deeper purpose than appears on the surface of immediately associated events. For several years it had been surmised that mischief was brewing among the tribes of the Northwest. Some murders had been committed by the Indians in Indian countries, and the conviction became strong about the close of the year 1806, that hostilities were meditated on an extensive scale. Two chiefs of great power and influence had for several years been exerting themselves for the accomplishment of a two-fold object: first, to effect a confederation of the Indians, whose habits had become such as to render them unfit for hardy and heroic endurance and prowess in war, such as were the glory of their ancestors; and second, to form such a union and federation of the tribes as would give them irresistible strength against the encroachments of the Americans upon their territory. Both these objects were avowed, and both were pursued with wonderful energy, persistence and success, by Tecumseh, and his brother, the Shawanee Prophet, whose power was felt, and whose purpose was carried out rapidly in all the countries bordering upon the lakes. Black Hawk, in his Life, says: "Soon after our return from Fort Madison, runners came to our village from the Shawanee Prophet, while others were dispatched by him to the villages of the Winnebagoes, with invitations to meet him on the Wabash." Black Hawk did not go himself, but a delegation was sent from his village. The following address, or "Talk," calculated to fire the imagination of savages, was put forth by the Shawanee Prophet, claiming to be the great Manitou, or second Adam, in the year 1807, and was addressed to all the Indian tribes:

"I am the father of the English, of the French, of the Spaniards, and of the Indians. I created the first man, who was the common father of all these people as well as yourselves; and it is through him whom I have awakened from his long sleep that I now address you. But the Americans I did not make; they are not my children, but the children of the Evil Spirit. They grew from the scum of the great water when it was troubled by the Evil Spirit, and the froth was driven into the woods by a strong east wind. They are numerous, but I hate them.

"My children, you must not speak of this Talk to the whites. I am now on the earth, sent by the Great Spirit to instruct you. Each village must send me two or more principal chiefs, to represent you, that you may be taught. The bearer of this Talk will point out to you the path to my wigwam. I could not come myself to Arbre Croche, because the world is changed from what it was. It is broken and leans down, and as it declines the Chippewas and all beyond will fall off and die. Therefore you must come to see me and be instructed. Those villages which do not listen to this Talk, and send me two deputies, will be cut off from the face of the earth."

From this time forward till the battle of Tippecanoe, in 1811, Tecumseh and the Prophet continued to extend their influence. No wonder the susceptible and ambitious mind of Black Hawk was greatly impressed and dazzled with this scheme of Indian independence. For this reason he had always been opposed to the policy of the Indians ceding their lands to the Americans. He had great faith in the Shawanee Prophet. He relates that after the meeting on the Wabash, all of his party returned, "among whom came a prophet, who explained to us the bad treatment the different nations of Indians had received from the Americans, by giving them a few presents, and taking their lands from them. I remember well his saying, 'If you do not join your friends on the Wabash, the Americans will take this very village from you.' I little thought then that his words would come true."

Soon the war between Great Britain and the United States broke out, and Black Hawk took part with the British, having been, as he alleges, "forced into the war by being deceived." The circumstances, according to his own narrative, were as follows: "Several of the chiefs and head men of the Sacs and Foxes were called upon to go to Washington to see their great father. On their return they related what had been said and done. They said the great father wished them, in the event of a war taking place with England, not to interfere on either side, but to remain neutral. He did not want our help, but wished us to hunt and support our families, and live in peace. He said that British traders would not be permitted to come on the Mississippi to furnish us with goods, but that we should be supplied with an American trader. Our chiefs then told him that the British traders always gave them credit in the Fall for guns, powder and goods, to enable us to hunt, and clothe our families. He repeated that the trader at Fort Madison would have plenty of goods; that we should go there in the Fall, and he would supply us on credit, as the British traders had done."

Black Hawk seems to have accepted of this proposition, and he and his people were very much pleased. Acting in good faith, they fitted out for their winter's hunt, and went to Fort Madison in high spirits to receive from the trader their outfit of supplies. But after waiting some time, they were told by the trader that he would not trust them. It was in vain that they pleaded the promise of their great father at Washington. The trader was inexorable; and disappointed and crestfallen they turned sadly towards their own village. "Few of us," says Black Hawk, "slept that night; all was gloom and discontent. In the morning a canoe was seen ascending the river; it soon arrived, bearing an express, who brought intelligence that La Gutrie, a British trader, had landed at Rock Island with two boats loaded with goods, and requested us to come up immediately, because he had good news for us, and a variety of presents. The express presented us with tobacco, pipes and wampum. The news ran through our camp like fire on a prairie. Our lodges were soon taken down, and all started for Rock Island.. Here ended all hopes of our remaining at peace, having been forced into the war by being deceived."

We can not follow Black Hawk's narrative through. The substance of it is that he joined the British; that the British flattered him, decked him with medals, called him "General Black Hawk," made him many specious promises, excited his jealousy against the Americans, and armed and equipped his band. He went into the service, where he met with defeat and disappointment, and soon abandoned the British and came home. He says, "I was now tired of being with them, our success being bad, and having taken no plunder."

A portion of the Sacs and Foxes, at the head of whom was Keokuk (the Watchful Fox), were disposed to sanction the treaty of 1804, and to cultivate friendly relations with the United States. This divided the nation into the "war party," and the "peace party," as they were called. When Black Hawk and his band joined the British, the rest of the Sacs and Foxes remained neutral, and for self protection organized under Keokuk as their chief. Black Hawk says he was informed, after he had gone to the war, that the nation, which had been reduced to so small a body of fighting men, were unable to defend themselves in case the Americans should attack them, and having all the old men and women and children belonging to the warriors who had joined the British on their hands to provide for, a council was held, and it was agreed that Quash-qua-me (the Lance), and other chiefs, together with the old men, women and children, and such others as chose to accompany them, should go to St. Louis, and place themselves under the American chief stationed there. They accordingly went down, and were received as the "friendly band" of the Sacs and Foxes, and were provided for and sent up the Missouri River. On Black Hawk's return from the British army, he says Keokuk was introduced to him as the war chief of the braves then in the village. He inquired how he had become chief, and was informed that their spies had seen a large armed force going towards Peoria, and fears were entertained of an attack upon the village; whereupon a council was held, which concluded to leave the village and cross over to the west side of the Mississippi. Keokuk had been standing at the door of the lodge where the council was held, not being allowed to enter on account of having never killed an enemy, where he remained till Wa-co-me came out. Keokuk asked permission to speak in the council, which Wa-co-me obtained for him. Keokuk then addressed the chiefs; he remonstrated against the desertion of the village, their own homes and the graves of their fathers, and offered to defend the village. The council consented that he should be their war chief. He marshaled his braves, sent out spies, and advanced on the trail leading to Peoria; but returned without seeing the enemy. The Americans did not disturb the village, and all were satisfied with the appointment of Keokuk.

Keokuk, like Black Hawk, was a descendant of the Sac branch of the nation, and was born on Rock River, in 1780. He was of a pacific disposition, but possessed the elements of true courage, and could fight when occasion required, with a cool judgment and heroic energy. In his first battle he encountered and killed a Sioux, which placed him in the rank of warriors, and he was honored with a public feast by his tribe in commemoration of the event. On another occasion he was hunting with his band near the country of the Sioux, when he unexpectedly encountered a mounted band of the latter; the Sacs were also on horseback. Not having the force or the preparation to openly resist their enemy, nor the opportunity to retreat, Keokuk immediately formed his men into a circle, and ordered them to dismount and take shelter behind their horses. The Sioux raised their war-whoop and charged upon them with great fury, but the Sacs, protected by their horses, took deliberate aim, and compelled them to retreat. The attack was repeated several times, but the Sioux were finally driven from the field with considerable loss.

At another time, when the Sacs supposed the Sioux were on friendly terms with them, Keokuk, on a hunting excursion, came suddenly upon a large encampment of them, painted for war, and apparently on their way to attack his village. His warriors were widely scattered over the prairies, so that he could not immediately call them to his aid. These circumstances called into requisition his tact and decision. He at once mounted his horse, and, unattended, rode boldly into the camp of the enemy. In the midst of the camp he saw the war-pole, and around it the painted Sioux engaged in the war-dance, and uttering expressions of vengeance against the Sacs. Keokuk dashed into the midst of them and demanded to see their chief. The chief approached. "I have come to let you know," said Keokuk, "that there are traitors in your camp. They have told me you were preparing to attack my village. I know they told me lies, for you could not, after smoking the peace-pipe, be so base as to murder my women and children in my absence. None but cowards would be guilty of such conduct." The Sioux gathered around him with the seeming intention to seize him, when he shouted, "I supposed they told me lies, but if what I have heard is true, the Sacs are ready for you." And putting spurs to his horse he left the camp at full speed. Several guns were fired after him, and several Sioux mounted their horses for pursuit; but he escaped, brandishing his tomahawk and making the woods resound with his war-whoop. He immediately gathered his forces and prepared to protect his village; but the Sioux, from Keokuk's bold adventure into their camp, concluded that he had some deep-laid stratagem to lead them into, and so abandoned the enterprise.

Keokuk has been described as an orator entitled to rank with the most gifted of his race. In person he was tall, and of portly bearing; in his public speeches he displayed a commanding attitude and graceful gestures; he spoke rapidly, but his enunciation was clear, distinct and forcible; he culled his figures from the stores of nature, and based his arguments on skillful logic. Unfortunately for the reputation of Keokuk, as an orator among white people, he was never able to obtain an interpreter who could claim even a slight acquaintance with philosophy. With one exception only his interpreters were unacquainted with the elements of their mother-tongue. Of this serious hindrance to his fame, Keokuk was well aware, and retained Frank Labershure, who had received a rudimental education in the French and English languages, until the latter broke down by dissipation, and died. But during the meridian of his career among the white people, he was compelled to submit his speeches for translation to uneducated men, whose range of thought fell below the flights of a gifted mind, and the fine imagery drawn from nature was beyond their power of reproduction. He had sufficient knowledge of the English language to make him sensible of this bad rendering of his thoughts, and often a feeling of mortification at the bungling efforts was depicted on his countenance while speaking. The proper place to form a correct estimate of his ability, as an orator, was in the Indian council, where he addressed himself exclusively to those who understood his language, and witness the electrical effect of his eloquence upon his audience.

Keokuk seems to have possesssed a more sober judgment, and to have had a more intelligent view of the great strength and resources of the United States, than his noted and restless contemporary, Black Hawk. He knew from the first that the reckless war which Black Hawk and his band had determined to carry on, could result in nothing but defeat and disaster, and used every argument against it. The large number of warriors whom he had dissuaded from following Black Hawk, became, however, greatly excited with the war-spirit after Stillman's defeat, and but for the signal tact displayed by Keokuk on that occasion, would have forced him to submit to their wishes in joining the rest of the warriors in the field. A war-dance was held, and Keokuk took part in it, seeming to be moved with the current of the rising storm. When the dance was over, he called the council to prepare for war. He made a speech, in which he admitted the justice of their complaints against the white man. To seek redress was a noble aspiration of their nature. The blood of their brethren had been shed by the white man, and the spirits of their braves, slain in battle, called loudly for vengeance. "I am your chief," he said, "and it is my duty to lead you to battle, if, after fully considering the matter, you are determined to go. But before you decide on taking this important step, it is wise to inquire into the chances of success." He then portrayed to them the great power of the United States, against whom they would have to contend, that their chance of success was utterly hopeless. "But," said he, "if you do determine to go upon the warpath, I will agree to lead you on one condition, viz., that before we go we will kill all our old men, and our wives and children, to save them from a lingering death of starvation, and that every one of us determine to leave our homes on the other side of the Mississippi."

This was a strong but truthful picture of the prospect before them, and was presented in such a forcible light as to cool their ardor and cause them to abandon the rash undertaking.

After his return from the British service, Black Hawk led several small war parties, obtained a few scalps, and joined in a war-dance at his own village. He was soon informed that the British had gone to Prairie du Chien and taken Fort Crawford, while, at the same time, five or six boats loaded with supplies and American soldiers, were on their way up the river as reinforcements. He collected his forces and pursued the boats by land, overtaking them about half way up the rapids. One of the boats soon grounded, and he approached cautiously and fired upon it, wounding some of the men. He says, "I could hear screaming in the boat, and encouraged my men to keep on firing." Preparing his bows and arrows, he threw fire into the sails, and soon the boat was in a blaze. One of the boats that had proceeded up the rapids, seeing the distress of their companions, returned and rescued all except the killed and disabled, the Indians capturing the boat, and also firing on the one which came to the rescue, wounding Major Campbell, who was in command. Black Hawk distributed the plunder among his warriors, and returned to his village and erected the British flag. Some of the British came down from Prairie du Chien and landed a cannon at Rock Island for the benefit of Black Hawk and his party. Earth-works were constructed and a few artillerymen left to man the gun.

Peace being soon declared between the United States and Great Britain, Black Hawk and his party were also required to make peace with the government, and for that purpose repaired to Portage des Sioux, where a treaty was entered into, September 14, 1815.

"In the Spring," says Black Hawk, "the great chief, at St. Louis, having sent word for us to go down and confirm the treaty of peace, we did not hesitate, but started immediately that we might smoke the peace-pipe with him. We met the great chief in council, and the pipe of peace was smoked. Here, for the first time, I touched the goose-quill to the treaty, not knowing, however, that by that act I consented to give away my village. Had that been explained to me, I should have opposed it, and never would have signed the treaty, as my recent conduct will clearly prove."

This was a renewal of the treaty of November 3, 1804, and was signed by Black Hawk, May 13, 1816.

When he returned to his village, he found that troops had arrived, and were building Fort Armstrong, at Rock Island. He made no resistance to the building of the fort, but he says he was very sorry, as Rock Island was the best island in the Mississippi, and had long been the Summer resort of the young people of his tribe. It was their garden, such as white people have near their villages, and supplied them with strawberries, blackberries, gooseberries, plums, apples, and various kinds of nuts, while its waters, situated in the rapids of the river, supplied them with plenty of excellent fish. The Indians had great veneration for this spot, and were strongly attached to it. They believed that Rock Island was under the guardianship of a good spirit or genius, who had his abode in the island till he was driven off by the advent of the white man, and then an evil spirit took his place.

It was not until several years later, when his village was encroached upon by the increase of settlement, his grounds and cornfields taken from him, and he and his people driven off their possessions by military authority, that Black Hawk finally took up arms in defiance of the authority of the United States.

THE BLACK HAWK WAR.

The hunting-grounds of the Sacs and Foxes were on the west side of the Mississippi, and during the period that elapsed from the time they had set out upon their usual Winter's hunt, in the Fall of 1830, and their return in the Winter, the whites had taken possession of Black Hawk's village; their families were occupying the wigwams of the Indians, while the women and children of the latter had been driven out and were shelterless on the banks of the river. This state of things became intolerable to the Indians, and they determined to repossess their village at all hazards. Early in the Spring of 1831, Black Hawk and his band recrossed the Mississippi, and, in a menacing manner, took possession of their bark cabins and old cornfields. According to Black Hawk's statement, he did not mean to be provoked into a war by anything less than the blood of some of his people, which he claimed the whites dared not shed so long as the land belonged to the government; for it was expressly stipulated in the treaty which had been the cause of all their troubles, that the Indians were not obliged to leave their lands so long as they remained unsold by the United States. It does not appear that they occupied any other lands than those owned by the government.

But the whites became so clamorous against the encroachments of the returned Indians, that Governor Reynolds, of Illinois, took the responsibility of declaring the state invaded, and ordered General Gaines to proceed to Rock Island with a military force and drive the Indians to the west side of the Mississippi. At this time it was the general opinion along the frontiers that the Indians intended to unite in a great war against the whites, extending from Rock River to the borders of Mexico, and this belief, no doubt, had a great deal to do in shaping the course adopted by the military authorities. In view of this emergency, General Gaines called on Governor Reynolds for seven hundred mounted volunteers, which were immediately furnished, and on the 10th of June marched from Beardstown, on the Illinois River, reaching the Indian village at Rock Island in four or five days. Every preparation had been made for a battle; but on the preceding night the Indians had quietly withdrawn and crossed to the west side of the Mississippi. The volunteers then burned the Indian village, General Gaines, theatening to pursue the Indians on the west side, soon brought Black Hawk and his chiefs to his camp to sue for peace. A new treaty was accordingly entered into, by the terms of which Black Hawk and his band agreed to remain forever on the west side of the river, and never to recross it without permission from the President or the Governor of the state. Thus the treaty of 1804 was in substance again ratified by Black Hawk and his chiefs. But the observance of it was, unfortunately, of very short duration on the part of the Indians.

Early in the Spring of 1832, Black Hawk again made his appearance with his band of followers on the east side of the river. It could not be doubted that he intended to use force in the recovery of his village, and in the execution of this purpose he expected aid from his friends and allies, the Winnebagoes, Kickapoos and Pottawatomies, and active co-operation on the part of his British father at Malden. In all this he was disappointed, having been made the victim of a too easy confidence in promises and representations made by his agents. But whatever may have been his hopes of assistance, his breach of faith in recrossing the Mississippi, after the treaty of 1831, was inexcusable.

All was now preparation for war. Governor Reynolds made another call on the militia of Illinois, and in a few days eighteen hundred men rallied under his banner at Beardstown. The force was organized into four regiments, and a spy battalion. Colonel DeWitt commanded the first; Colonel Fry the second; Colonel Thomas the third; Colonel Thompson the fourth; while the spy battalion was commanded by Colonel James D. Henry; and the whole was put under Brigadier General Samuel Whiteside, of the Illinois militia. The line of march was taken up on the 27th of April, via Oquawka, on the Mississippi, to the mouth of Rock River. Meantime General Atkinson, with the regular forces, had set out about the first of April for the Upper Mississippi. They met, and held a council of war at the mouth of Rock River. On the same night of General Atkinson's arrival, Black Hawk had collected his forces on the Mississippi in the vicinity of where Fort Madison had stood, and with his women and children in canoes, and his warriors and braves on horseback, joined by the Prophet below Rock Island, had ascended Rock River towards the Prophet's village. Having ascertained their whereabouts, an order was sent to them by General Atkinson to immediately return and recross the Mississippi. Black Hawk refused to obey. Another express was dispatched with the threat that if they did not return peaceably, they would be driven back by force. To this Black Hawk replied, "If you wish to fight us, come on." It was agreed by the generals that the volunteers should ascend Rock River about fifty miles, to the Prophet's village, and there encamp and await the arrival of the regulars with provisions. This order was not strictly carried out. When General Whiteside arrived at the Prophet's village, he did not encamp there; his men burnt the town, and the brigade proceeded about forty miles further, to Dixon's Ferry, where they awaited General Atkinson's arrival. Here they found two battalions of mounted volunteers, two hundred and seventy-five men, under command of Majors Stillman and Bailey. The officers of this latter force were ambitious to meet the foe, and begged to be put forward on some dangerous service, in which they could distinguish themselves. To gratify them, they were ordered up Rock River, to spy out the Indians. They went up on the southeast side, and camped all night at Sycamore Creek. While Stillman and his command were in camp at that point, Black Hawk and his warriors were not far off, though their whereabouts was unknown to the gallant Major. Black Hawk was at that moment making arrangements to propose terms of peace to his adversaries, and on the morning of the 14th of May, while Stillman and his force were in camp, he sent three braves with a flag of truce, to make known to the Americans his willingness to surrender. As they approached—not near enough, however, to show their flag of truce—Stillman's men, supposing them to be a portion of the enemy they were in search of, mounted their horses in hot haste, and dashed down upon them, without waiting for orders from their commander. The Indians retreated towards the camp of their chief, the Americans following at full speed. Black Hawk saw them dashing down upon him, and giving up all hopes of negotiation for peace, raised the war-whoop, as a signal for his braves to encounter the foe. Without hardly waiting for the onslaught, Stillman's men retreated in great haste, supposing themselves pursued by a thousand savage warriors, and imparting their terror to the camp, through which they rushed, the whole of Stillman's force joined in the panic stricken retreat, and paused not till they had reached Dixon's Ferry. In this engagement, eleven of Stillman's men, and the entire camp, with its equipments, fell into the hands of Black Hawk. Thirty or forty of the Indians pursued the fugitive volunteers ten or a dozen miles.

There were, no doubt, brave men in this detachment; some of them—Major Perkins and Captain Austin—showed their bravery by protecting the retreat and fighting manfully. But the whole party was composed of raw militia, without discipline or experience, and therefore suitable allowance should be made for them.

A council of war was held that evening by General Whiteside. The next day the volunteers marched to the scene of the disaster. The Indians had scattered before their arrival. The dead bodies of the eleven who fell were collected and buried in a common grave. That evening they marched to Dixon. On the following day General Atkinson arrived with the regular forces, and supplies of provisions. The army at this time amounted to twenty-four hundred men, including regulars and volunteers. But the volunteers were anxious to be discharged. Accordingly, they were marched to Ottawa, Illinois, and discharged by Governor Reynolds on the 27th and 28th of May, 1832.

After Stillman's defeat, the mineral regions were exposed to the ravages of the Indians. Colonel Dodge, acting under the instruction of Governor Reynolds, immediately called on the inhabitants of that part of the country to organize themselves into companies, place their families in forts and stockades, and hold themselves in readiness for an immediate call into active service. These orders and recommendations were promptly attended to throughout the whole country then settled south of the Wisconsin River. The Winnebagoes were also visited by Colonel Dodge, and the sub-agent, Mr. Gratiot, and pledged to remain neutral during the war.

On the 22d of May, a party of about seventy Indians made an attack on a settlement on Indian creek, a tributary of the Fox River in Illinois, and massacred fifteen persons, consisting of men, women and children, who had assembled at a house of one of the settlers. These persons belonged to the families of Messrs. Hall, Davis and Pettigrew. Two of Mr. Hall's daughters were taken captive to Black Hawk's camp, near Lake Koshkonong. But after a few days they were liberated and given into the hands of some Winnebagoes whom General Atkinson had induced to go there and procure their release, by the offer of a reward of two thousand dollars, which was promptly paid the rescuers, and the two girls were delivered into the hands of their countrymen at Blue Mounds, on the 3d of June. General Dodge had them sent to their friends in the southern part of Illinois.

Many murders of individuals were committed by straggling Indians about this time. A man by the name of Durley was killed near Buffalo Grove on the 21st of May. On the 22d, some seven or eight persons started out from Dixon in search of land, and on their way they discovered and buried the body of Durley. The next morning they were surrounded by a body of Indians, and four of them were killed, viz.: Felix St. Vrain, Indian agent at Rock Island, Aaron Hawley, and two men by the names of Fowler and Hale. The others made their escape to Galena. Also, about this time, a man was killed on Bureau Creek, another on Fox River, two more on the Chicago road near Ottawa, a Mr. Winters near Dixon's Ferry, and a Dunkard preacher, whose head they cut off on account of his long beard, and carried off as a trophy. On the 6th of June, James Aubury was killed at a spring about a mile and a half from Mound Fort, where he had gone to get water. Lieutenant Force and a man by the name of Green were subsequently killed at the same place by a roving party of Sacs, who, it was supposed, had been guided thither by some treacherous Winnebagoes.

Meantime a new force of volunteers had been called for by Governor Reynolds, to rendezvous at Beardstown and Hennepin, and a regiment from among those who had been recently discharged, to remain on duty till the new forces could be assembled. The latter was soon raised: Jacob Fry was elected Colonel; James D. Henry, Lieutenant Colonel; John Thomas, Major. Samuel Whiteside, the late commanding General, volunteered as a private. Captain Adam Snyder, of this regiment, was sent to range the country between Rock River and Galena, and was fired upon in his camp at night by Indians near Burr Oak Grove, on the 17th of June, 1832. The next morning he pursued them, who proved to be four in number, and drove them into a slough and killed them all, losing one of his own men mortally wounded. On his return, bearing the wounded soldier, his men, suffering from thirst, were scattered in search of water, when they were attacked by about seventy Indians, who had been secretly watching his movements. His men at first attempted to retreat, but Captain Snyder called on private General Whiteside to assist him in forming his command. The brave General, in a loud voice, threatened to shoot the first man who attempted to run, and the ranks were quickly formed. Both parties took position behind trees. Whiteside, being an excellent marksman, shot the Indian leader with his rifle, whereupon the Indians began to retreat. The loss upon their side was not ascertained, but Snyder lost two men killed and one wounded.

The battle of Peccatonica was fought on the 16th of June, at the Horse-shoe Bend in the stream of that name, and occurred in the following manner: On the 14th, a party of Indians had murdered Spafford and four others, who were working in a cornfield near the mouth of Spafford's Creek, on the Peccatonica. Colonel Dodge being informed of the massacre, sent a dispatch at midnight to Capt. James H. Gentry, at Platte Mounds, to collect all his forces, and meet him at Hamilton's Fort, he starting the next morning, in company with Thomas Jenkins and John Messersmith, Jr., and camping that night at Tetweil's Diggings. On the next morning, when they were within a short distance of Hamilton's Fort, they met a German, named Apple, on horseback, riding from the fort to his cabin, to make ready to enter the service. He had only passed them a few moments, when firing was heard, and Apple's horse came galloping back, bloody and without a rider. Captain Gentry's men had already arrived at the fort on the preceding evening, and were instantly ready for action. Colonel Dodge led the pursuit, and in a short time struck the Indian trail, leading across the prairie. The Indians were overtaken at the banks of the Peccatonica. They were on the opposite side, concealed under sand banks, and sheltered in thickets. Colonel Dodge had with him twenty-eight men; seven of them were detailed to hold the horses; with the remaining twenty-one, dismounted, their intrepid leader waded the river, and instantly on rising upon the opposite bank received the fire of the Indians. Without giving them time to re-load, an instantaneous charge was made upon them by the volunteers, and the contest became literally hand to hand. It was short and decisive; for before it became necessary for the volunteers to charge their guns a second time, every Indian, seventeen in number, was killed. The loss of the volunteers was three killed and wounded.

On the 25th of June, the volunteers under the late requisition had arrived at the places of rendezvous. They were divided into three brigades; the first commanded by Gen. Alexander Posey; the second by Gen. Milton R. Alexander; the third by Gen. James D. Henry. The whole volunteer force at this time amounted to three thousand two hundred men, besides three companies of rangers, under command of Major Bogart, left behind to protect the frontier settlements.

On the 18th of June, Captain Stephenson was severely wounded in an unsuccessful attempt to dislodge a party of Indians from a thicket, and also lost two or three of his men. On the 20th, Force and Green were killed by a party of Indians within sight of Mound Fort. Colonel Dodge pursued them as far as Sugar River, when the trail became scattering, and he returned. On his homeward march he buried the bodies of Force and Green.

On the 22d, the new forces assembled on the Illinois were put in motion by General Atkinson, who now assumed command of the whole army, and began to march up Rock River. Major John Dement, with a battalion of spies attached to the first brigade was sent in advance. The main army concentrated at Dixon. On the 24th an attempt was made by a considerable body of Indians to surprise the fort at Buffalo Grove, twelve miles north of Dixon. It was unsuccessful, though a sharp engagement ensued, in which sixteen Indians were killed. On the 25th a severe fight took place between a company of spies under Major Dement, and a band of Indians, near Kellogg's Grove. The Indians' yell so frightened the horses, that they were thrown into confusion, and were obliged to retreat. Nine Indians—two of them chiefs—were killed, and several wounded, while the whites lost five men killed, and about thirty of their horses.

General Atkinson being informed that Black Hawk and his force were at Lake Koshkonong, immediately moved thither with a portion of his army; but on his arrival he found that the Indians had decamped so secretly and successfully that the direction they had taken could not be detected. The whole army was ordered to concentrate at Lake Koshkonong, and detachments sent to obtain supplies at Fort Winnebago. Generals Posey and Alexander returned with the supplies, while Henry and Dodge, with their separate commands, struck across the country to Rock River, and on their arrival at the rapids discovered the Indian trail, which they followed, and found led in the direction of the Wisconsin River. It was evident that the retreating body was large and that the enemy had but recently passed. The pursuing troops hastened on from the northern shore of the Fourth Lake, towards the Wisconsin, and, on the 21st of July, arrived at the hills which skirt the left bank of the river, nearly opposite Sauk Prairie. Here was the whole force of Black Hawk, his women and children, hastening by every effort to escape across the river to avoid the impending conflict with the whites, in which they could reasonably expect nothing but destruction. But to cover the retreat of the women and children, the aged and infirm, it became necessary that Black Hawk should make a determined stand, which he accordingly did.

The Indians were in the bottom lands hastening to remove their people to an island in the river, when the pursuing whites arrived on the heights. A company of spies was in the advance, and having come upon the Indians very suddenly, in descending the high grounds, were instantly attacked and driven back on the main body, which had already formed in readiness for action. Colonel Dodge, commanding, occupied the front, and sustained the first attack of the enemy. The main body, under General Henry, soon joined Colonel Dodge, and, in its united action, a complete victory was obtained over Black Hawk and his forces. The battle commenced about five o'clock in the afternoon, and closed about sunset. The Indians were supposed to number between five and six hundred. Their loss was estimated at about sixty killed and a great number wounded, many of whom died on the march to the Mississippi. The loss of the Americans was one killed and eight wounded.

During the night following the battle of Wisconsin Heights, Black Hawk made his escape with his remaining force and people down the Wisconsin River. A dispatch was sent to the commandant at Fort Crawford, Prairie du Chien, to intercept them in their passage down the river. That officer captured several canoes containing the women and children, but the warriors marched on foot along the banks of the river. Meantime the forces under General Atkinson and Colonel Dodge had crossed to the north side of the Wisconsin and discovered the trail of the Indians under the bluffs, which they followed till they reached the Mississippi near the mouth of Bad Axe River, on the first of August. Along this route, the great number of dead bodies and newly-made Indian graves which they discovered, told too plainly the losses and sufferings of Black Hawk's people.

A steamboat had been dispatched by Colonel Loomis up the Mississippi, as far as Black River, where a number of canoes were seized, which were supposed to have been provided by the Winnebagoes to aid Black Hawk in his contemplated retreat across the Mississippi. This boat returned to Prairie du Chien, and another, considered more serviceable, was sent up the next day, which arrived at the mouth of the Bad Axe soon after the battle had begun, in time to participate in it.

About two o'clock on the morning of the 2d of August, the line of march was taken up to the scene of the last and decisive battle, which terminated Black Hawk's military career. Colonel Dodge's command formed the advance, supported by the regular troops under Colonel Zachary Taylor. About sunrise Captain Dickson, who commanded the spy company, reported that he was up with the Indians, and asked for orders. Colonel Dodge sent orders for him to attack them at once, and at the same time moved rapidly on with his own command, supported by Colonel Taylor with the regulars. The Indians were attacked in front by fire from the steamboat, and on all sides, and in the rear, by an exasperated foe. Many women endeavored to escape by swimming the Mississippi with their children on their backs, and were drowned. Others succeeded in crossing, and were pursued and killed by a large body of Sioux on the west shore. The battle lasted about two hours, and was a complete slaughter and route of the Indians. Black Hawk fled to the Winnebago village, at Prairie la Crosse; and, on the 27th of August, 1832, two Winnebago Indians, Decorah, the One-Eyed, and Chaetar, arrived in camp, at Prairie du Chien, bringing Black Hawk and the Prophet as prisoners. Black Hawk, on that occasion, addressed General Street, the Winnebago Indian Agent, in language as follows:

"My warriors fell around me. It began to look dismal. I saw my evil day at hand. The sun rose clear on us in the morning; at night it sank in a dark cloud, and looked like a ball of fire. This was the last sun that shone on Black Hawk. He is now a prisoner to the white man. But he can stand the torture. He is not afraid of death. He is no coward. Black Hawk is an Indian. He has done nothing of which an Indian need be ashamed. He has fought the battles of his country against the white man, who came year after year to cheat them and take away their lands. You know the cause of our making war. It is known to all white men. They ought to be ashamed of it. The white men despise the Indians and drive them from their homes. But the Indians are not deceitful. Indians do not steal.

"Black Hawk is satisfied. He will go to the world of spirits contented. He has done his duty. His Father will meet him and reward him.

"The white men do not scalp the head, but they do worse—they poison the heart. It is not pure with them. His countrymen will not be scalped, but they will, in a few years, become like the white man, so that you can not hurt them; and there must be, as in the white settlements, as many officers as men, to take care of them and keep them in order. Farewell to my nation! Farewell to Black Hawk!"

The remaining history of this fallen warrior shall be brie. He was confined in Jefferson barracks till the Spring of 1833, when orders came to General Atkinson to send him, together with his wife and daughter, to Washington. They were accordingly sent, and arrived on the 22d of April. On their way they were astonished at the greatness of the country and the evidences which met them on every hand of the power and resources of the United States, of which, up to that time, they had formed no conception. No doubt if Black Hawk could have known before he recklessly rushed into war what a country he was fighting against, he never would have drawn the sword. But he was ignorant of every thing American, except the few traders, soldiers and settlers, whom he had encountered on the frontiers, and without the education necessary to comprehend the situation. The famous words of Black Hawk to General Jackson—"I am a man and you are another"—were uttered on the occasion of his first meeting the President, at Washington.

On the 26th of April, they were taken to Fortress Monroe, where they remained till the 4th of June, 1833, when orders were given for them to be liberated and returned to their own country. During his stay at Fortress Monroe, Black Hawk had become ardently attached to the commander, Colonel Eustis, and on parting with him said: "The memory of your friendship will remain till the Great Spirit shall say, 'It is time for Black Hawk to sing his death-song.'"

By order of the President he was brought back to Iowa through the principal Eastern cities; crowds flocked to see him all along his route, and he was very much flattered by the attentions he received. He lived among his people on the Iowa River till that reservation was sold in 1836, when, with the rest of the Sacs and Foxes, he removed to the Des Moines Reservation, where he remained till his death, which occurred on the 3d of October, 1838. Black Hawk was buried on the Des Moines River, in a sitting posture, according to the custom of his tribe.

THE BLACK HAWK PURCHASE.

At the close of the Black Hawk War the difficulties with the Sacs and Foxes were adjusted by the cession, on their part, to the United States of a strip of territory on the eastern border of Iowa, along the Mississippi, extending from the northern boundary of Missouri to the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, and averaging about fifty miles in width. This strip of territory contained about six millions of acres, and although not the first portion of Iowa ceded to the United States by the Sacs and Foxes, was, nevertheless, the first opened to actual settlement by that first wave of immigration that began to flow across the Mississippi, as soon as the Indian title was extinguished. This territory has been known as the "Black Hawk Purchase." It was ceded to the United States by the Sacs and Foxes, in a treaty held on the ground now occupied by the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company, in the City of Davenport, September 21, 1832, General Winfield Scott being commissioner on the part of the United States. The treaty came into effect on the first of June, 1833, when the Indians quietly removed from it, giving to the white settlers free access to this beautiful and fertile region.

KEOKUK'S RESERVE.

Out of the Black Hawk Purchase, the United States, by the terms of the treaty, reserved for the Sacs and Foxes a tract of land containing four hundred square miles, situated on the Iowa River, and including Keokuk's village on its right bank. In September, 1836, this tract, known as "Keokuk's Reserve," was ceded to the United States in a treaty made on the bank of the Mississippi, above Davenport, between the chiefs and head men of the Sacs and Foxes, and Governor Lodge, of Wisconsin Territory. There were present at the council about a thousand chiefs, braves and warriors, and it was the largest assemblage of the kind ever held by the Sacs and Foxes to treat for the sale of their lands. Keokuk was head chief and the principal speaker on the occasion. Black Hawk was present, but as a fallen chief was not allowed to participate in the council. He stood outside, with a few friends, a silent spectator. This was the last time the old chief ever visited the vicinity of his former home, at Rock Island. By the terms of this treaty the Sacs and Foxes were removed to another reservation on the Des Moines River, where an agency was established for them at what is now the Town of Agency City.

THE SAC AND FOX AGENCY.

Soon after the removal of the Indians to their reservation on the Des Moines River, General Joseph M. Street was transferred from the agency of the Winnebagoes, at Prairie du Chien, to establish an agency among the Sacs and Foxes, and these tribes were placed under his charge. A farm was selected, on which the necessary farm buildings were erected, and a comfortable frame house for the agent and his family, at the expense of the Indian fund. A salaried agent was employed to superintend the farm and dispose of the crops. Two mills were erected, one on Soap Creek, the other on Sugar Creek; the latter was soon swept away by a flood, but the former remained and did good service for many years. Connected with the agency were Joseph Smart and John Goodell, interpreters; the latter interpreter for Hard Fish's band. Three of the Indian chiefs, Keokuk, Wapello and Appanoose, had each a large field improved, the two former on the right bank of the Des Moines, back from the river, in what is now "Keokuk's Prairie;" the latter on the present site of the City of Ottumwa. Among the traders connected with the agency were the Messrs. Ewing, from Ohio, and Phelps & Co., from Illinois, and also Mr. J. P. Eddy, who established his post at what is now the site of Eddyville.

The Indians at this agency became idle and listless in the absence of their natural and wonted excitements, and many of them plunged into dissipation. Keokuk himself became dissipated in the latter years of his life, and it has been reported that he died of delirium tremens after his removal with his tribe to Kansas.

In May, 1843, most of the Indians were removed up the Des Moines River, above the temporary line of Red Rock, having ceded the remnant of their lands in Iowa to the United States, on the 21st of September 1837, and on 11th of October, 1842. By the terms of the latter treaty they held possession of the "New Purchase" till the Autumn of 1845, when the most of them were removed to their reservation in Kansas, the balance being removed in the Spring of 1846.

INDIAN TREATIES.

We close this brief Indian history with a summary of the treatise relating to Iowa:

1. Treaty with the Sioux—Made July 19, 1815. Ratified December 26, 1815: This treaty was made at Portage des Sioux, between the Sioux of Minnesota, and Upper Iowa and the United States, by William Clark and Ninian Edwards, Commissioners, and was merely a treaty of peace and friendship on the part of those Indians towards the United States at the close of the War of 1812.

2. Treaty with the Sacs.—A similar treaty of peace and amity was made at Portage des Sioux, between the United States and the tribe or nation of the Sacs, by William Clark, Ninian Edwards and Auguste Choteau, on the 13th of September, 1815, and ratified at the same date as the above. In this, the treaty of 1804 was reaffirmed and the Sacs here represented, promised for themselves and their bands to keep entirely separate from the Sacs of Rock River, who, under Black Hawk, had joined the British in the war just then closed.

3. Treaty with the Foxes.—A separate treaty of peace was made with the Foxes at Portage des Sioux by the same commissioners, on the 14th of September, 1815, and ratified the same as the above, wherein the Foxes reaffirmed the treaty of St. Louis, of November 3, 1804, and agreed to deliver up all their prisoners to the officer in command at Fort Clark, now Peoria, Illinois.

4. Treaty with the Iowas.—A treaty of peace and mutual good will was made between the United States and the Iowa tribe of Indians, at Portage des Sioux, by the same commissioners as above, on the 16th of September, 1815, at the close of the war with Great Britain, and ratified at the same date as the others.

5. Treaty with the Sacs of Rock River—Made at St. Louis, on the 13th of May, 1816, between the United States and the Sacs of Rock River, by the commissioners, William Clark, Ninian Edwards and Auguste Choteau, and ratified December 30, 1816. In this treaty, that of 1804 was re-established and confirmed by twenty-two chiefs and head men of the Sacs of Rock River, and Black Hawk himself attached to it his signature, or, as he said, "touched the goose-quill."

6. Treaty of 1824.—On the 4th of August, 1824, a treaty was made between the United States and the Sacs and Foxes, in the City of Washington, by William Clark, Commissioner, wherein the Sac and Fox nation relinquished their title to all lands in Missouri, and that portion of the southeast corner of Iowa known as the "Half-Breed Tract," was set off and reserved for the use of the half-breeds of the Sacs and Foxes, they holding title in the same manner as Indians. This treaty was ratified January 18, 1825.

7. Treaty of August 19, 1825.—At this date a treaty was made by William Clark and Lewis Cass, at Prairie du Chien, between the United States and the Chippewas, Sacs and Foxes, Menomonies, Winnebagoes and a portion of the Ottawas and Pottawattomies. In this treaty, in order to make peace between the contending tribes as to the limits of their respective hunting-grounds in Iowa, it was agreed that the United States Government should run a boundary line between the Sioux, on the north, and the Sacs and Foxes, on the south, as follows:

Commencing at the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, on the west bank of the Mississippi, and ascending said Iowa River to its west fork; thence up the fork to its source; thence crossing the fork of Red Cedar River in a direct line to the second or upper fork of the Des Moines River; thence in a direct line to the lower fork of the Calumet River, and down that river to its junction with the Missouri River.

8. Treaty of 1830.—On the 15th of July, 1830, the confederate tribes of the Sacs and Foxes ceded to the United States a strip of country lying south of the above line, twenty miles in width, and extending along the line aforesaid from the Mississippi to the Des Moines River. The Sioux also, whose possessions were north of the line, ceded to the Government, in the same treaty, a like strip on the north side of the boundary. Thus the United States, at the ratification of this treaty, February 24th, 1831, came into possession of a portion of Iowa forty miles in width, extending along the Clark and Cass line of 1825, from the Mississippi to the Des Moines River. This territory was known as the "Neutral Ground," and the tribes on either side of the line were allowed to fish and hunt on it unmolested till it was made a Winnebago reservation, and the Winnebagoes were removed to it in 1841. (See article Fort Atkinson.)

9. Treaty with the Sacs and Foxes and other Tribes.—At the same time of the above treaty respecting the "Neutral Ground," (July 15, 1830), the Sacs and Foxes, Western Sioux, Omahas, Iowas and Missouris, ceded to the United States a portion of the western slope of Iowa, the boundaries of which were defined as follows: Beginning at the upper fork of the Des Moines River, and passing the sources of the Little Sioux and Floyd Rivers, to the fork of the first creek that falls into the Big Sioux, or Calumet, on the east side; thence down said creek and the Calumet River to the Missouri River; thence down said Missouri River to the Missouri state line above the Kansas; thence along said line to the northwest corner of said state; thence to the high lands between the waters falling into the Missouri and Des Moines, passing to said high lands along the dividing ridge between the forks of the Grand River; thence along said high lands or ridge separating the waters of the Missouri from those of the Des Moines, to a point opposite the source of the Boyer River, and thence in a direct line to the upper fork of the Des Moines, the place of beginning.

It was understood that the lands ceded and relinquished by this treaty were to be assigned and allotted, under the direction of the President of the United States, to the tribes then living thereon, or to such other tribes as the President might locate thereon for hunting and other purposes. In consideration of three tracts of land ceded in this treaty, the United States agreed to pay to the Sacs, three thousand dollars; to the Foxes, three thousand dollars; to the Sioux, two thousand dollars; to the Yankton and Santie bands of Sioux, three thousand dollars; to the Omahas, two thousand five hundred dollars; and to the Ottoes and Missouris, two thousand five hundred dollars—to be paid annually for ten successive years. In addition to these annuities, Government agreed to furnish some of the tribes with blacksmiths and agricultural instruments to the amount of two hundred dollars, at the expense of the United States, and to set apart three thousand dollars annually for the education of the children of these tribes. It does not appear that any fort was erected in this territory prior to the erection of Fort Atkinson on the Neutral Ground, in 1840–41.

This treaty was made by William Clark, Superintendent of Indian affairs, and Col. Willoughby Morgan, of the United States 1st Infantry, and came into effect by proclamation, February 24, 1831.

10. Treaty with the Winnebagoes.—Made at Fort Armstrong, Rock Island, September 15, 1832, by Gen. Winfield Scott and Hon. John Reynolds, Governor of Illinois. In this treaty the Winnebagoes ceded to the United States all their lands lying on the east side of the Mississippi, and in part consideration therefor the United States granted to the Winnebagoes, to be held as other Indian lands are held, that portion of Iowa known as the Neutral Ground. The exchange of the two tracts of country was to take place on or before the first day of June, 1833. In addition to the Neutral Ground, it was stipulated that the United States should give the Winnebagoes, beginning in September, 1833, and continuing for twenty-seven successive years, ten thousand dollars in specie, and establish a school among them, with a farm and garden, and provide other facilities for the education of their children, not to exceed in cost three thousand dollars a year, and to continue the same for twenty-seven successive years. Six agriculturists, twelve yoke of oxen, and plows and other farming tools were to be supplied by the Government.

11. Treaty of 1832 with the Sacs and Foxes.—The treaty in which the Sacs and Foxes ceded to the United States that portion of Iowa known as the "Black Hawk Purchase," was made on the west side of the Mississippi, where Davenport is now situated, September 21, 1832, by General Scott and Governor Reynolds, of Illinois, Commissioners on the part of the United States, with Keokuk, Pashapaho, and some thirty other chiefs and warriors of the nation of Sacs and Foxes, assembled in council. The treaty was ratified February 13, 1833, and took effect on the first of June following. The limits of the territory ceded in this treaty are thus described:

"Beginning on the Mississippi River at a point where the Sac and Fox northern boundary line, as established by the second article of the treaty of Prairie du Chien, July, 1830, strikes said river; thence up said boundary line to a point fifty miles from the Mississippi, measured on said line; thence in a right line to the nearest point on the Red Cedar, of Iowa, forty miles from the Mississippi; thence in a right line to a point in the northern boundary of the State of Missouri, fifty miles measured on said boundary from the Mississippi River; thence by the last mentioned boundary to the Mississippi River, and by the western shore of said river to the place of beginning."

We have already stated that out of this purchase a reservation was made for the Sac and Fox Indians of four hundred square miles on the Iowa River. Government gave in fee simple to Antoine LeClaire, Interpreter, one section of land opposite Rock Island, and one section at the head of the first rapids above the island, on the Iowa side. This was the first title to land granted to an individual in Iowa by the United States.

In consideration of the land ceded to the United States, Government stipulated to pay the confederated tribes annually, for thirty consecutive years, the sum of twenty thousand dollars in specie, and paid the debts of the Indians at Rock Island which had accumulated for seventeen preceding years, namely, forty thousand dollars to Farnham and Davenport, Indian traders. Government also generously donated to the Sac and Fox women and children whose husbands and fathers had fallen in the Black Hawk war, thirty-five beef cattle, twelve bushels of salt, thirty barrels of pork, fifty barrels of flour, and six thousand bushels of Indian corn.

12. Treaty of 1836.—In a treaty made and entered into "on the right bank of the Mississippi River, in the County of Dubuque and Territory of Wisconsin, opposite Rock Island," September 28, 1836, Henry Dodge, Commissioner on the part of the United States, the Sacs and Foxes ceded to the United States their reservation of four hundred sections on the Iowa River, the Government paying therefor thirty thousand dollars, and an annuity of ten thousand dollars for ten successive years, together with other sums and debts of the Indians to various parties.

13. Treaty of 1837.—On the 21st of October, 1837, a treaty was made at the City of Washington, between Carey A. Harris, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the confederate tribes of Sacs and Foxes, wherein another slice of the soil of Iowa was obtained, described in the treaty as follows: "A tract of country containing 1,250,000 acres, lying west and adjoining the tract conveyed by them to the United States in the treaty of September 21, 1832. It is understood that the points of termination for the present cession shall be the northern and southern points of said tract as fixed by the survey made under the authority of the United States, and that a line shall be drawn between them so as to intersect a line extended westwardly from the angle of said tract nearly opposite to Rock Island, as laid down in the above survey, so far as may be necessary to include the number of acres hereby ceded, which last mentioned line, it is estimated, will be about twenty-five miles."

This piece of land was twenty-five miles wide in the middle, and ran off to a point at both ends, lying directly back of the Black Hawk Purchase, and of a length coinciding therewith.

The above treaty was ratified February 21, 1838.

14. Treaty of Relinquishment.—At the same date as the above treaty, in the City of Washington, Carey A. Harris, Commissioner, the Sacs and Foxes ceded to the United States all their right and interest in the country lying south of the boundary line between the Sacs and Foxes and Sioux, as described in the treaty of August 19, 1825, and between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, the United States paying for the same one hundred and sixty thousand dollars. The Indians also gave up all claims and interests under the treaties previously made with them, for the satisfaction of which no appropriations had been made.

15. Treaty of 1842.—The last treaty was made with the Sacs and Foxes October 11, 1842; ratified March 23, 1843. It was made at the Sac and Fox agency (Agency City), by John Chambers, Commissioner on behalf of the United States. In this treaty the Sac and Fox Indians "ceded to the United States all their lands west of the Mississippi to which they had any claim or title." By the terms of this treaty they were to be removed from the country at the expiration of three years, and all who remained after that were to move at their own expense. Part of them were removed to Kansas in the Fall of 1845, and the rest the Spring following.

TERRITORIAL RELATIONS.

Having finished our Indian history, we resume the territorial relations of Iowa from the purchase of Louisiana by the United States. The region of country comprehended in this purchase, included all the territory west of the Mississippi from the Gulf of Mexico north to the British Possessions, comprising what are now the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Colorado and Oregon, the Indian Territory, New Mexico, and the Territories of Idaho, Montana, Arizona, Dakota, Washington and Wyoming. The American flag was first raised in New Orleans December 20, 1803. By an act of Congress, approved October 31, 1803, the President of the United States was authorized to take possession of the territory, and provide for it a temporary government. By another act of the same session, approved March 26, 1804, the newly acquired country was divided, October 1, 1804, into the Territory of Orleans, south of the thirty-third parallel of north latitude, and the District of Louisiana, which later was placed under the authority of the officers of Indiana Territory. On the 4th of July, 1805, under an act of Congress, approved on the 3d of March preceding, the District of Louisiana was organized into a Territory of the same name, with a government of its own, in which condition it remained till 1812. On the 30th of April, in that year, the Territory of Orleans became a State of the Union under the name of Louisiana; and on the first Monday in December, by virtue of an act approved June 4th, 1812, the Territory of Louisiana was reorganized, and called the Territory of Missouri. By an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1819, which took effect July 4th, of that year, Arkansas Territory was formed, comprising the present State of Arkansas, and the country to the westward. By a joint resolution, approved March 2, 1821, the State of Missouri, being a part of the Territory of that name, was admitted into the Union. By an act of Congress, approved June 28, 1834, the territory bounded on the east by the Mississippi River, and on the south by the State of Missouri, was made a part of the Territory of Michigan. On the 4th of July, 1836, Wisconsin Territory, embracing within its limits the present States of Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin, was taken from that of Michigan, and given a a separate government. On the 4th of July, 1838, by virtue of an act of Congress, approved June 12th of that year, the TERRITORY OF IOWA was constituted, including, in addition to the present state, the greater part of what is now Minnesota, and extending north to the British line.

By an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1845, provision was made for the admission of Iowa into the Union as a sovereign State, with boundaries extending on the north to the parallel of latitude passing through the mouth of the Blue Earth River, and on the west only to 17° 30′ west from Washington, corresponding very nearly to the existing line between Ringgold and Union Counties on the one hand, and Taylor and Adams on the other. The Constitutional Convention of 1844 had adopted much more extensive boundaries even than those of the present state, the northwestern line extending from the mouth of the Big Sioux, or Calumet River, direct to the St. Peters, or Minnesota River, where the Watonwan River (according to Nicollet's map) enters the same; thence down the main channel of said river to the main channel of the Mississippi, and thence down the Mississippi; embracing within its proposed limits some of the richest portions of the present State of Minnesota. The reduction of these boundaries by Congress being distasteful to the people, the admission was rejected at a popular election, and in 1846 Congress proposed new boundary lines, which were embodied in the Constitution adopted that year—the state retaining the Missouri slope, but submitting to a material reduction of her pretensions on the north, her western line in that direction, however, being extended to the Big Sioux River. The Constitution, with these modified boundaries, having been accepted by the people, the STATE OF IOWA was formally admitted into the Union on the 28th day of December, 1846, as the twenty-ninth state in the National Confederacy.

Before proceeding with the political history of Iowa, we shall attend to some other events connected with the exploration and early settlement of the country.

PIKE'S EXPEDITION.

Soon after the acquirement of Louisiana, the Government of the United States took measures to explore the new territory, with a view of conciliating the various tribes of Indians, and selecting sites for the establishment of military posts. St. Louis was then headquarters of the army of the West, under command of Gen. James Wilkinson. From the subordinate officers of this garrison the President selected Captains C. Clark and M. Lewis, and Lieutenant Zebulon M. Pike, the former to explore the unknown sources of the Missouri, and the latter the Mississippi to its head waters.

On the 9th of August, 1805, Pike started on his tour from the military camp near St. Louis, with one sergeant, two corporals, and seventeen privates, in a keel-boat, with provisions for four months. On the 20th of August they arrived within the present limits of Iowa, at the foot of the Des Moines Rapids, and were met by William Ewing, who had just been appointed Indian Agent at this point, a French interpreter, and four chiefs and fifteen Sac and Fox Indians, who assisted them in crossing the rapids. At the head of the rapids, where Montrose is now situated, he held a council with the Indians, in which he addressed them substantially as follows: "Your Great Father, the President of the United States, wished to be more intimately acquainted with the situation and wants of the different nations of red people in our newly acquired territory of Louisiana, and has ordered the General to send a number of his warriors in different directions, to take them by the hand and make such inquiries as might afford the satisfaction required." At the close of the talk he presented them with some knives, whisky and tobacco.

Pursuing his way up the river, he arrived on the 23d of August at what is supposed from his description to have been the site of the present City of Burlington. Here he selected a location for a fort. He describes the place as being "on a hill, about forty miles above the River de Moyne Rapids, on the west side of the river, in latitude about 41° 21' north. The channel of the river runs on that shore, the hill in front is about sixty feet perpendicular, nearly level on top. Four hundred yards in the rear is a small prairie, fit for gardening, and immediately under the hill is a limestone spring, sufficient for the consumption of a regiment." In addition to this description, which answers to Burlington, the place is laid down on Pike's map at a bend in the river, a short distance below the mouth of the Henderson, which empties into the Mississippi from Illinois. Though the fort was subsequently erected at Fort Madison, yet from the distance, latitude, description, and map furnished by Pike, it could not have been the place selected by him, while all the circumstances strongly corroborate the opinion that the place chosen was Burlington, called by the early voyageurs on the river "Flint Hills."

On the 24th, Pike, with one of his men, went on shore to hunt, and following a stream which they supposed to be a part of the Mississippi, they were led out of their intended course. His two favorite hunting dogs, which he took with him, owing to the heat and tall grass, gave out on the prairie; but supposing they would soon follow him, he left them and continued his march to overtake the boat. He struck the river ahead of the boat, where he waited some time for his dogs to come up. But the dogs not coming, and thinking it not expedient to detain the boat longer, two of his men volunteered to go in pursuit of the dogs, and he pursued his voyage up the river, supposing the two men would overtake him. But they got lost on the prairie, and were six days without anything to eat except a few mussels, which they gathered from the stream, and would in all probability have perished, had they not accidentally fallen in with a trader, who was on his way to St. Louis, and gave them assistance. He procured a couple of Indians, with a canoe, to take them up the river, and they overtook the boat at the Dubuque lead mines.

Julien Dubuque, though a Frenchman, and holding a mining claim under Spain, received Pike with cordiality on his arrival at the mines, on the first day of September, 1805, firing a salute with a field piece to signalize the advent of the first Americans who ever landed in that section of Iowa. Dubuque, however, wishing to keep the wealth of his mines a secret from the Americans and the rest of mankind, condescended to give the young and evidently inquisitive officer but little information on the subject.

Leaving the mines, Pike pursued his way up the river, arriving at Prairie du Chien on the 4th of September. This was an old French trading post, the oldest and most noted on the Upper Mississippi. The old village which had been first erected by the French voyageurs and traders who came down the Wisconsin, stood about a mile below; the town which Pike visited was first settled in 1783—the year of the treaty of peace at the close of the Revolution—by three Frenchmen, Giard, Antaya and Dubuque. At this time the village contained twenty-six dwellings; there were eight houses within a distance of five miles on the east side of the Mississippi, and three on the west side, on Giard's Spanish claim, making in all thirty-seven dwelling houses, which were supposed to average about ten persons each, making a population in and about Prairie du Chien of three hundred and seventy souls. There were very few white women in the settlement, most of the traders having taken Indian women for wives, so that most of the inhabitants under twenty years of age had the blood of the aborigines in their veins.

Wabasha, chief of the lower bands of the Sioux, met Pike at Prairie du Chien, and returning to his village near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, sent down a delegation of six of his men to invite him to partake of a feast at his lodge. When they arrived opposite the village the warriors were stationed on the bank with their guns, and fired three salutes with balls, which were returned from the boat with blunderbusses. On coming to the shore, the chief met the commander of the expedition, and invited him to his cabin. He accompanied him to his lodge, where he found a clean mat and a pillow prepared for his reception. The chief, having passed the pipe around, addressed Pike to the following effect:

That notwithstanding he had seen him at the Prairie, he was happy to take him by the hand among his people, and there show his young men the respect due to their new father. That when at St. Louis in the Spring his father had told him that if he looked down the river, he would see one of his young warriors coming up. He now found it true, and was happy to see him, who knew the Great Spirit was the Father of all, both the white and the red people, and if one died the other would not live long. That he had never been at war with their new father, and hoped to always preserve the good understanding that now existed. That he now presented him with a pipe to show the upper bands as a token of their good understanding, and that they may see his mark and imitate his conduct. That they had gone to St. Louis on a shameful errand—to carry a murderer—but that the Americans had given the man his life, and they thanked them for it."

To this friendly speech Pike replied, telling him of the object of his visit, that his government was about to establish a military post among them, and to send officers and agents into their country to attend to their wants. After the conference was closed, they partook of a dinner prepared of wild rye and venison, and making the chief some presents, Pike proceeded on his journey up the river.

On the 22d of September they arrived at the mouth of the St. Peter's (Minnesota) River, near which, a short distance up the river, was a large village of Sioux. In the afternoon, Le Petit Corbean, the head chief of the Sioux Nation, came down from the village with one hundred and fifty warriors. They ascended the hill between the Mississippi and the St. Peter's, on which Fort Snelling now stands, and fired a salute with their guns loaded with balls, after which arrangements were made for a grand council the next day. The council lodge was composed of Pike's sails spread over some poles on the shore, and there, on the 23d of September, at 12 o'clock, the council met. In this council the Sioux gave a grant of land to the United States amounting to one hundred thousand acres, and on this grant Fort Snelling was erected in 1819-20.

The expedition left St. Peter's on the 26th of September, and on the 16th of October halted two hundred and thirty-three miles higher up the river. Here some of his men becoming sick through exposure and fatigue, he erected a fort at the mouth of a small stream for their accommodation, and left them, with a part of his stores, in charge of Sergeant Kennerman. On the 8th of January, 1806, Pike, with one man, his corporal, having outmarched the rest of his men, arrived at a trading post on Lake De Sable, in latitude 47°. This post was occupied by a Mr. Grant, an Englishman. It had been established in 1796, and belonged to the Northwest Company. They had a large number of Indian horses, raised plenty of Irish potatoes, and had an abundance of various kinds of fish and meat, though most of the time they had to use bread made out of wild oats. The English first extended their trade into this country in 1766, through the agency of a few desperadoes, whose mode of life and habits were more like savages than civilized men. From this small beginning the powerful Northwest Company came into existence, which in 1806 carried on a trade with the Indians from Hudson's Bay to the St. Lawrence, up both sides of that river and along the lakes to the head of Lake Superior, at which place the Company had their headquarters; from thence to the sources of the Red River of the North, and its tributaries, west to the Rocky Mountains, embracing within their scope the territory of Iowa, and at that time were making arrangements to extend their trade west of the mountains and to the North Sea.

On the first of February, Pike arrived at the head waters of the Mississippi, and passed thence to Lake La Sang Sue, twelve miles beyond which he came to the establishment of the Northwest Company, where he was hospitably received by Mr. Hugh McGillis, the Superintendent. This trading post was located on Leech Lake in latitude 47° 16' 13".

After visiting various other trading posts, holding councils with the different Indian tribes, and accomplishing successfully the object of his mission, Pike and his company started on their journey back to St. Louis, amidst the shouts and acclamations of the Indians, many of whom had remained at the headquarters of the Northwest Company to see them start. Pike arrived in St. Louis on the 30th of April, 1806, having accomplished a mission of great service, not only to Iowa, but to the whole Northwest, by paving the way for the peaceful recognition of the authority of the United States throughout this portion of her vast dominions.

SPANISH GRANTS.

Certain claims were made to lands in the territory now embraced in Iowa under the Spanish government of Louisiana before the country came into the possession of the United States. These we propose now to consider.

Dubuque's Claim.—On the 22d of September, 1788, Julien Dubuque, a Frenchman, of Prairie du Chien, obtained of the Fox Indians a cession of lands for mining purposes on the Mississippi River, embracing the site of the present City of Dubuque. A lead mine had been first discovered here by the wife of Peosta, a warrior of the Kettle chief's village, in 1780. The claim of Dubuque embraced nearly all the lead-bearing area of this vicinity, and proved to be very valuable. Dubuque immediately took possession of his claim with a company of miners, and commenced mining, which he continued till the time of his death, in 1810, at the same time making a settlement and living at the mines, which were known as the "Spanish Mines," or more commonly, "Dubuque's Lead Mines."

In 1796, Dubuque filed a petition with the Baron de Carondelet, Governor of Louisiana, for a Spanish grant of the tract ceded to him by the Indians. In this petition the boundaries of the claim were indefinitely described as "about seven leagues along the Mississippi River, and three leagues in width from the river," including, as has been supposed, the river front between the Little Maquoketa and the Tete des Morts Rivers. Probably the tract exceeded twenty thousand acres.

In answer to his petition the Baron de Carondelet gave Dubuque the grant asked for, which was subsequently confirmed by the Board of Land Commissioners of Louisiana. In October, 1804, Dubuque transferred the larger portion of his claim to Auguste Choteau of St. Louis, and on the 17th of May, 1805, he and Choteau jointly filed their claims with the Board of Commissioners. On the 20th of September, 1806, a majority of the Board of Commissioners pronounced the claim to be a complete Spanish grant, made and completed prior to the first day of October, 1800; only one member of the Board, John B. C. Lucas, dissenting.

Dubuque died at his mines March 24th, 1810. The Indians understood that the cession made of the claim was only a permit to Dubuque to work the mines during his life, and so at his death regarded the mines as reverting to them again, and subsequently took possession of them and went to mining, in which possession they were sustained by the military authority of the United States. When the Black Hawk Purchase was made, the Dubuque claim was absorbed by the United States, in the general relinquishment of the Indian title to the territory in which it was embraced, no reservation being made of it by the Sacs and Foxes in the treaty of 1832.

Soon after this treaty, the heirs of Choteau began to look after the interest of their claim. In the latter part of 1832 they employed an agent to lease to the miners the right to dig lead on the lands. The miners being driven off by the military, one of the claimants went to Galena with a view of instituting legal proceedings, but found no court of competent jurisdiction. In order to test the title, he brought an action at Galena for the recovery of a quantity of lead, which had been dug at the Dubuque mines, and brought there for sale; but not being able to identify the lead, he was non-suited.

After Dubuque had been laid out by an act of Congress, approved July 2, 1836, and lots had been sold under that act, and another amendatory of it, passed March 3, 1837, Henry Choteau brought an action of ejectment against one Patrick Malony, holding land in Dubuque under a patent from the United States, for the recovery of seven undivided eighth parts of the Dubuque claim, as purchased by Auguste Choteau in 1804. This was tried in the District Court of the United States for the District of Iowa, and decided adversely to Choteau, who appealed on a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the cause was tried at the December term, 1853, and the decision of the lower court affirmed.

The court held that the permit from Carondelet was a mere lease to work the mines; that nothing was asked or granted by the Governor of Louisiana, but the "peaceable possession" of certain lands obtained of the Indians; that Carondelet had no legal authority to make such a grant as was claimed; and that, even if he had, this was only an "inchoate and imperfect title."

The Giard Grant.—The Spanish grant known as the "Giard Tract," situated in what is now Clayton County, Iowa, was ceded by the Lieutenant Governor of Upper Louisiana to Basil Giard, in 1795. It contained six thousand eight hundred and eight and a half arpents, or five thousand seven hundred and sixty acres. In consideration of his occupancy of the claim during the time the country passed from Spain to France, and from France to the United States, our government, on the 2d of July, 1844, issued a patent of the same to Giard in his own right. The whole tract was sold by the heirs of Giard to James H. Lockwood and Thomas P. Burnett, of Prairie du Chien, for three hundred dollars.

The Honori Grant.—On the 30th of March, 1799, Zenon Trudeau, acting Lieutenant Governor of Upper Louisiana, granted to Louis Honori a tract of land on the site of the present Town of Montrose, in the words following: "It is permitted to Mr. Louis (Fresson) Honori to establish himself at the head of the rapids of the River Des Moines, and his establishment once formed, notice of it shall be given to the Governor General, in order to obtain for him a commission of a space sufficient to give value to such establisment, and at the same time to render it useful to the commerce of the peltries of this country, to watch the Indians and to keep them in the fidelity which they owe to his majesty."

Other privileges were given in this grant to enable Honori to carry on a successful trade with the Indians. He took immediate possession of his claim, which he retained till 1805. While he was engaged in carrying on trade with the Indians, he became indebted to Joseph Robedoux, who, in a suit to recover the debt, obtained judgment, and the property was sold on execution, May 14, 1803. It was purchased by Robedoux in satisfaction of his claim. In these legal proceedings the property was described as being "about six leagues above the River Des Moines." At the time of the sale part of this tract had been improved by Honori, "by building houses, planting orchards, and a small piece was under fence and in cultivation."

Robedoux died soon after he purchased the property. By his will he had appointed Auguste Choteau his executor, and authorized him to dispose of the property, which he did to Thomas F. Reddeck, in April, 1805. Up to this time Honori, although the property had been sold to pay his debts, continued to occupy it. This grant, when at first made by the Spanish government, was a league square, but only one mile square was subsequently confirmed by a patent from the United States. After the Half-Breeds sold their lands, in which tract it was included, the different claimants brought it into litigation to invalidate the title of the Reddeck heirs; but it was finally decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, in 1839, in their favor.

THE HALF-BREED TRACT.

Before any permanent settlement had been made in the territory of Iowa, white adventurers and traders, many of whom were scattered along the Mississippi and its tributaries, as agents or employés of the American Fur Company, intermarried with the squaws of the Sac and Fox tribes of Indians, producing a race of half-breeds whose number was never very definitely ascertained. Some of these adopted the habits of the white men, which at that day were a sort of compromise between savage and civilized life; others lived and consorted with the Indians, and were hardly distinguishable from them in appearance or manners. There were, indeed, some respectable and excellent people among the half-breeds, children of men of some distinction and learning, who, no doubt, from their natural affinity for noble women, selected from among the squaws wives worthy of themselves, whom they loved and lived with on terms of mutual respect and amity, and whose children were well reared and educated. We know of some such. There was, for instance, Doctor Muir, a gentleman educated in Edinburgh, Scotland, and a surgeon in the United States service at the military post where Warsaw is now situated, who married a woman of the Sac or Fox tribe of Indians, and brought up his family of three daughters in the City of Keokuk. Other examples might be cited, but they are probably exceptions to the general rule, and few of the half-breeds of any description remain in this region at the present time.

On the 4th of August, 1824, a treaty was made at Washington between the United States and the Sacs and Foxes, in which that portion of Lee County afterwards known as "The Half-Breed Tract," was reserved to the half-breeds of their nation. This reservation was bounded by the Mississippi and Des Moines Rivers, reaching on the former to Fort Madison, on the latter to a point about twenty-eight miles above its mouth, and thence by a line running directly to the Mississippi, including a small portion of the lower part of the present City of Fort Madison. It embraced what are now the Townships of Van Buren, Charleston, Jefferson, Des Moines, Montrose and Jackson, in Lee County, and contained 119,000 acres.

The treaty of 1824, like all Indian treaties, gave the half-breeds a right to the soil, but no right to convey, the reversionary right being reserved to the United States. But on the 30th of January, 1834, an act was passed by Congress relinquishing the reversionary right, which gave the half-breeds a title to their lands in fee simple.

As soon as that was done, a horde of speculators rushed in to trade and bargain with the half-breeds for their lands, and in many instances they were obtained for considerations the most trifling. A gun, a blanket, an Indian pony, or even a few quarts of whisky, often sufficed to purchase large estates. There was a good deal of sharp practice on both sides. Full blooded Indians would often claim to be owners of lands by virtue of being half-breeds, and would have no difficulty in proving themselves such by other Indians, who seemed to have no idea of the nature of an oath. They would thus cheat the speculators by selling them lands which did not belong to them. The speculators, on the other hand, would often lay claim to lands which they had no ownership in. This went on till things got pretty badly mixed up throughout the half-breed territory. There were no authorized boundary lines defining the location or limits of any one's claims, and conflicts and quarrels arose on all sides.

To prevent this, and to open up the territory to actual settlers; to decide the validity of claims and partition them among the claimants, or sell them for the benefit of the actual owners, the Legislature of Wisconsin Territory passed an act on the 16th of January, 1838, and commissioners were appointed, consisting of Edward Johnstone, Thomas S. Wilson, and David Brigham, with power to carry out the objects of the act.

The Commissioners met at Montrose and summoned the claimants to appear before them and prove up their claims. The process of taking testimony went on till the next session, when influences were brought to bear upon the Legislature to repeal the act; not only setting the whole subject of claims afloat again, but depriving the commissioners of their pay for their services. The act under which they had been appointed provided that they should have six dollars a day; but as their services were in behalf of the owners of the half-breed lands, the Legislature justly decided that said owners should foot the bills. When the repealing act was introduced, the friends of the Commissioners attached thereto certain sections giving them a lien on the half-breed lands. The second section of the act provided that the several Commissioners, by and under the act repealed, who were authorized to sit and take testimony, etc., under said act, "may immediately, or as soon as convenient, commence action before the District Court of Lee County for their several accounts against the owners of the half-breed lands, and give eight weeks' notice in the Iowa Territorial Gazette to said owners of such lands; and the Judges of said District Court, upon the trial of said suits before it at the next term, shall, if said accounts are deemed correct, order judgment for the amount and cost to be entered up against said owners, and said judgment shall be a lien on said lands," etc. The third section declared "the words 'owners of half-breed lands lying in Lee County' shall be a sufficient designation and specification of the defendants in said suits." And by the fifth section it was provided that "the trial of said suits shall be before the court, and not a jury; and this act shall receive a liberal construction, such as will carry out the spirit and intention thereof."

At the August term of the District Court of Lee County, two judgments and executions on these lands were obtained: one in behalf of Edward Johnstone for twelve hundred and ninety dollars; the other in behalf of David Brigham for eight hundred and eighteen dollars, for services rendered as Commissioners; and the whole half-breed tract was sold to Hugh T. Reid. The sheriff returned on both the executions that he had levied "on the half-breed Sac and Fox reservation in Lee County, Iowa Territory, commonly called the half-breed tract, and had advertised and sold the same for twenty-eight hundred and eighty-four dollars and sixty-six cents."

In pursuance of this sale the sheriff made to Hugh T. Reid, the purchaser, a deed for the lands levied on, containing one hundred and nineteen thousand acres, more or less.

Mr. Reid, on coming into possession of this immense tract, sold more or less of it at different times, and to different purchasers, but the titles based on the judgments did not hold good. For a while the defendants were successful in maintaining them, and obtained decisions in their favor both in the District and Supreme Courts; but they were finally reversed in the noted case of Joseph Webster, plaintiff in error vs. Hugh T. Reid, tried in the Supreme Court of the United States, in December, 1850.

The "judgment titles" failed because no notice had been served on the persons owning the land, and no attachment or other proceeding had been served till after the judgments had been rendered. The judgments were therefore pronounced "nullities" by the court, and it was held that they did not authorize the executions on which the land was sold.

Some nine years before the "judgment titles" were finally abrogated in the above decision, another class of titles were brought into competition with them, and in the conflict between the two, the final decision was obtained. We refer to the titles based on the "Decree of Partition" issued by the United States District Court for the Territory of Iowa, on the 8th of May, 1841, and certified to by the clerk on the 2d day of June of that year. Edward Johnstone and Hugh T. Reid, then law partners at Fort Madison, filed the petition for the decree in behalf of the St. Louis claimants of half-breed lands. Francis S. Key, author of the Star-Spangled Banner, who was then attorney for the New York Land Company, which held heavy interests in these lands, took a leading part in the measure, and drew up the document in which it was presented to the court. Judge Charles Mason, of Burlington, presided. The plan of partition divided the tract into one hundred and one shares, and arranged that each claimant should draw his proportion by lot, and should abide the result whatever it might be. The arrangement was entered into, the lots drawn, and the plat of the same filed in the Recorder's office, October 6, 1841.

It is not the place here to discuss the fairness or unfairness of this mode of settlement—a point about which much feeling has existed, and much litigation obtained in times past. Suffice it to say that, whatever may have been the grievances and animosities of parties claiming to have suffered by it, it is the law, and has stood the test, either by legal trial on its merits, or by compromise, and is the ground on which titles to land in the half-breed tract are now held.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first known settlement by a white man within the limits of Iowa, was made by Julien Dubuque, in 1788. At that date Dubuque settled with a small colony of miners on the site of the city which bears his name, and was a resident at the mines opened by him till the time of his death, which occurred March 24, 1810, where also his remains still repose in their humble resting place by the Father of Waters. Louis Honori resided on the site of the present town of Montrose, probably from 1799 till 1805. Of the Giard settlement, opposite Prairie du Chien, we know little, except that it was occupied by some parties prior to the beginning of the present century, and in 1805 contained three small houses. Indian traders, though many of them were not strictly settlers of the country, had established themselves at different points at an early time. As early as 1820, Le Moliese, a French trader, had a station at what is now Sandusky, six miles above Keokuk, in Lee County. Dr. Isaac Galland made a settlement in 1820 at what is now Nashville, on the Lower Rapids. A Mr. Johnson, agent of the American Fur Company had a trading post below Burlington, where he carried on trade with the Indians long prior to the cession of the country to the United States.

Probably the first settlement in Lee County was made in 1828. The history of this settlement, as furnished the writer by Valencourt Van Ansdal, who came into the country at the time referred to, is as follows: Dr. Samuel Muir, a surgeon in the army stationed at Fort Edwards, now Warsaw, Ill., erected a cabin where Keokuk is now situated in 1820, having married a woman of the Sac and Fox tribe of Indians. He had five half-breed children who were mostly brought up in this vicinity, one of whom is still living in Keokuk, or was a few years ago. Being obliged to leave the army on account of a military order prohibiting intermarriage with the Indians, and to seek a place of medical practice where there was a settlement, Dr. Muir leased his claim to Otis Reynolds and John Culver, of St. Louis, for a term of ten years, and went to practice medicine at Galena. The latter employed as their agent Moses Stillwell, who came here with his family in 1828. Stillwell had two brothers-in-law who came with him, viz., Amos and Valencourt Van Ansdal, the latter still residing in Keokuk, or was residing there in the Fall of 1873.

Margaret Stillwell, now Mrs. Ford of Keokuk, was probably the first white American child born in the territory now embraced in the State of Iowa. She was born at the foot of the rapids, Puck-e-she-tuck, where Keokuk now stands, in 1831.

At the last mentioned date the American Fur Company's agent at the foot of the Rapids removed to another location, and Dr. Muir having returned, he and Isaac R. Campbell took the place and buildings of the Company, and remained there permanently, carrying on trade with the Indians and half-breeds. Isaac R. Campbell first visited and passed through the southern part of Iowa with a team, in 1821. He was an enterprising settler, and besides trading considerably with the Indians, carried on a farm and a tavern. Dr. Muir died of cholera in 1832.

In 1830 James L. and Lucius H. Langworthy, two brothers, natives of Vermont, visited the territory for the purpose of working the lead mines at Dubuque. They had been engaged in lead mining at Galena, Illinois, the former from as early as 1824. The lead mines in the Dubuque region were an object of great interest to the miners about Galena, for they were known to be rich in lead ore. To explore these mines, and to obtain permission to work them, was therefore eminently desirable.

In 1829 James L. Langworthy resolved to visit the Dubuque mines. Crossing the Mississippi at the point now known as Dunleith, in a canoe, and swimming his horse by its side, he landed on the spot now known as the Jones Street Levee. Before him spread out a beautiful prairie, on which the City of Dubuque now stands. Two miles south, at the mouth of Catfish Creek, was a village of Sacs and Foxes. Thither Mr. Langworthy proceeded, and was well received by the natives. He endeavored to obtain permission from them to mine in their hills, but this they refused. He however succeeded in gaining the confidence of the chief to such an extent as to be allowed to travel in the interior for three weeks and explore the country. He employed two young Indians as guides, and traversed in different directions the whole region lying between the Maquoketa and Turkey Rivers. He returned to the village, secured the good will of the Indians, and returning to Galena, formed plans of future operations, to be executed as soon as circumstances would permit.

In 1830, with his brother Lucius H. and others, having obtained the consent of the Indians, Mr. Langworthy crossed the Mississippi and commenced mining in the vicinity around Dubuque. The first act resembling legislation in the territory, was an agreement regulating mining claims and interests drawn up on an old cottonwood drift-log on the shore, by these adventurous pioneers. They continued to work successfully till the Winter of 1831, when the United States authorities ordered the miners to desist and remove from the territory on the west side of the Mississippi. They obeyed the order, and abandoning their claims for a season, returned to Galena.

After the Black Hawk War, and the treaty of September, 1832, the miners, supposing they now had a right to enter the territory, returned to the mines and prosecuted their mining operations with great success. In the Fall of 1832, they were again ordered to leave the diggings and their improved claims, on the ground that the treaty had not been ratified by the Senate of the United States. The order was enforced by Gen. Zachary Taylor, then colonel commanding at Fort Crawford. Mr. Langworthy retired to an island near the west bank of the river, taking the precaution to carry away his mineral treasures, and he and several others passed the Winter of 1832 on the island amidst their pigs of lead, amounting to several hundred thousand pounds in weight. The treaty being perfected in June, 1833, Mr. Langworthy, his brother and others, returned and took possession of their well earned mineral prospects and their home claims.

In the same year Mr. Langworthy assisted in building the first school house in Iowa, and thus was formed the nucleus of the now populous and thriving City of Dubuque. Mr. Langworthy lived to see the naked prairie on which he first landed become the site of a city of fifteen thousand inhabitants, the small school house which he aided in constructing replaced by three substantial edifices, wherein two thousand children were being trained, churches erected in every part of the city, and railroads connecting the wilderness which he first explored with all the eastern world. He died suddenly on the 13th of March, 1865, while on a trip over the Dubuque and Southwestern Railroad, at Monticello, and the evening train brought the news of his death and his remains.

Lucius H. Langworthy, his brother, was one of the most worthy, gifted, and influential of the old settlers of this section of Iowa. He died, greatly lamented by many friends, in June, 1865.

We can only mention in this place a few of the pioneers. They are quite extensively referred to in the County Histories and the Biographical department of this work.

Captain James White, in 1832, made a claim on the present site of Montrose. In 1834 a garrison of dragoons was established here under command of Col. Stephen W. Kearney, which was retained as a military post till 1837, when the soldiers were removed to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Soon after the Black Hawk War, in 1832, Zachariah Hawkins, Benjamin Jennings, Aaron White, Augustine Horton, Samuel Gooch, Daniel Thompson and Peter Williams, made claims at Fort Madison. In 1833, these claims were purchased by John and Nathaniel Knapp, upon which, in 1835, they laid out the town. The next Summer lots were sold. The town was subsequently re-surveyed and platted by the United States Government.

At the close of the Black Hawk War, parties who had been impatiently looking across upon "Flint Hills," now Burlington, came over from Illinois and made claims. The first was Samuel S. White, in the Fall of 1832, who erected a cabin on the site of the city of Burlington. About the same time David Tothero made a claim on the prairie about three miles back from the river, at a place since known as the farm of Judge Morgan. In the Winter of that year they were driven off by the military from Rock Island as intruders upon the rights of the Indians, and White's cabin was burnt by the soldiers. He retired to Illinois, where he spent the Winter, and in the Summer, as soon as the Indian title expired, returned and re-built his cabin. White was joined by his brother-in-law, Doolittle, and they together laid out the original town of Burlington, in 1834.

Settlers about this time were crowding in all along the borders of the Black Hawk Purchase.

The first claim where Davenport now stands was made by Col. George Davenport, immediately after the treaty of September, 1832. As early as 1827, Col. Davenport had established a flatboat ferry, which ran between the island and the main shore of Iowa, by which he carried on a trade with the Indians west of the Mississippi. In 1833, Capt. Benjamin W. Clark moved across from Illinois, and laid the foundation of the town of Buffalo, in Scott County, which was the first actual settlement within the limits of that county. Among other early settlers in this part of the Territory, were Adrian H. Davenport, Col. John Sullivan, Milligan and Franklin Easly, Capt. John Coleman, J. M. Camp, William White, H. W. Higgins, Cornelius Harrold, Richard Harrison, E. H. Shepherd and Dr. E. S. Barrows.

The first settlers of Davenport were, Antoine LeClaire, Col. George Davenport, Major Thomas Smith, Major William Gordon, Philip Hambough, Alexander W. McGregor, Levi S. Colton, Captain James May, and others. In Clayton County the first settlement was made in the Spring of 1832, on Turkey River, by Robert Hatfield and William W. Wayman. No further settlement was made in this part of the state till the beginning of 1836.

In that portion now known as Muscatine County, settlements were made in 1834, by Benjamin Nye, John Vanater, and G. W. Kasey, who were the first settlers. E. E. Fay, William St. John, N. Fullington, H. Reece, Jona Pettibone, R. P. Lowe, Stephen Whicher, Abijah Whiting, J. E. Fletcher, W. D. Abernathy and Alexas Smith, were early settlers of Muscatine.

The first post master in Iowa was Milo H. Prentice, appointed at Dubuque in 1833.

The first justice of the peace was Antoine Le Claire, appointed in 1833, as "a very suitable person to adjust the difficulties between the white settlers and the Indians still remaining there."

The first Methodist society in the territory was formed at Dubuque on the 18th of May, 1834, and the first class meeting was held June 1st of that year.

The first church bell brought into Iowa, was in March, 1834.

The first mass of the Roman Catholic Church in the territory was celebrated at Dubuque, in the house of Patrick Quigley, in the Fall of 1833.

The first school house in the territory was erected by the Dubuque miners in 1833.

The first Sabbath school was organized at Dubuque early in the Summer of 1834.

The first woman who came to this part of the territory with a view to permanent residence, was Mrs. Noble F. Dean, in the Fall of 1832, and she is still living, and in the enjoyment of good health.

The first family that lived in this part of Iowa was that of Hosea T. Camp, in 1832.

The first meeting house was built by the Methodist Episcopal church, at Dubuque, in 1834.

The first newspaper in Iowa was the Dubuque Visitor, issued May 11th, 1836. John King, afterwards Judge King, was editor, and William C. Jones, printer. (See history of newspapers in the County Histories.)

The pioneers of Iowa, as a class, were a brave, hardy, intelligent, and enterprising people. The Western States, which are rapidly growing into controlling importance in the Union, have been settled by many of the best and most enterprising men of the older states, and a large immigration of the best blood of the Old World, who, removing to an arena of larger opportunities, in a more fertile soil and congenial climate, have developed a spirit and an energy peculiarly Western. In no country on the globe have enterprises of all kinds been pushed forward with such rapidity, or has there been such independence and freedom of competition. Among those who have pioneered the civilization of the West, and been the founders of great states, none have ranked higher in the scale of intelligence and moral worth than the pioneers of Iowa, who came to the territory when it was an Indian country, and through hardship, privation and suffering, laid the foundations of the populous and prosperous Commonwealth, which to-day dispenses its blessings to a million and a quarter of people. From the inception of her institutions, Iowa has had able men to manage her affairs, wise legislators to frame her laws and shape her polity, and intelligent and impartial jurists to administer justice to her citizens; her bar, pulpit and press have been able, and widely influential; and in all the professions, arts, enterprises and industries which go to make up a great and prosperous commonwealth, she has taken and holds a front rank among her sister states of the West.

TERRITORIAL ORGANIZATION.

In the Fall of 1837 the question of a separate territorial organization for Iowa began to be agitated. A convention was called at Burlington on the first of November, which petitioned Congress to organize a Territory west of the Mississippi, and to settle the boundary line between Wisconsin Territory and Missouri. The Legislature then in session joined in the petition. Gen. George W. Jones, of Dubuque, residing then at Sinsinawa Mound, Wisconsin Territory, was delegate in Congress, and through his indefatigable efforts, Congress, on the 12th of June, 1838, approved the bill authorizing the organization of Iowa Territory, to take effect on the 4th of July following. The Legislature of Wisconsin Territory had convened in Burlington in June, 1838, but the formation of a new Territory leaving their functions obsolete, and they having nothing further to do as legislators, adjourned sine die on the 3d of July, preparatory to the incoming of Iowa.

Ex-Governor Robert Lucas, of Ohio, was appointed Governor of Iowa Territory by President Van Buren, and immediately on his arrival issued a proclamation for an election of members of the first legislative assembly, and dividing the Territory into suitable districts for that purpose. The election was held on the 10th of September, 1838, and the Legislature, in accordance with the Governor's proclamation, met at Burlington on the first day of November of that year. The Assembly was composed of a Council of thirteen members, and a House of Representatives of twenty-six members. One of the members returned elected, namely, Cyrus S. Jacobs, of Des Moines County, was killed in an unfortunate encounter in Burlington before the meeting of the Legislature, and George H. Beeler was elected to fill the vacancy. Samuel R. Murray, of Camanche, Clinton County, was returned as elected from the district composed of the Counties of Scott and Clinton, but his seat was successfully contested by J. A. Burchard, Jr., of Scott County. With these exceptions, the members returned elected, and proclaimed as such by the Governor, held their seats during the session. At that day national politics were little thought of in the Territory.

Notwithstanding a large majority of the members of both branches of the Legislature were Democrats, yet Gen. Jesse B. Browne (Whig), of Lee County, was elected President of the Council, and Hon. William H. Wallace (Whig), of Henry County, Speaker of the House of Representatives—the former unanimously, and the latter with but little opposition. Party lines began to be strongly drawn in the Territory in the campaign for election of President in 1840.

The first session of the Iowa Territorial Legislature at Burlington was in many respects a stormy one. Under the provisions of the organic law, the Governor had an unqualified veto, if he chose to exercise it, of all bills passed by the Legislature. The members thought he used the power rather too freely, and an exciting controversy was the result. The seat of government question, also, gave rise to much excitement. The friends of a central location favored the plan of the Governor, as recommended in his message, namely, the appointment of commissioners with a view to making a central location. The extent of the future State of Iowa was probably then not thought of, and a central location at that time meant some situation central in the small eastern strip of Iowa then cleared of the Indian titles. The southern members were in favor of Burlington, but finally withdrew that place and united on Mount Pleasant. The parties were very equally divided, and much excitement prevailed. The party for a central location finally succeeded, and Robert Ralston, of Des Moines County, John Ronalds, of Louisa County, and Chauncey Swan, of Dubuque County, were appointed commissioners under the law, and met at a place called Napoleon, in Johnson County, in the Spring of 1839, and located the Capital at Iowa City. The law provided that the seat of government should remain at Burlington till suitable buildings could be erected for it at the new location. (See History of the Location of the Capital, further on.)

At the election in September, 1838, there were four candidates in the field for delegate to Congress, viz.: William W. Chapman and David Rohrer, of Des Moines County, B. F. Wallace, of Henry County, and Peter Hill Engle, of Dubuque County. William W. Chapman was elected by a majority of thirty-six, over P. H. Engle.

The Federal appointments in the Territory, in addition to the Governor, were as follows: William B. Conway, of Pittsburg, Secretary of the Territory; Charles Mason, of Burlington, Thomas S. Wilson, of Dubuque, and Joseph Williams, of Pennsylvania, Judges of the Supreme and District Courts; Mr. Van Allen, of New York, United States District Attorney; Francis Gehon, of Dubuque, United States Marshal; Augustus C. Dodge, Register of the Land Office at Burlington, and Thomas McNight, Receiver of the Land Office at Dubuque. Mr. Van Allen, the District Attorney, died at Rockingham, soon after his appointment, and Col. Charles Weston was appointed to fill the vacancy. Mr. Conway, the Secretary, also died at Burlington, during the second session of the Legislature, and James Clarke, editor of the Gazette, was appointed in his place.

The question of the boundary line between Missouri and the Territory of Iowa became a vexed one in 1838, in consequence of claims growing out of taxes and titles, and came near leading to a civil war. The militia and volunteers were called out on both sides, and preparations for resistance extensively made, but no blood was shed, and the question was finally decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of Iowa.

The first legislative assembly laid broad the foundation of civil equality, on which has been constructed one of the most liberal governments in the Union. Its first act was to recognize the equality of woman with man before the law by providing that "no action commenced by a single woman, who intermarries during the pendency thereof, shall abate on account of such marriage." This principle has been adopted by all subsequent legislation in Iowa, and to-day woman has full and equal civil rights with man, except only the right of the ballot.

Religious toleration was also secured to all, personal liberty strictly guarded, the rights and privileges of citizenship extended to all white persons, and the purity of elections secured by heavy penalties against bribery and corruption.

The judiciary power was vested in a Supreme Court, District Court, Probate Court, and Justices of the Peace.

Real estate was made divisible by will, and intestate property divided equitably among heirs.

Murder was made punishable by death, and proportionate penalties fixed for lesser crimes.

A system of free schools, open for every class of white citizens, was established.

Provision was made for a system of roads and highways.

Thus, under the territorial organization, the country began to emerge from a savage wilderness, and take on the forms of civil government.

By act of Congress of June 12th, 1838, the lands which had been purchased of the Indians were brought into market, and land offices opened in Dubuque and Burlington. Congress provided for military roads and bridges, which greatly aided the settlers who were now coming in by thousands, to make their homes on the fertile prairies of Iowa—the Beautiful Land. The fame of the country had spread far and wide; even before the Indian title was extinguished, many were crowding the borders, impatient to cross over and stake out their claims on the choicest spots they could find in the new territory. As soon as the country was open for settlement, the borders of the Black Hawk Purchase, all along the Mississippi, and up the principal rivers and streams, and out over the broad and rolling prairies, began to be thronged with eager land hunters and immigrants, seeking homes in Iowa. It was a sight to delight the eyes of all comers from every land—its noble streams, beautiful and picturesque hills and valleys, broad and fertile prairies extending as far as the eye could reach, with a soil surpassing in richness anything which they had ever seen. It is not to be wondered at that immigration into Iowa was rapid, and that within less than a decade from the organization of the territory, it contained a hundred and fifty thousand people.

STATE ORGANIZATION.

From 1838 to 1846, Iowa remained a separate Territory, during which time the office of Governor was held by Robert Lucas, John Chambers, and James Clarke. Congress made provision by an act approved March 3, 1845, for its admission into the Union as a State, with boundaries at variance with those finally established. By this act the State was to extend north to the parallel of latitude passing through the Mankato, or Blue Earth River, in the present State of Minnesota, and west to the meridian of 17° 30′ west from Washington. This boundary would have made the state very long and narrow, extending it away up north, and depriving it of the Missouri slope and the boundary of that river on the west, so that, instead of being the well shaped state that it is, with the two grand rivers of the continent flowing on either side of it, it would have been ill shaped, and had another territory lying between it and the Missouri. The boundaries, however, were not to be settled in that way.

In October, 1844, a Constitutional Convention had been held in Iowa City, and a Constitution framed which embraced boundaries taking in much of the southern portion of Minnesota. The people of the territory disapproved of the reduction of these boundaries by Congress, and at an election held August 4, 1845, rejected the Constitution. The vote stood 7,235 for, and 7,656 against it. In 1846, Congress proposed the present boundary lines, and another Constitutional Convention met at Iowa City on the 4th of May of that year. A session of fifteen days resulted in the framing of a Constitution which was sanctioned by the people at an election held August 3, 1846. The popular vote this time was 9,492 for, and 9,036 against the Constitution. This Constitution was agreed to by Congress, and on the 28th of December of the same year, Iowa was admitted into the Union as a sovereign State.

On the 26th of October preceding, the first election had been held for state officers, when Ansel Briggs was elected Governor, Elisha Cutler, Jr., Secretary of State; Joseph T. Fales, Auditor; and Morgan Reno, Treasurer.

A third Constitutional Convention convened in Iowa City in January, 1857, and framed the present State Constitution, which was sanctioned by the people at an election held August 3, 1857, the popular vote being 40,311 for, and 38,681 against the Constitution.

Under the new Constitution, all political power is inherent in the people, and all men are declared to be by nature free and equal. No law can be enacted respecting the establishment of religion, or interfering with the free exercise of the same. No person can be compelled to pay tithes, taxes, or other rates to support any religious system in which he does not believe, and no religious test can be required as a qualification for holding any office of public trust, or for the exercise of any of the rights of citizenship. Every person is allowed to speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and no law can be passed restraining the liberty of speech, or of the press.

All foreigners who are residents of Iowa have the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property, as native born citizens. By legislative enactment all distinction between citizens and resident and non-resident foreigners, in reference to the acquisition, possession, and enjoyment of property, real and personal, by gift, devise, descent, or in any other manner, is abolished.

Every male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, not an idiot or insane person, or convicted of any infamous crime, who shall have been a resident of this state six months, and of the county in which he claims his vote sixty days, next preceding the election, is entitled to vote at all elections authorized by law.

By subsequent legislative enactment all distinction is abolished; no distinction is now made between the husband and wife in the possession and enjoyment of property. One-third in value of all the real estate of the husband, in case of his death, goes to the wife as her property in fee-simple, if she survive him. The husband inherits one-third of the wife's real estate in the same way, in case he survives her. Each is entitled to the same right of dower in the estate of the other, and a like interest descends to their respective heirs. Neither the husband nor wife is liable for the debts of the other incurred before marriage, nor is either liable for the separate debts of the other. Family expenses, including expenses incurred in the education of children, are chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife, or either of them, and in relation thereto they may be sued jointly, or by the husband separately. Contracts may be made by the wife, and liabilities incurred, and the same enforced by or against her to the same extent and in the same manner as if she was unmarried. A married woman may sue and be sued without the husband being joined in the action, except in cases where the cause of action is common. If a husband, being a father, has deserted his family, the wife, being a mother, may defend in his name any action or suit which he might have prosecuted or defended, and has the same powers and rights therein which he might have had. Under like circumstances, the same right applies to the husband upon the desertion of the wife.

LOCATION OF THE CAPITAL.

The first session of the Legislature, at Burlington, convened in a two-story frame house, built for the purpose by Jeremiah Smith, Jr., a member of the Council. During the Winter this building was destroyed by fire. The Legislature thereafter met in the Methodist Episcopal Church, known as "Old Zion Church." This Wisconsin Legislature further divided the two counties of Dubuque and Des Moines into sixteen, which included all the country in which the Indian title had been extinguished.

Among the first matters naturally to attract the attention of the new Iowa Legislature, was the erection of public buildings for the use of the territorial government, for which purpose Congress had in the organic act appropriated the sum of $20,000. Accordingly, on the 21st of January, 1839, two acts were passed appointing three commissioners, viz.: Chauncey Swan, Robert Ralston and John Ronalds, to select a site for a permanent seat of government within the limits of Johnson County. There they were to lay out 640 acres into a town to be called Iowa City, and to proceed to sell lots and erect public buildings thereon.

A section of land having been granted by Congress for the purpose, a selection was presently made of lands just purchased of the Sac and Fox Indians, and which were that season surveyed. Here a town was laid out; the first sale of lots taking place on the 16th of August, 1839. A plan for the building had been designed by Mr. John F. Rague, the architect, a resident of Springfield, Ill. The Legislative Assembly, at its second session, passed an act requiring the commissioners having the work in charge to adopt such plan for the building that the aggregate cost, when completed, should not exceed $51,000, and if they had already adopted a plan contemplating a greater expenditure, they were to set it aside. When the Legislature came together at Burlington, in July, 1840, Governor Lucas could say that on the fourth day of the same month he had been at Iowa City and found the basement of the capitol nearly completed. January 15, 1841, a bill authorizing a loan of $20,000 for the work was passed, the unsold lots at Iowa City to be given as security. Under this act $5,500 was obtained.

On Monday, the 6th of December, 1841, the Fourth Legislative Assembly met at Iowa City. Here, as at Burlington, a temporary frame house had been erected for the use of the Legislature, which occupied it during the sessions of 1841 and 1842. At this session the Superintendent of Public Buildings, who, with the Territorial Agent, had superseded the first commissioners, estimated the expense of completing the building at $33,330, and at $15,600 to complete rooms for the use of the Legislature. During the year 1842, the Superintendent began to get stone from a new quarry, about ten miles northeast of the city, where a fine bed of rock was found. This is now known as the "Old Capitol" quarry, and yet contains, it is believed, an immense quantity of excellent building material. From this source the remainder of the stone for the building was obtained. On the fifth day of December, 1842, the new capitol having been sufficiently completed, the Legislative Assembly convened in that building. At this session the Superintendent estimated that it would cost $39,143 to finish the house. This, it will be observed, was higher, by nearly $6,000 than the previous estimate, notwithstanding a large expenditure meantime. This discrepancy may be accounted for by the fact that the officers in charge of the work were constantly cramped for means. Besides the appropriation of $20,000 by Congress, already mentioned, and loans of $5,500 obtained from the Miners' Bank of Dubuque, all the funds for the prosecution of the work were obtained from sales of lots, which went off very slowly, from certificates of indebtedness, and from scrip based upon unsold lots, to be received in payment for such lots when sold. At one time the Superintendent made a requisition for bills of iron and glass which could not be obtained short of St. Louis. To meet this the agent sold some lots for a draft payable at Pittsburgh, for which he had to pay twenty-five per cent. exchange. This draft, amounting to $507, that officer reported to be more than half the actual cash handled by him during a season when the disbursements were nearly $24,000. With such uncertainty as to means, accuracy in estimates could not be expected. Nevertheless, the work seems to have been prosecuted with prudence, and with all the expedition the circumstances would permit.

Iowa was admitted into the Union December 28, 1846. At this time there were twenty-seven organized counties, with a population of nearly one hundred thousand, and settlements were pushing toward the Missouri River.

At the first session of the State Legislature, the State Treasurer reported the capitol building in a very unprotected condition, subject to be injured by storm, and expressed the hope that the Legislature would make some provision to complete it at least sufficiently to protect it from the weather. The General Assembly responded to this appeal by voting the sum of $2,500 for the completion of the public buildings. The question of the western boundary of Iowa having now been settled, a discussion arose in regard to the relocation of the capital; it being conceded that Iowa City was too far to the eastward for the permanent seat of government. The first General Assembly accordingly appointed commissioners to locate the seat of government, and to select five sections of land, being the amount granted by Congress for the erection of public buildings; and granted the unfinished edifice at Iowa City to the newly created State University, to be used, however, by the Legislature and state officers until other provisions were made. These commissioners forthwith entered upon their duties, and selected four sections and two half sections in Jasper County. Two of these sections are in what is now Des Moines Township, the remainder in Fairview Township. These lands are situated between Prairie City and Monroe, on the Keokuk and Des Moines Railroad, which runs diagonally through them. Here a town was platted, called Monroe City, and a sale of lots took place. Four hundred and fifteen were disposed of, at prices not strikingly remunerative. The cash payment, one-fourth, yielded $1,797.43; while the expenses of the sale, and the claim of the commissioners for services, exceeded this amount by $409.14. (When the report of the commissioners, making this brilliant financial showing, had been read to the House of Representatives, and while it was under consideration, an indignant member, afterwards known as the eccentric Judge McFarland, moved to refer the report to a select committee of five, with instructions to report how much of said City of Monroe was under water, and how much was burned up. The report was referred without the instructions. The result was, Monroe City ceased to be the seat of government, and was forthwith vacated, the money paid for lots being mostly refunded to the purchasers. The same session, $3,000 more were appropriated for the building at Iowa City to complete the cupola, the offices of state, the Supreme Court room, etc. In 1850, $2,500 more was appropriated for completing the State House; in 1852 the further sum of $5,000; and finally in 1854, $4,000 more, making the whole cost about $123,000, partly paid by the General Government, and partly by the state, but mainly by the proceeds of the sale of lots at Iowa City.

Meantime, the question of the permanent location of the seat of government had not been settled. In 1851, bills were introduced into the House of Representatives to remove the capital to Pella and to Fort Des Moines. That designating the latter place seemed to have the support of a majority of the members, but was finally lost on ordering to a third reading. A bill was introduced into the Senate the following session, for the removal to Fort Des Moines; this was barely defeated upon the final vote.

The effort was resumed at the next session, and with success; and on the 15th of January, 1855, the Governor approved the bill re-locating the seat of government within two miles of the Raccoon fork of the Des Moines, and providing for the appointment of commissioners for that purpose. In accordance with this act, a site was selected in 1856, the land being given to the state by citizens and property-holders in Des Moines. An association of private individuals erected the building for a temporary capitol, leasing it at a nominal rent. Having been advised of the completion of this edifice, Governor Grimes, on the 19th of October, 1857, issued his proclamation declaring the City of Des Moines the capital of Iowa.

The removal of the offices and archives was forthwith commenced, and continued through the Fall of that year. It was an undertaking of no small magnitude; not a mile of railroad was there to facilitate the work, and the season was an unusually disagreeable one. Rain, snow, and their accompaniments increased the difficulties; so that it was not until December that the last of the effects, the safe of the treasurer of state, drawn on two bobsleds, by ten yoke of oxen, entered the new capitol. It is not imprudent now to whisper that while on this passage, over hills and prairies, across the rivers, and through the bottom-lands and the timber, several of the safes belonging to the different departments, contained considerable quantities of money, most of it, however, individual funds. Thus Iowa City finally ceased to be the seat of government, after having witnessed the meetings of four legislatures of the territory, and six of those of the state, besides three contitutional conventions. On the 11th of January, 1858, the Seventh General Assembly convened at Des Moines, now made by the fundamental law the permanent seat of government. The state obtained title to the building by purchase in 1864.

Its inadequacy for the purposes of its construction, however, has long been felt. The offices have become more and more crowded, and the legislative halls more and more meager. Accordingly, in 1870, the General Assembly, deeming the time had come for commencing work on a permanent edifice for the state government, took steps to that end by providing for the appointment of a board of commissioners, and making an appropriation for a beginning.

The Board of Commissioners consisted of the following persons: Gov. Samuel Merrill, President ex-officio (now Governor Carpenter, the Governor of the state being, by virtue of his office President of the Board); Grenville M. Dodge, Council Bluffs; James F. Wilson, Fairfield; James Dawson, Washington; Simon G. Stein, Muscatine; James O. Crosby, Garnavillo; Charles Dudley, Agency City; John N. Dewey, Des Moines; William L. Joy, Sioux City; Alexander R. Fulton, Des Moines, Secretary. The act provided that the building should be constructed of the best material, and should be fire-proof; should be heated and ventilated in the most approved manner; should contain suitable legislative halls, rooms for the judiciary, executive officers, library, committees, archives and collections of the State Agricultural Society, and for all purposes of the state government; and should be erected on the ground held by the state for that purpose. It provided that no contract should be made in the construction and furnishing of the building, the amount of which should bind the state beyond the sums at the time appropriated by law for such object. The initial sum appropriated was one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. A design was drawn, and plans and specifications furnished by Cochrane and Piquenard, architects, which were accepted by the Board; and on the 23d of November, 1871, the corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies. The work of construction has been carried on in a satisfactory manner, and at the present writing the basement and first story are nearly completed. It will be a structure worthy of the great State of Iowa, and will crown with architectural beauty a magnificent elevation in the midst of a landscape, which, for natural scenery, is unsurpassed in the West. (See view of the Capitol, taken from the architect's drawing, in the frontispiece of this work.)

GROWTH AND PROGRESS.

At the time of the organization of Wisconsin Territory, in 1836, the entire white population of that portion of the territory now embraced in the State of Iowa, was 10,531. The territory then embraced two counties, Dubuque and Des Moines, which had been erected by act of the Territorial Legislature of Michigan, in 1834. The Legislature under Wisconsin Territory, from 1836 to 1838, increased the counties in the territory to sixteen, the population in the meantime increasing to 22,859. Since then the counties have increased to ninety-nine in number, while the state, according to the latest census returns (1875), contains a population of 1,350,000. This is a gain of about 100,000 over the census of 1873, when the total population was 1,251,333. Of the ninety-nine counties in the state, these figures include seventy-six, which, up to this date, have made reports to the Secretary of State, leaving twenty-three counties yet to hear from. The gain over 1873, in the counties having made returns, is, in round numbers, 32,000, so that if the ratio of increase is maintained in the remaining twenty-three counties, the gain will be over 116,000. The gains in the largest proportion have been made in the newer counties of the north and northwest, the older ones in the eastern and southern portions of the state having in several instances barely held their own. Only three counties report a falling off in population, viz.: Black Hawk, Johnson and Emmet. The latter was one of the severely stricken by the grasshopper plague of 1874, and this decrease is readily accounted for, many of the people having been forced by successive disasters to leave its borders. In the case of Black Hawk and Johnson Counties, it is thought there must have been a mistake either in the last or in the previous enumeration. The most populous county in the state is Dubuque, 43,845, and the next is Scott, 39,736. For the sake of comparison, we subjoin the following table, showing the population at different periods since the organization of Iowa Territory:

Year	Population.	Year.	Population.
1844	75,152	1860	674,913
1846	97,588	1863	701,732
1847	116,651	1865	754,699
1851	204,774	1870	1,191,727

Not only in population has Iowa made rapid progress, but in every thing contributing to the greatness of a state. In little more than two score of years this prairie wilderness has advanced from a savage condition to a highly civilized commonwealth, embracing all the elements of progress which characterize the older states of the Union. Thriving towns and cities dot its fair surface; more than three thousand miles of railroads are woven in an iron net-work over its broad acres; nine thousand school houses, in which five hundred thousand children are taught the rudiments of an education, testify to the liberal spirit and culture of the people; high schools, colleges and universities, are liberally endowed throughout the state; manufactories are springing up along the water courses, and in most of the cities and towns. From the sixteenth in rank, as an agricultural state, Iowa has advanced to the third in the Union; while in arts and commerce she holds a place of noble distinction. Whether regarded from the date of first settlement, or from the organization of the territory, or from her admission as a state into the Union, the first years of Iowa show a growth unsurpassed in any similar period by any commonwealth of which we have knowledge.

And who shall predict her future? Who shall measure her undeveloped possibilities? With her vast extent of rich soil, with millions of untouched acres awaiting the pioneer's plow, with treasures of mineral wealth stored away for coming generations, with a healthful and invigorating climate, an intelligent and liberty-loving people, with liberal and just laws, free schools, religious and elemosynary institutions, the future of Iowa may well surpass the brightest anticipations of her present citizens.

Looking abroad over our whole country, we can hardly realize the changes which have occurred since Iowa first began to be settled by Americans. Then the number of states was twenty-six, their total population about twenty millions. Democracy was comparatively an experiment, put upon trial. Our development in agriculture and mineral wealth had barely commenced. The star of empire had hardly started on its westward way. Much of this mighty Mississippi Valley, with its rich soils and mineral deposits, lay a wide wilderness, its abundant riches scarcely imagined. West of the great Mississippi River for thousands of miles was almost an unknown country. Less than a quarter of a century ago we had no Pacific Railroad—no San Francisco. California, Nevada, Arizona, all these were Mexican Territory. Kansas and Nebraska were not organized. Neither science nor observation had detected their deposits of gold and silver. That now great railroad center of the West, Chicago, was just coming into public view. That vast mineral, grazing, and agricultural region traversed by the Union and Central Pacific Railroads, was noted by historians as the "Great American Desert," or the "Wild Cat Country," in which it would have been a misfortune to own land. Now thirty-seven states make up our beloved country. Forty millions of people press our soil—people who, knowing their rights, dare maintain them. This great brotherhood extends from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico, and from Plymouth Rock, on the Atlantic coast, to the golden shores of the Pacific.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The State Agricultural Society was organized in the Spring of 1854, with Honorable Thomas Claggett, of Keokuk, President, and three directors for each county that had a local agricultural society in operation. In the Fall of 1854 the society held its first annual fair in the town of Fairfield, Jefferson County, and it was quite a success. Mr. W. W. Moore, of Des Moines, sent down a choice case of stuffed birds—a collection of the different species in the Des Moines valley. They were considered one of the most attractive features of the exhibition. There being no provision made for a prize to the best lady equestrian in the state, President Claggett with characteristic gallantry bought a fine gold watch to be offered as a premium. Miss Turner, of Lee County, won the prize over the nine lady competitors who appeared in the lists, and got herself reported as follows: "She guided her horse with consummate grace, and bore herself so lady-like in the ring, that she was the cynosure of all eyes."

The society thus got a fine start in the outset, and has kept pace with the promise of its early history. In a state like Iowa, of such agricultural resources, the benefits of such a society were early seen and appreciated by many of the leading minds of the state, who devoted to it their fostering care and spared no pains to make it a success. The Legislature also encouraged it by appropriations, and has pursued a wise and liberal policy towards the agricultural interests of the state in general.

The law provides an appropriation of one thousand dollars annually for the benefit of the society, to be paid by the Auditor of State upon the order of the President of the society. It also provides that a meeting shall be held at the capital of the state on the second Wednesday of January in each year, at which the directors and officers shall be chosen, the place for holding the next annual exhibition determined, premiums on essays and field crops awarded, and all questions relating to the agricultural development of the state considered. The premium list and rules of exhibition are required to be determined and published by the Board of Directors prior to the first of April in each year, and the Board of Directors are to make an annual report to the Governor, embracing the proceedings of the society and Board of Directors for the past year, an abstract of the proceedings of the several county societies, and a general view of the condition of agriculture throughout the state, accompanied by such essays, statements and recommendations as they may deem interesting and useful; the report to be published by the state under the supervision of the Secretary of the society. The Secretary of State is required to distribute the reports as follows: Ten copies to the State University, ten to the State Library, ten to the State Agricultural College, one to each member of the General Assembly, and the remainder to the Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, by him to be distributed to the county agricultural societies; and one copy shall be sent to the Board of Supervisors of each organized county in which there is an agricultural society.

THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE AND FARM.

Ames, Story County.

The Iowa State Agricultural College and Farm were provided for by an act of the General Assembly, approved March 22, 1858. A Board of Trustees was appointed consisting of ex-Governor R. P. Lowe, John D. Wright, William Duane Wilson, M. W. Robinson, Timothy Day, Richard Gaines, John Pattee, G. W. F. Sherwin, Suel Foster, S. W. Henderson, Clement Coffin and E. G. Day. The Board met in June, 1859. Propositions were received from Hardin, Polk, Story, Marshall, Jefferson and Tama Counties, for the location of the college and farm. A selection was made at the next meeting in July, when the proposition of Story and Boone Counties was accepted, and the farm and site for the buildings located accordingly.

The offer made by Story County and some of its citizens, and by the citizens of Boone County, embraced $10,000 of county bonds which had been voted by Story County, nearly $4,000 in individual notes at ten per cent. interest from the date of location, payable in two years, and a thousand acres of unimproved land in Story and Boone Counties, in the vicinity of the farm.

The lands are dry and rolling prairie of excellent quality, with about 150 acres of timber, a never-failing spring in the center of the farm, a good stone quarry near by, and plenty of clay for the manufacture of brick.

The farm house and barn were erected in 1860–61. In 1864, the General Assembly made an appropriation of $20,000 for the erection of the college building. In June of that year the Building Committee, consisting of Suel Foster, Peter Melendy and A. J. Bronson, proceeded to let the contract. John Browne, of Des Moines, was employed as architect, and furnished the plans of the building, but was superseded in its construction by C. A. Dunham. The $20,000 appropriated by the General Assembly were expended in putting in the foundations and making the brick for the structure. An additional appropriation of $91,000 was made in 1866, and the building was completed in 1868.

This college is an important institution in its relation to the agricultural interests of Iowa. Its control and management are in the hands of a Board of Trustees, no two of whom are elected from the same congressional district, and who receive a compensation of five dollars a day for each day actually spent in the discharge of their duties. Tuition in this college is made by law forever free to pupils from the state over sixteen years of age, who have been resident of the state six months previous to their admission. Each county in the state has a prior right of tuition for three scholars from each county; the remainder, equal to the capacity of the college, are by the trustees distributed among the counties in proportion to the population, and subject to the above rule. All sales of ardent spirits, wine or beer, are prohibited by law within a distance of three miles from the college, except for sacramental, mechanical or medical purposes.

The course of instruction in the Agricultural College embraces the following branches: Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Botany, Horticulture, Fruit Growing, Forestry, Animal and Vegetable Anatomy, Geology, Mineralogy, Meteorology, Entomology, Zoology, the Veterinary Art, Plane Mensuration, Leveling, Surveying, Book-Keeping, and such Mechanical Arts as are directly connected with agriculture; also such other studies as the Trustees may from time to time prescribe not inconsistent with the purpose of the institution.

The college is in a prosperous condition. Its resources are as follows:

Funds arising from the sale and lease of lands and interest thereon, five sections in Jasper County, made available by act of Congress July 11, 1862, and 240,000 acres granted by act of Congress July 2, 1862, for the endowment of schools of agriculture and the mechanic arts. In 1862 and '63, 195,000 acres of these lands were located by the Commissioner, Peter Melendy, in the Fort Dodge, Sioux City and Des Moines districts, and since then other portions of these lands have been located by other commissioners; so that the amount patented to the state, and under the management of the board of trustees, is sufficient to create an adequate fund for the support of the Agricultural College.

THE PENITENTIARY.

Fort Madison, Lee County.

The first act of the Territorial Legislature, relating to a penitentiary in Iowa, was approved January 25, 1839, the fifth section of which authorized the Governor to draw the sum of $20,000 appropriated by an act of Congress approved July 7, 1838, for public buildings in the Territory of Iowa. It provided for a board of directors of three persons elected by joint ballot of both houses of the Legislature, who should direct the building of the penitentiary, which should be located within one mile of the public square, in the Town of Fort Madison, Lee County, on condition that the citizens of Fort Madison should deed to the directors a portion of land suitable for a site, and assign them by contract a spring or stream of water for the use of the penitentiary. To the directors were also given the power of appointing the Warden; the latter to appoint his own assistants.

The first directors appointed were John S. David and John Claypole. They made their first report to the Legislative Council November 9, 1839. The citizens of the Town of Fort Madison had executed a deed conveying ten acres of land for the building site. Amos Ladd was appointed Superintendent of the building June 5, 1839. The building was designed of sufficient capacity to contain one hundred and thirty-eight convicts, and estimated to cost $55,933.90. It was begun on the 9th of July, 1839; the main building and warden's house were completed in the Fall of 1841. Other additions were made from time to time till the building and arrangements were all complete according to the plan of the directors. It has answered the purpose of the state as a penitentiary for more than thirty years, and during that period many items of practical experience in prison management have been gained.

It has long been a problem, how to conduct prisons and deal with the criminal classes generally, in a manner to at once secure their good and subserve the best interests of the state. Both questions must be taken into consideration in any humanitarian view of the subject. Iowa has acted upon the enlightened policy, now rapidly gaining ground in all civilized countries, that the state is as well and even better protected by a course of humane treatment of her prisoners, in connection with the utilization of their labor for their own support, than by a course involving idleness and the needless cruelty of solitary confinement. The latter has been entirely abandoned, except in cases where it has been found necessary for discipline.

The labor of the convicts in the Iowa penitentiary, as in most others in the United States, is let out to contractors, who pay the state a certain stipulated amount therefor, the state furnishing the shops, tools and machinery, as well as the supervision necessary to preserve order and discipline in the prison.

Objections have sometimes been urged against thus bringing convict labor into competition with the industry of honest citizens, and necessarily cheapening the products of certain kinds of labor in the market. But such do not properly consider the effects of idleness and solitary confinement upon prisoners. Solitary confinement makes men morose, revengeful and often insane; it not infrequently drives them to suicide. For these reasons it has pretty generally been abandoned wherever it has been tried. Keeping convicts idle, too, does not seem advisable. The cost of supporting a thousand convicts, we will say, is $250,000 a year. Their labor defrays this cost, or a greater part of it. The state makes no profit on it. Now, if they are not supported by their own labor, they must be by the labor of the community. If they do not earn this $250,000, it must be added to the state taxes. The farmers, mechanics, manufacturers, and other honest men must assume the task of paying an extra quarter of a million dollars every year to support these prisoners in idleness. The latter now simply exchange their labor for food, clothing, fuel, medicines, etc. They consume $250,000 worth of the products of honest labor, and give in exchange for it an equal competition in the labor market with stonecutters, coopers, blacksmiths, shoemakers, tailors, wagonmakers, or other mechanical occupations; but they must work at some trade or lie idle.

Most of these convicts go into the penitentiary because they had learned no trade, and finding themselves out of money or means of a livelihood, turned their attention to criminal actions to get a living. When they leave the prison they will have learned a trade, and thereafter be able to support themselves, and those dependent upon them, by honest means. This view of the matter has not been ignored in the Iowa penitentiary, but the fact that prisoners, though criminals, are nevertheless human beings, and entitled to live by their labor, has been fully recognized. If they gave back nothing, and were mere consumers, they would destroy $250,000 of the working capital every year, and to that extent diminish the wages-fund of the community.

If, in addition to this pecuniary view, we consider the moral and intellectual effects of idleness and solitary confinement, as compared with liberty, association and active employment on the part of prisoners, we shall see in a still stronger light the wisdom and humanity of the policy inaugurated by our modern prison reforms. Think of a thousand men busily employed, their minds elevated above the melancholy, the revenge, the morbid passions that brood in low, damp cells, within bolts and bars, from which hope is often excluded; the vent to the pent-up fires which work always affords; the leisure for plotting and scheming mischief which it prevents; the occupation of the mind, instead, with objects for which to work in the acquirement of skill in their occupations, the application of the principles of their trades, and the exercise of the inventive faculty. All these are encouraged and made prominent in our prison systems of labor, and experience has demonstrated their salutary effects. Indeed, without the industries of the prison, its moral and religious appliances for the good of the convicts would be of little avail. As it is, the prisoners are shown in a practical way that efforts are being made to make men of them, and feeling that, they can the more readily accept of those influences calculated to make them Christians.

ADDITIONAL PENITENTIARY.

Located at Anamosa, Jones County.

On the 23d of April, 1872, the Fourteenth General Assembly appointed William Ure, Foster L. Downing and Martin Heisey, a Board of Commissioners to locate and provide for the erection and control of an additional penitentiary for the State of Iowa. The Board met on the 4th of June at Anamosa, Jones County, and selected a site donated by the citizens within the corporate limits of that city. L. W. Foster & Co., architects, of Des Moines, were employed by the Board to furnish drawings and specifications. The work on the building was commenced on the 28th of September, 1872. It is at the present writing in a good state of progress, there being cells and accommodations for about sixty convicts, who are employed in the quarries and in labor on the building. On the 13th of May, 1873, twenty convicts were transferred from the penitentiary at Fort Madison.

The building at Anamosa will be an imposing structure when completed. The entire enclosure consists of fifteen acres, with a frontage of 663 feet.

The building, including the warden's house, which projects 71 feet from the main prison buildings, with its extended wings on either side, will be 434 feet in length, and at the highest point 85 feet in height, the cell rooms being 42 feet high. In front upon the street will be a neat iron fence enclosing three acres of ground and extending the whole length of the front. This enclosure will be filled with ornamental trees, shrubbery, flower beds and walks. The warden's house, prison cells, guards' hall, entrance hall to the dining-room are in the shape of a cross, and a guard standing in the centre of this hall can see to the extremity of either wing.

A provision is made by which the guards mount the wall from the outside, and thus avoid the necessity of passing among the prisoners in mounting guard.

The buildings, shops and walls will be built of stone obtained from the state quarry mentioned below, and the labor will be done by the prisoners chiefly. The entrance gate on the south, with its abutments of rustic work, 14 feet wide by 24 feet in height, will be a model of beauty.

The following, taken from the Commissioner's report, contains the dimensions of the various buildings, work-shops, walls, etc., when completed:

"The plan adopted by the Board consists of two cell wings extending parallel with the front, each 52 by 192 feet, connected by a guards' hall, 50 by 50 feet. There are in each cell wing four tiers, sixty-two cells to each tier, making a total of 496 cells in the two wings, each cell being 4 feet 6 inches by 8 feet. The front building, or warden's house, is 50 by 80 feet; total height, 80 feet. In the rear of the guards' hall is the dining-room, 42 by 112 feet; to the right of the dining-room is the kitchen; to the left the laundry; over the dining-room is the chapel. The building is 434 feet front by 300 feet deep. There are to be nine workshops, forming a square with the main building for the front, located near 50 feet from each other and the prison walls: seven shops will be 50 by 102 feet, and two will be 50 by 120 feet, with wings 40 by 80 feet; all two stories high, except one half of the wings to the last two shops, which are one story; the whole to be enclosed with a substantial stone wall."

On the west, south and north this wall will be 22 feet in height, 7 feet wide at the base, and 4 feet wide at the top, with guard-houses at proper distances, elevated several feet above the wall.

The system of ventilation is as good as it is possible to make it. There is a space between the back of the cells, one foot in width, for an air chamber, through which the foul air escapes by means of registers in each cell. This passage extends through the different stories, allowing the fœtid air finally to escape through the different foul-air shafts.

The present miscellaneous library, donated by the citizens of Anamosa, consisting of about two hundred volumes, is distributed among the prisoners and exchanged every Sabbath, and, besides breaking the monotony of prison life, affords opportunity for instruction. A Sabbath School, conducted by prominent citizens, is having a salutary influence upon the prisoners, and the preaching service every Sunday, without charge, furnished by clergymen in the vicinity, is not without its effects. The American Bible Society donated sixty-five bibles for the use of the prisoners.

STATE UNIVERSITY.

Located at Iowa City.

The State University of Iowa was organized in 1856. The constitution gives it a permanent location at Iowa City. The objects of the University are to provide the best and most efficient means of imparting to young men and women, on equal terms, a liberal education, and thorough knowledge of the different branches of literature, the arts and sciences, with their diversified applications. It is provided by law, that so far as practicable, it shall begin its courses of study in its collegiate and scientific departments, at the points where the same are completed in the high schools of the state, and thus articulate with the highest department of the graded school system. No pupil is admitted who has not previously completed the elementary studies in such branches as are taught in the common schools of Iowa.

The law provides that the University shall never be under the exclusive control of any religious denomination; that it shall be governed by a Board of Regents, consisting of the Governor of the State, who shall be President of the Board by virtue of his office, and the President of the University, who shall also be a member of the Board by virtue of his office, together with one person from each Congressional District of the state, who shall be elected by the General Assembly; that the University shall include a collegiate, scientific, normal, law, and such other departments, with such courses of instruction and elective studies as the Board of Regents may determine. Under this last head the medical department is included. All specimens of natural history, geology and mineralogy, which are collected by the state geologist, or by any others appointed by the state to investigate its natural history and physical resources, belong to, and are the property of the State University, and form a part of the cabinet of natural history, which is under the charge of the professor of that department.

We embody in this article the following facts and statements taken from the last annual catalogue:

THE UNIVERSITY comprises three separate Departments:

1. THE ACADEMICAL, affording the largest facilities for liberal culture in both letters and science:
2. THE DEPARTMENT OF LAW;
3. THE DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE.

The government of the University is vested in the President and the three Faculties.

The government of each Department is vested in the President and the Faculty of that Department.

The advantages of the University are offered to all who desire them, subject to the conditions stated in the following pages.

The students of any Department may avail themselves of the facilities afforded in the other Departments to any extent consistent with their regular studies.

It is the purpose of the Regents and Faculties of the University to keep it, as nearly as possible, abreast with the most advanced educational spirit of the times.

With this view they are extending the range of study, increasing the number of Professors and assistants, improving the facilities for instruction, and raising the standard of scholarship, as rapidly as the treasury of the institution will allow, and the best interests of the students and the Commonwealth demand.

It is believed that the youth of Iowa and adjacent states, who may come hither to qualify themselves for their various spheres of life, will find here all the means of professional and liberal culture which they can profitably employ.

ACADEMICAL DEPARTMENT.

1. The programme of study in this Department covers a period of six years.
2. The period includes the sub-freshman, or preparatory course, of two years, and the usual college curriculum of four years.
3. In the college curriculum there are four courses of study: Classical, Philosophical, Scientific, and Civil Engineering.
4. These courses are intended to be so diverse in their requirements and advantages, as to offer a reasonable range of choice to meet the different wishes, necessities, or tastes of the students.
5. Every student, at the commencement of his Freshman year, will be required to make an election of one of these courses, with the intention of pursuing it till graduation, or so long as he may be a member of this Department.
6. No student will be allowed, without permission from the Faculty, to change his elected course, or to pursue more than three studies at a time, except as required by the programme.

Regular Students.—Any person complying with the terms of admission given below, will be allowed to select from the four courses such studies as he may prefer, under the direction of the Faculty. Irregular students will recite with the academical classes, and will sustain in all respects the same relation as other students to the University.

Resident Graduates.—Graduates of this or other institutions desirous of prosecuting studies not included in their undergraduate course, may, on consultation with the President, become connected with the University for that purpose, and avail themselves of such facilities as the several chairs of instruction afford.

TERMS OF ADMISSION.

1. Applicants for admission to this Department must present testimonials of good moral character, and if coming from other colleges, must exhibit certificates of dismission in good standing.
2. Those who enter at the beginning of the sub-Freshman course must be at least fourteen years of age, and those who enter at a later stage of study must be proportionally older.
3. Applicants of every grade must pass an examination in English Grammar, Geography, History of the United States, Arithmetic, and Introductory Algebra (Ray's or Robinson's) as far as Quadratics.
4. Candidates for the Freshman class will be examined in the studies of the sub-Freshman course, or their equivalent.
5. Those proposing to enter any course at an advanced standing, will be examined in such studies of the course as may have been pursued previous to their admission.
6. Regular examinations will be held at eight o'clock A. M., on the Wednesday next preceding the opening of the Fall term in September. Examinations will also be granted at the beginning of the Winter and Spring terms, or at any other time, to suit the convenience of the applicant; but it is of the highest importance to every student that he present himself for admission in September, if possible, so as to begin his studies when the regular classes are formed.
7. Special Students.—Any person applying for the privilege of pursuing the single line of study taught by any Professor, will be allowed to do so, on consultation with the President, and with consent of the Professor, without examination, and on payment of the fee for incidental expenses.
8. The Board of Regents have authorized the Faculty to receive, without examination, all applicants for admission bringing certificates of qualification from those High Schools and Academies in which the required course of study embraces the branches named in our catalogue as preparatory for the sub-Freshman course, provided the instruction in said schools and academies be known to be of such a character as to justify this arrangement.

The same privilege will be extended to candidates for the Freshman class, on presenting satisfactory testimonials of scholarship from the Principals of such schools as shall be approved by the Faculty, after a report from a committee which shall have visited them at the request of the school authorities. This privilege may be revoked at the discretion of the Faculty whenever the students who may have been received under it shall show themselves to have been but poorly instructed in the preparatory schools.

MILITARY SCIENCE.

By order of the President of the United States, at the request of the Regents of the University, Lieutenant Alexander D. Schenck, of 2d U. S. Artillery, a graduate of the Military Academy at West Point, and of the U. S. Artillery School, has been detailed to the Professorship of Military Science and Tactics.

The object of this Professorship is stated by the Regents "not to give the students an extensive military education, but only so much military training and knowledge as will best consist with the required literary and scientific purposes of the University."

The battalion is composed solely of such students as choose to join it. The enlistment is for one, two or three Academical terms. The duties prescribed by the Regents are one hour's drill three times a week during the Fall and Spring terms, for the entire battalion; and for Seniors and Juniors, one recitation or lecture per week through the Winter term, involving not over one and a half hours' study on the average.

Cannon, muskets, swords and accoutrements are furnished by the Federal Government. Drums, fifes, flags and other necessaries, are supplied by the Board of Regents. Elegant uniforms can be obtained by the students, at their own expense, for a much lower cost than ordinary clothing.

CIVIL ENGINEERING.

It is the intention of those in charge of this course of study to prepare students for the same average usefulness in the usual affairs in life as other graduates, and in addition thereto to enable them, as inclinations direct and opportunities offer, to take an active part in the material progress of the times. It is therefore the purpose of those in charge to make it as thorough and practical as possible. With this end in view, frequent reference will be made to actual operations and constructions, data will be taken largely from real cases occurring in the experience of instructors and others, and the corresponding computations made by the students.

The course in drawing includes a complete knowledge of all the fundamental principles of the science, as well as an application of those principles to the various kinds of drawing embraced in the course.

Students under competent direction, have extensive, free and unrestricted use of the various instruments belonging to this chair, and thus become more familiar with them than is possible where such use is in any way curtailed. In view of the facts mentioned, it is expected to secure an easy transition from the work of the class room to the duties of the field engineer.

APPARATUS AND LIBRARY.

Students pursuing this course will have the advantage of a valuable collection of standard works of reference; of a good supply of instruments; of the valuable charts published by the U. S. Lake and Coast Surveys; of maps and drawings of R. R. Surveys and Works; of about three thousand models from the Patent Office illustrating almost every branch of engineering; of numerous drawings and photographic views of machinery; besides a very fine bridge model, exhibiting in an elegant manner the strain upon the different parts of such a structure. Students in this course have free use of the general library, and all appurtenances of the University.

The Laboratory of Physical Science is open to students every school day, from 8 to 11 A. M., and from 2 till 5 P. M.

The Laboratory occupies the entire first story of the north building, and covers an area of 3,500 square feet. The rooms are provided with cases, containing extensive collections of chemicals, crystals, minerals, rocks, and a cabinet of physical and chemical apparatus. The special Laboratory Library embraces many of the best works and periodicals on the different branches of Physical Science.

The following Laboratory Courses are in operation:

A.—A GENERAL COURSE in the Elements of Physics, Chemistry, and Mineralogy, for students of the Sophomore class.

B.—ELECTIVE COURSES FOR JUNIORS AND SENIORS. 1. Theoretical and Practical Physics, embracing Optics, Calorics, Electricity, Magnetism, and Molecular Physics. (Three terms.) 2. Theoretical and Practical Chemistry. (Three terms.)

NATURAL SCIENCE.

THE CABINET AND MEANS OF ILLUSTRATION.—The Geological department of the cabinet is especially valuable as regards our own state, from the fact that all the collections of the State Geological Survey were, by law, given to the University. From time to time, collections are being added from equivalent strata elsewhere, as well as from formations that are not represented in Iowa.

Besides the University collection, a very fine series of duplicates from the private collections of the Professor of Natural Science, embracing many of the rarer forms from Iowa, with typical species from the more noted localities of other states, is kept by the institution, and is accessible to all students of Geology.

The Zoological department contains several thousand specimens, distributed among the various branches of the animal kingdom. A very large collection of crustaceans, shells, star fishes, corals, sponges, etc., formerly part of the great cabinet of H. T. Woodman, Esq., of Dubuque, has recently been added to the museum, and affords superior means of illustrating the diversified forms of marine invertebrates.

Some hundreds of mounted specimens of our indigenous mammals, birds, reptiles, fishes, etc., introduce the student to the fauna of the Northwest.

The Botanical department contains a fair and constantly increasing number of preserved specimens of native plants. Illustrations for the classes, however, are now, and always must be, largely supplied by the fresh products of garden, wood and field.

A good microscope is kept for frequent use in all the classes.

A supply of charts, diagrams, models, etc., illustrating the science taught in this department, is unusually complete.

The method of instruction in Natural Science combines text-book recitations and lectures, with laboratory practice and field work, the aim being to lead students as far as possible to become independent observers of Nature.

DIDACTICS.

The design of this chair is to prepare teachers for advanced schools. Hence only those academical seniors who intend to become teachers, and special students who may be qualified to be classed with them, are allowed to pursue the normal studies.

Didactics, in the higher sense, includes the philosophy of mind, the laws of mental development, and all those branches of study and methods of instruction that are employed in general education. The course of study and the methods of teaching in the Academical Department are such as would be selected if that department were organized and carried forward for the sole purpose of educating teachers for advanced schools. Such teachers need, primarily, accurate scholarship united with liberal culture. The instruction given in Language, Science, Mathematics and Literature meet the demand.

INSTRUCTION.

The exercises in the Normal Class consist of: Text-book recitations, expository readings from standard works on education, discussions in which all the members of the class are expected to participate, lessons in method, observations in public schools, examination of text-books in common use and the reports thereon, together with lectures on various subjects relating to the history and systems of education in our own and other countries, to the organizing, grading and governing of schools, and the duties and responsibilities of principals and superintendents.

It is believed that those who avail themselves of the opportunities thus afforded in the University will be instructed in all the learning necessary to fit them for the work of teaching, and in all the methods that will qualify them to do it well. The Professors in the Academical Department not only make use of text-books and recitations, but vary the exercises of the class-room with occasional or serial lectures on such subjects—literary, scientific, and historical—as relate to their respective chairs, and are adapted to the several stages of progress which their classes may have reached.

A public examination at the close of each term will decide the rank of every student in this department.

A record is kept of the attainments of every student, and information concerning the same will be communicated to the parent or guardian when rendered necessary by irregularity of attendance or a low grade of scholarship.

Those who complete the required course in a satisfactory manner will, on receiving the degree of A. B. or B. Ph., be entitled to a certified testimonial of qualifications as teachers, and after two years of successful teaching may receive the degree of Bachelor of Didactics.

LIBRARY.

The Normal Library is supplied with standard educational works, reports of city and state superintendents, many of the leading educational journals of this country and England, sets of common school-books, and apparatus for primary, grammar, and high schools, which students are required to read and examine.

The library of this department contains from six to seven thousand works, representing the various departments of literature and science, besides cyclopædias and other books of reference, periodicals both home and foreign.

The University Reporter is a sixteen-page monthly paper, conducted by the students, and aided by contributions from the Faculty and former graduates.

Terms: One dollar per year, in advance. Address, University Reporter, Box 279, Iowa City.

Connected with the University are the Erodelphian and Hesperian, composed of ladies; the Zetagathean and Irving Institute, consisting of gentlemen.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

A thorough knowledge of the history, structure and use of our own language is considered by the Regents of the University and the Faculty of this department an indispensable element of the higher education. To furnish abundant facilities for gaining this knowledge is their steadfast wish and aim. The general plan pursued in English literature is as follows:

In the Fall term the origin and growth of the language are carefully studied, together with the lives and literary labors of distinguished English authors from the earliest times to the present.

In the Winter term, the writings of Chaucer, Spencer, Shakespeare, Bacon, Milton, Addison and others are critically examined, with a view to the just appreciation of their thought and style. Considerable time is also devoted to syntactical analysis and to tracing words to their origin in the Anglo-Saxon and other tongues.

In the Spring term, the poets, orators and miscellaneous prose writers of America receive special consideration.

LAW DEPARTMENT.

The Department of Law is now in the tenth year of its existence, having been founded in the year 1865 (as a distinct institution at Des Moines, under the name of the Iowa Law School), and incorporated with the University in 1868. Two hundred and fifty-six students have already received the degree of LL. B., and the number of graduates, as well as of those in attendance for periods less than the entire course, increases steadily with each successive year.

Law students are subject to the general regulations of the University, but not to those designed expressly for members of the Academical Department.

The course of study in the department is so arranged as to be completed within a single year, beginning in September and ending at the annual University Commencement, the last of June. It is divided into three terms, corresponding with those of the Academical Department. The course is intended to embrace all branches of a complete legal education, so far as practicable within the time allotted, and to prepare students for the bar of any of the United States—special attention, however, being given to the subjects most likely to be useful in Western practice.

An Advanced Course, requiring another year of study, was established in the Summer of 1874, and has been in operation during the whole of the past year. For the present, however, this course will be optional, and no change will be made in the requirements for graduation. As the diploma of the school admits its graduates to all the courts of the state, the authorities of the University do not feel at liberty to make any change in the previous conditions for a degree until the Legislature have had an opportunity to pass upon such change, and to make it a part of the statutory conditions for the practice of law. In the meantime every effort will be given to make this optional advanced course of value to such students as desire to make the most thorough and complete preparations for the practice of law. It will be open without additional charge to all students who have already completed the regular course, will commence at the same time with the latter, and extend through the year. It will embrace, first, a thorough revision of all the topics of the first year; second, special applications of the principles of law to the specific questions occurring in practice; third, the study of general jurisprudence, and the philosophy of law. This advanced course will be henceforth a permanent feature of the school. Graduates of this department will be admitted to it without charge for tuition; all others will be expected to pass an examination equivalent to that required for the degree of LL. B., and to pay the regular tuition fees. Such students, after completing the advanced course, will receive their degree as graduates of this institution.

LIBRARY AND TEXT-BOOKS.

The library of this department contains about 2,500 volumes of treatises and reports, selected expressly for the use of the school, and will be enlarged as rapidly as the funds granted for that purpose by the Regents will admit. It already includes the reports of nearly all the Northern States, with a large collection of English and Federal reports. The library is open every day in the term, from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M., and students of the department have free access to it for purposes of study or reference. Especial attention is directed by the instructors to familiarizing the class with the contents of the library, and teaching them to look up authorities, make up briefs,—in short, training them to find for themselves the law upon any subject desired.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

THE PLAN OF THIS DEPARTMENT requires the attendance of the students through two annual sessions, but should the American Medical Association recommend an extension of the time to three sessions, and a specified amount of preparatory study in order to admission, the Faculty of the institution will cheerfully aid in carrying out that object.

Students of both sexes are admitted on equal terms, and afforded in all respects the same facilities for acquiring a thorough medical education.

The following remarks set forth some of the incitements to study and facilities for the acquisition of medical knowledge furnished by this school:

1. EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.—The students are examined every day on the lectures of the previous day, and the standing recorded for future reference.

2. CLINICAL DUTIES OF THE STUDENTS.—Advanced students are required to make examinations at the clinics, and to prescribe for the patients.

3. OPERATIONS ON THE CADAVER.—All kinds of surgical operations on the cadaver are performed by the students in the presence of the class, and under the direction of the Professor of Surgery.

4. PRIVATE INSTRUCTION.—Private instruction in all the departments of medicine is furnished to all who may wish to avail themselves of such opportunities.

5. HOSPITAL AND CLINICS.—The Department has facilities for clinical instruction unsurpassed in the Western States. The University Hospital, located within two blocks of the University, not only affords ample accommodations to all who may apply for treatment, but has a large and convenient amphitheater where from four to five hundred cases of disease have been exhibited to the students during the last year.

6. A SPECIAL ADVANTAGE of the hospital is the opportunity afforded to members of the class for observing the treatment of cases in company with the attending physician when making his daily rounds.

7. PRACTICAL ANATOMY.—The thorough study of Practical Anatomy will be required of every student. Facilities for obtaining material are such that an abundant supply will always be provided. The Professor and Demonstrator of Anatomy will be always ready to aid the student in his anatomical studies. The Anatomical Museum will be open to students at all hours when lectures are not in progress.

8. EXAMINING COMMITTEE.—The qualifications of each graduating class are guaranteed by the fact that a committee selected from the membership of the State Medical Society takes part in the examination at the close of each annual session.

9. CHEMICAL LABORATORY.—The Chemical Laboratory is open six hours daily, for the study of practical chemistry. Courses in Chemical Analysis, Urine Analysis, and Pure Toxicology have been specially arranged for medical students.

10. SPECIAL CHEMICAL STUDY.—To students who remain at the University after the close of the annual session, an opportunity will be given during the ensuing three months for the study of Analytical Chemistry.

FEES.

Lecture fees for the entire course,	$20.00
Matriculation ticket,	5.00
Demonstrator's ticket,	10.00
Graduation fee,	25 00
Hospital ticket,	Gratuitous.

No charge for material.

In explanation of these very low charges, it ought to be stated that the Medical (like every other) Department of the University, is only partially sustained by students' fees, but depends for its support, very largely, on the biennial appropriations of the legislature, and the income of a fund derived from the sale of lands granted by the Federal Congress.

In consequence of this liberality, the University is able, every year, to increase the number of well qualified physicians, and to abate the evil of professional incompetency, and of popular ignorance concerning the fitness of not a few so called doctors for their responsible and difficult duties.

GRADUATION.

Each candidate for graduation must undergo a satisfactory examination in all the branches taught in the Department, and present an acceptable thesis, in his own handwriting, and on a subject connected with some branch of medicine. The candidate must notify the Dean, in writing, during the first week in February, of his or her intention to become an applicant for graduation, and at the same time present the thesis and graduation fee. In case of a failure to graduate, the fee and thesis will be returned.

THE AD EUNDEM DEGREE in this Department may be conferred under the following circumstances: The candidate must be in possession of an accredited diploma, and must present letters from two respectable physicians as to moral character and professional standing. An attendance upon lectures, from time to time, is expected during the session, and a satisfactory examination must be passed on all the subjects taught in the Department. From those who receive the ad eundem degree, the matriculation fee, and a fee of $25, will be required.

PRIZES.

For the best performed dissection of Surgical Anatomy, Prof. Peck will give an operating case worth $50.

For the second best dissection, Prof. Peck will give a pocket case of instruments worth $25.

For the best anatomical dissection of the vessels and nerves of the neck, Prof. Clapp will give a pocket case of instruments worth $30.

Prof. Shrader offers a prize of $25 for the best thesis on puerperal fever.

For the best experimental work in Physiological Chemistry, Prof. Hinrichs will give a set of apparatus for urine analysis worth $25.

For the best record of the Medical Clinics during the session, Prof. Robertson will give a post mortem case of instruments worth $25.

For the best thesis on some medical subject, Prof. Robertson will give a set of Physical Diagnosis instruments worth $15.

The committee on public examinations will award these prizes, but will reserve the right to reject any specimen of work if not sufficiently meritorious, when there is but one competitor.

THE MUSEUM

Has recently received large additions to its collection of wet and dried preparations in the various Departments, together with articles in wax and papier maché for illustrating the lectures.

In this brief summary of the State University, we have aimed more to represent the general spirit, and some special and important features of the institution, than to give a full catalogue in every particular. The details of the courses of study in the different departments, and the names of the Faculties have been purposely omitted as belonging more properly to a catalogue than to this general branch of history.

STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

In connection with the University, there was provided for by act of the General Assembly, approved January 28, 1857, a State Historical Society. An appropriation of $250 was made as a beginning, to be expended in collecting, embodying, and preserving in an authentic form, a library of books, pamphlets, charts, maps, manuscripts, papers, paintings, statuary, and other materials illustrative of the History of Iowa; and with the further object to rescue from oblivion the memory of the early pioneers; to obtain and preserve various accounts of their exploits, perils and hardy adventures; to secure facts and statements relative to the history, genius, and progress or decay of the Indian tribes of Iowa; to exhibit faithfully the antiquities, and past and present resources of the state; to aid in the publication of such collections of the Society as shall from time to time be deemed of value and interest; to aid in binding its books, pamphlets, manuscripts and papers, and in defraying other necessary incidental expenses of the Society.

There is appropriated by law to this institution, till the General Assembly shall otherwise direct, the sum of $500 per annum. The Society is under the management of a Board of Curators, consisting of eighteen persons, nine of whom are appointed by the Governor, and nine elected by the members of the Society. The Curators receive no compensation for their services. The annual meeting is provided for by law, to be held at Iowa City on Monday preceding the last Wednesday in June of each year. The law requires that there shall be delivered to the Society twenty bound copies of the reports of the Supreme Court, and of all other books and documents published by the state, for the purpose of effecting exchanges with similar societies in other states and countries, and for preservation in its library and other purposes of the Society.

The State Historical Society has published a series of very valuable collections, including history, biography, sketches, reminiscences, etc., with quite a large number of finely engraved portraits of prominent and early settlers, under the title of "Annals of Iowa." This work has attained to its thirteenth volume, and is highly esteemed for its contributions to the history of the state.

HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Mount Pleasant, Henry County.

This institution was established by an act of the General Assembly, approved January 24, 1855. A Board of Commissioners was appointed, consisting of the Governor of the state, Edward Johnston, of Lee County, and Charles S. Blake, of Henry County, to locate and erect the building. The location selected was Mount Pleasant, Henry County. The plan of the building was furnished by Dr. Bell, of the McLean Asylum, near Boston, and was accepted by the commissioners. The work was commenced in October, 1855, under the superintendence of Mr. Henry Winslow. The building was constructed with a capacity for three hundred patients. It is an imposing structure, covering an area of 50,000 superficial feet; the entire length of the foundation is 2,230 feet; the center or main portion of the building is 54 feet high, including four stories; the wings extending east and and west from the center building, are 42 feet in height, containing three stories. The entire outside of the building is of cut stone, and in its arrangement and furnishing contains every modern improvement.

The following were the appropriations for the building and other purposes up to the last mentioned date:

Appropriated for site January 24, 1855	$ 4,425.00
First appropriation for building January 24, 1855	50,000.00
Second appropriation for building July 2, 1856	50,000.00
Third appropriation for building January 28, 1857	40,000.00
Saline land fund from July 14, 1856, to March 28, 1858	14,130.67
Appropriated February 25, 1838	100,000 00
Total	$258,555.67

R. J. Patterson, M.D., of Ohio, was chosen first Superintendent in 1861, and the institution was formally opened with religious exercises on the 6th of March of that year.

The law provides that the hospitals for the insane (this and the one at Independence) shall be under the charge of five trustees, two of whom may be women, and three of whom shall form a quorum for the transaction of business. The superintendent of the hospital shall be a physician of acknowledged skill and ability in his profession, and shall be the chief executive officer of the institution. The arrangement for entering patients is in substance as follows:

In each county in the state there is a Board of three Commissioners of Insanity, the clerk of the circuit court being a member of the board and clerk of the same, and the other two being respectively a respectable practicing physician, and a respectable lawyer. These are appointed by the judge of the circuit court. They have cognizance of all applications for admission to the hospital, or for the safe keeping otherwise of insane persons within their respective counties. For the purpose of the discharge of their duties, they have power to subpœna witnesses and administer oaths. After due investigation, upon the certificate of a physician, who may or may not be a member of the board, the commissioners decide the question of the sanity or insanity of the person for whom application is made, and, if declared insane, issue their warrant for the admission of such person to the hospital.

The board and other expenses of patients at the hospital are paid by the respective counties, the supervisors levying a tax therefor, which by the county auditor is reported to the state auditor, and placed to the credit of the state for the hospital.

HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Independence, Buchanan County.

A bill providing for an additional hospital for the insane, passed the General Assembly in the Winter of 1867–8, making an appropriation for that object of $125,000. Maturin L. Fisher, of Clayton County; E. G. Morgan, of Webster County; and Albert Clark, of Buchanan County, were appointed Commissioners to locate and supervise the erection of the building. Mr. Clark died about a year after his appointment, and Hon. G. W. Bemis, of Independence, was appointed to fill the vacancy. The bill required a donation of 320 acres of land within two and a half miles of the city, which was soon provided for by those interested in the work. The site was approved by the commissioners at a meeting held in June, 1868.

The plan of the building, drafted and submitted by Col. S. B. Shipman, of Madison, Wisconsin, is as follows: When completed it will present a front view of 762 feet, consisting of a main center building and wings constructed in longitudinal and transverse sections, each receding towards the rear from the center building. The main center building is 60 by 100 feet, four stories in height besides Mansard roof. The wings are composed, first, of a longitudinal section 45 by 72 feet; then a transverse section 36 by 87½ feet; then a longitudinal section 26 by 56 feet, ending in a transverse building 35 by 72 feet. The longitudinal sections are all three stories high with plain slate roof; the transverse sections three stories and Mansard roof. Back of the main building is located the rear center building, the front section of which is 42 by 60 feet, three stories above the basement, the upper story being the chapel, and connected with the main building by a corridor seven feet wide by twenty long. The rear section of this building is 44 by 49 feet, three stories above the basement, and connected with the fan tower and engine house by a passage forty feet long. The engine house, directly in the rear of the center building, is 55 by 115 feet, one story high with a roomy attic, which is for the purpose of a workshop, and contains considerable machinery.

The main buildings are constructed of dressed limestone from the quarries at Anamosa and Farley. The basements are of the local granite worked from the immense boulders found in large quantities in this portion of the state.

The first contract for erecting the two northern buildings was awarded to David Armstrong, of Dubuque, at a contract price of $88,114. At the end of the first season the commissioners became satisfied that the interests of the state would be better subserved by having the work done by the day, and an amicable arrangement was effected accordingly. Since then the work has progressed under the immediate supervision of Mr. George Josselyn, superintendent of construction.

Appropriations have been made as follows:

Twelfth General Assembly	$125,000
Thirteenth General Assembly	165,000
Fourteenth General Assembly	200,000
Fifteenth General Assembly	93,900
Total	$583,900

The cost of the buildings when completed, will probably be not far from a million of dollars.

COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.

Vinton, Benton County.

The Iowa College for the Blind was established pursuant to an act of the General Assembly, approved January 18, 1853. It was organized at Iowa City by the appointment of Professor S. Bacon, Principal, Professor T. J. McGittigen, Teacher of Music, and Mrs. S. Bacon, Matron. The first Board of Trustees were: Robert Walker, Johnson County, President; George W. McCleary, Johnson County, Secretary; Robert Hutchinson, Johnson County, Treasurer.

The institution was opened for the reception of pupils, April 4, 1853. During the first term twenty-three were admitted. In 1855, the General Assembly made an annual appropriation for the College of $55 per quarter for each pupil. This was subsequently changed to $3,000 per annum, and a charge of $25 as an admission fee for each pupil, which sum, with the amounts realized from the sale of articles manufactured by the blind pupils, proved sufficient for the expenses of the institution during Mr. Bacon's administration. Although Mr. Bacon was blind, he was a fine scholar and an economical manager, and had founded the Blind Asylum at Jacksonville, Illinois. As a mathematician he had few superiors.

On the 8th of May, 1858, the Board of Trustees met at Vinton, and in pursuance of law, made arrangements for securing the donation of $5,000 made by the citizens of that town. In June of that year a quarter section of land was donated for the College by John W. O. Webb and others. The trustees adopted the following plan for a building: Main structure 108 by 64 feet; the center portion (projecting 6 feet in front), 54 feet long, with four stories above the basement, ranging from 14 to 11 feet in height. The entire height from basement to cornice, 64 feet, and the distance from the basement to the square of the cupola 76.33 feet. The entire area covered by the building (including portico and steps), 7,680 feet. The building to be in the Ionic style of architecture.

In 1860 the plan of the building was somewhat modified, and the contract for enclosing let to Messrs. Finkbine and Lovelace for $10,420. The building was so far completed as to admit the school in October, 1862, at which time it was removed from Iowa City. It numbered then about forty pupils.

The College for the Blind is under the management of a board of six trustees, chosen by the General Assembly. An appropriation of $8,000 per annum is made for its support and for current expenses, so much as is necessary, not to exceed $40 a quarter for each pupil. All blind persons, residents of the state, of suitable age and capacity, are entitled to an education in this institution at the expense of the state, and persons not residents can avail themselves of the benefits of the institution by paying to the treasurer the sum of forty dollars per quarter, in advance, provided that no such person shall be so received to the exclusion of any resident of the state.

Connected with the College, and under the same board of management, is an Industrial Home for such blind persons in the state as are dependent upon their own labor for their support. In this department a strict itemized business account is kept by the Superintendent with every person, and thus, in connection with self-support, rigid accountability and business habits are inculcated.

INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

Council Bluffs, Pottawattamie County.

The Iowa Institution for the Deaf and Dumb was established at Iowa City by an act of the General Assembly, approved January 24, 1855. The number of deaf mutes then in the state was 301; the number attending the institution 50. The first Board of Trustees was composed of the following persons: Honorable Samuel J. Kirkwood, Honorable E. Sells, W. Penn Clarke, J. P. Wood, H. D. Downey, William Crum, and W. E. Ijams, Principal. On the resignation of Mr. Ijams in 1862, the Board appointed in his stead Mr. Benjamin Talbot, for nine years a teacher in the Ohio Institution for the Deaf and Dumb. Mr. Talbot was ardently devoted to the interests of the institution and a faithful worker for the unfortunate class under his charge. In the report for 1867-8 he says: "Herewith is appended a catalogue of the pupils in attendance for the current two years, which are embraced in this report—Males, 60; females, 38; total, 98. I will here observe that not more than one third of the counties in the state are represented in the school at any one time; while our state census this year shows sixty-six counties, reporting deaf and dumb inhabitants in numbers varying from one to eighteen in a county. Of course many of these are either too old or too young to be at school; but, as shown by the census, there is an apparent indifference or ignorance on the part of parents and friends of deaf mutes as to the facilities furnished by the state for their education. Those connected with the institution would again urge that every friend of the unfortunate class would use all reasonable diligence to send these children to the school before they become too old to profit by its advantages. We appeal to the justice and generosity of the Legislature of Iowa to deal fairly and liberally with this unfortunate class of her citizens, confident that our claim is just, and trusting that it will receive due attention and be followed by proper action. In this trust we go forward in the duties assigned us here."

After a considerable effort to transfer the institution to Des Moines, the General Assembly in 1866 passed an act locating it permanently at Council Bluffs. In 1868 an appropriation of $2,000 was made for the repair of the rented building. Commissioners were appointed by the act of the General Assembly to locate a site for a new building and to superintend its erection. They selected ninety acres of land about two miles south of the City of Council Bluffs. The greater portion of the selection is rich and well-drained bottom land, but extending back and embracing a beautiful plat of table land for the location of the magnificent edifice which it was proposed to erect. The plan adopted for the building required it to be similar in structure to the Illinois Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Jacksonville, with a main frontage of 400 feet in length. The General Assembly appropriated $125,000 to begin the work of construction. The main building and one of the lateral wings were completed on the first of October, 1870, and immediately occupied by the school. The other lateral wing remains yet to be erected. The contract price of the main building and wing completed in 1870, was $300,000.

This institution is under the management of a board of trustees, elected every four years by the General Assembly. Every deaf and dumb child in the state of suitable age is entitled to an education in this institution at the state's expense; for which purpose the sum of $12,000 is annually appropriated.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOMES.

Davenport, Cedar Falls, Glenwood.

The movement which originated this institution was made by Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer during the late rebellion. This patriotic lady called a convention to meet at Muscatine, on the 7th of October, 1863, the object of which was to devise means for the support and education of the orphan children of Iowa soldiers. The interest in the subject was so great as to call forth a large representation from different parts of the state, and an association was formed, consisting of the following persons, under the name of the Iowa State Orphan Asylum; Caleb Baldwin, George G. Wright, R. P. Lowe, Samuel J. Kirkwood, William M. Stone, J. W. Cattell, N. H. Brainerd, C. C. Cole, Oran Faville, John R. Needham, S. S. Deming, Mrs. Hancock, Mrs. Newcomb, Isaac Pendleton, Mrs. Stephens, James G. Day, Mrs. Bagg, Mrs. Cadle, H. C. Henderson, Mrs. Andrews, Mrs. Crandall, Mrs. Darwin, E. H. Williams, J. B. Howell, Mrs. Shields, Mrs. Wittenmyer, Miss Mary Kibben, Miss E. M. Shelton, Elijah Sells, Dr. Horton, and C. Dunham.

By the articles of incorporation, any individual, or association numbering as many as ten persons, could become a member for life by paying the sum of twenty-five dollars, or a member for one year by paying five dollars.

The officers of the association were a President, six Vice Presidents—one from each Congressional District—a Treasurer, a Recording Secretary, a Corresponding Secretary, and a Board of Trustees, consisting of twelve persons—two from each Congressional District. The officers first elected were: President, William M. Stone; Vice Presidents, Mrs. G. G. Wright, Mrs. R. L. Cadle, Mrs. J. T. Hancock, John R. Needham, J. W. Cattell, Mrs. Mary M. Bagg; Recording Secretary, Miss Mary Kibben; Corresponding Secretary, Miss M. E. Shelton; Treasurer, N. H. Brainerd; Board of Trustees, Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, Mrs. C. B. Darwin, Mrs. D. T. Newcomb, Mrs. L. B. Stephens, O. Faville, E. H. Williams, T. S. Parvin, Mrs. Shields Caleb Baldwin, C. C. Cole, Isaac Pendleton, H. C. Henderson.

The Trustees held their first meeting in the Hall of Representatives, at Des Moines, February 14, 1864. Governor Stone presided. Committees were present from both branches of the Assembly, and were invited to participate. Governor Kirkwood presented a proposition that a home for disabled soldiers should be connected with the institution. Various plans for raising funds were discussed, and it was agreed that agents should be appointed in each county, with sub-agents in every town, who should solicit subscriptions. At the next meeting, held at Davenport in March, 1864, the Trustees, finding a considerable sum in the treasury, decided to make immediate arrangements for the reception of children. A committee was accordingly appointed, with instructions to lease a building, procure a steward, and solicit donations of furniture from Aid Societies. Other committees were appointed to secure the co-operation of the Masons, Odd Fellows, and other organizations of the state. Rev. P. P. Ingalls was appointed general agent, with instructions to visit every county in the state, and every regiment in the army, for the purpose of soliciting contributions. The committee appointed for the purpose, of which Mr. Howell, of Keokuk, was chairman, leased a large brick building in Lawrence, Van Buren County, and engaged Mr. Fuller, of Mount Pleasant, as Steward.

In June, 1864, the first annual meeting of the Association was held in Des Moines, and though only six months had elapsed since its first formation, its members were numerous. From one single county, Des Moines, six hundred and fifty dollars were handed in, claiming six memberships, and as many more were subscribed for but not paid. Mrs. C. B. Baldwin, Mrs. G. G. Wright, Mrs. Dr. Horton, Miss Mary E. Shelton, and Mr. George Sherman, were appointed a committee to furnish the building and take all necessary steps for opening the "Home." A committee was also appointed to frame rules for the government of the "Home," and report the same at the next meeting of the Board. Notice was given that at the next meeting of the Association a motion would be made to change the name of the Institution to Iowa Orphan's Home.

The Executive Committee, in accordance with instructions, proceeded with the work of preparation, and on the 13th of July, 1864, announced that inmates would be received. In three weeks twenty-one were admitted, and the number constantly increased, so that in a little more than six months from the time of opening, there were seventy children admitted, and twenty more applications which the Committee had not acted upon—all orphans of soldiers.

The Board, at a subsequent meeting, adopted the rules reported by the committee, and elected officers of the institution. Miss M. Elliott, of Washington, was chosen Matron. She resigned in February, 1865, and Mrs. E. G. Platt, of Fremont County, was chosen in her place.

The institution was supported by voluntary contributions, till it was assumed by the state in 1866. The act of the General Assembly provided for several such Homes in different counties, and in accordance with its provisions they have been established in Scott County at Davenport, in Black Hawk County at Cedar Falls, and in Mills County at Glenwood. (For further particulars respecting these institutions, see histories of the above counties.)

The Board of Trustees elected by the General Assembly to have the oversight and management of the Soldiers' Orphans' Homes of the state, consists of one person from each county in which such home is located, and one for the state at large, who hold their office two years, or until their successors are elected and qualified. An appropriation of ten dollars per month for each orphan actually supported is made by the General Assembly.

REFORM SCHOOL.

Eldora, Hardin County.

The act of the General Assembly establishing this school was approved March 31, 1868. On the 28th of April following, the Trustees held their first meeting. The contract for the erection of the building was let to Clark & Haddock September 21, 1868. On the 7th of October, 1868, was received from Jasper County the first boy, as an inmate of the institution.

The Board of Trustees consists of five persons, elected by the General Assembly, who receive mileage, but no compensation for their services.

The object of this school is the reformation of such boys and girls, not over the age of eighteen, as may be committed to its care. To this end the state makes the following provision: The Trustees shall cause the boys and girls under their charge to be instructed in piety and morality, and in such branches of useful knowledge as are adapted to their age and capacity, and in some regular course of labor, either mechanical, manufacturing, or agricultural, as is best suited to their age, strength, disposition and capacity, and as may seem best adapted to secure the reformation and future benefit of the boys and girls.

The Trustees shall visit and examine the school and inspect the exercises and progress made both in their labor and studies, and the register and accounts of the superintendent. With the consent of parents or guardians, they may bind out any of the boys or girls to suitable persons who desire their services, till they attain their majority, or for a shorter period.

Any boy or girl committed to the State Reform School shall be there kept, disciplined, instructed, employed, and governed, under the direction of the Trustees until he or she arrives at the age of majority, or is bound out, reformed, or legally discharged. The binding out or discharge of a boy or girl as reformed, or having arrived at the age of majority, shall be a complete release from all penalties incurred by conviction of the offense for which he or she was committed.

THE STATE LIBRARY.

In the Capitol Building, Des Moines.

The number of books and pamphlets now in the State Library is 12,004, exclusive of duplicates, of which there are about 4,000. The increase since the last previous report of the librarian has been 2,075 volumes, of which 792 have been received by purchase, 1,046 by exchange, and 237 by donation.

At the time of the appointment of the present librarian, Mrs. Ada North, the library did not possess a complete set of the laws and legislative papers of the state. Those, missing, with one exception, have been obtained, either by gift or purchase, and the library contains now, excepting only the Council Journal of 1840-41, full sets of the Iowa laws, journals and documents, in good bindings. Several of the very scarce territorial laws have been generously donated by Honorable David Rorer, from his private collection, and Professor Parvin has supplied a number of the House and Council Journals.

Additional cases of shelving have been placed in the library, and are already filled to overflowing.

The Trustees of the State Library have instructed the librarian to call the attention of the General Assembly to the fact that the library, with its valuable collection of books and documents, is wholly uninsured, with the recommendation that it receive the proper attention in that regard.

By Chapter 104, Laws of 1872, the State Library has received 236 copies of each law report published since the enactment, the proceeds of which are devoted to the purchase of law books. Of these about 500 copies have been exchanged for law books, to the number of 382 volumes.

The Board of Trustees of the State Library consists of the Governor, Judges of the Supreme Court, the Secretary of State and Superintendent of Public Instruction, of which the Governor is President. The sum of one thousand dollars per annum is appropriated by the General Assembly for the purchase of books for the library.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The grants of public lands for different purposes made in the state are the following:

1st.—The 500,000 Acre Grant.
2d.—The 16th Section Grant.
3d.—The Mortgage School Lands.
4th.—The University Grant.
5th.—The Saline Grant.
6th.—The Des Moines River Grant.
7th.—The Des Moines River School Lands.
8th.—The Swamp Land Grant.
9th.—The Railroad Grant.
10th.—The Agricultural College Grant.

1ST.—THE 500,000 ACRE GRANT.

The state, upon her admission into the Union, became entitled to 500,000 acres of land by virtue of an act of Congress approved September 4th, 1841. This act grants to each state therein specified 500,000 acres of the public lands, for the purposes of internal improvements; and also to each state subsequently admitted into the Union, so much land as shall, together with what may have been granted to her while a territory, for such purposes, make the amount of 500,000 acres, all to be selected within the limits of the state.

The constitution of the state provides that these lands, together with all the lands that have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated by Congress for the benefit of schools, shall be and remain a perpetual fund for the support of schools throughout the state. The Permanent Common School Fund of the state is made up of the proceeds of this grant, together with the sixteenth sections, the five per cent. fund, and the estates that escheat for the want of heirs.

By an act of the General Assembly, approved January 15, 1849, School Fund Commissioners were appointed, whose duty it was to select the school lands and have the care and sale of the same for the benefit of the School Fund. Up to 1855, the School Fund Commissioners acted under the supervision of the Superintendent of Public Instruction; but on the 15th of January of that year an act was passed by the General Assembly conferring on the Commissioners exclusive authority in the sale of all the school lands. By an act of the General Assembly, approved March 23, 1858, the office of School Fund Commissioner was abolished, that officer in each county being required to turn over all papers and make full settlement with the county judge. This latter officer and the township trustees were, by the same act, made agents of the state to control and sell the sixteenth sections; but no further provision was made for the control and sale of the 500,000 acre grant till April 3d, 1860, at which time the General Assembly transferred the entire management of the school lands to the board of supervisors of the several counties. Up to 1865 the following lands had been selected in the several counties indicated, and the number of acres specified in the first column patented. The other columns show the amount unpatented and the whole amount in each county:

2D—THE SIXTEENTH SECTIONS.

By virtue of the act of Congress admitting Iowa into the Union, and an act of the General Assembly, approved January 15, 1849, there was granted to the state the sixteenth section in every township, and where that section had been sold or otherwise disposed of, other lands of like amount in lieu thereof, for the use of schools. The proceeds of the sale of these lands are made by the constitution a part of the permanent school fund of the state. The General Assembly provided for the sale of these lands by placing them under the control of the school fund commissioners of the several counties till the 23d of March, 1858, when they were placed in the hands of the county judge, in connection with the township trustees, and on the first Monday in January, 1861, were finally transferred to the care and management of the board of supervisors. March 24, 1864, an act was passed by the General Assembly requiring the clerks of the board of supervisors to report to the State Land Office on the first of May, 1864, the amounts of these lands in their respective counties, with the description, allotments and valuation thereof, so far as allotted or appraised, and designating the sold from the unsold land. It also required them to report on the first of November, 1864, and every six months thereafter, all sales, allotments and appraisements made after the first of May, 1864.

From the reports received to November 1, 1865, and information already in his possession, the Register of the State Land Office, at Des Moines, prepared the following statement:

3D—THE MORTGAGE SCHOOL LANDS.

The lands mortgaged to the school fund do not belong to any of the grants, and become school lands under the act of the General Assembly of 1862, by being bid off by the state. The law requires that when any person desires to borrow money from the permanent school fund, he shall secure the payment of the same, together with interest thereon at ten per cent. per annum, by promissory notes endorsed by two good sureties and by mortgage on unincumbered real estate, which, exclusive of any buildings, is appraised by three appraisers and situated in the county where the loan is made. The loans are made and the security taken by the county auditor, who is required to report to the board of supervisors at each meeting of the same, for their examination, all notes, mortgages and abstracts of title connected with the school fund.

In case the persons holding lands so contracted or mortgaged, shall neglect to pay the sums due thereon, or make an arrangement for an extension of time as the law provides, the board of supervisors may cause suit to be brought and prosecuted with the utmost dilligence to secure said fund, and in any action in favor of the county for the use of the school fund, an injunction may issue without bonds, and in any such action, where service is made by publication, default and judgment may be entered and enforced without the bond required of individuals. In case of sales of lands on execution founded on any such mortgage or contract, the attorney for the board of supervisors, or other person authorized by the board, shall bid on behalf of the state or county for the use of said fund such sum as the interests of said fund may require, and if struck off to the state, the same shall be held and disposed of in all respects the same as the other lands belonging to said fund, except that all such contracts, notes and mortgages, shall be made payable to the county controlling them, and shall not be invalid because made payable to any other payee.

Lands bid off by the state in the respective counties under this law are known as the Mortgage School Lands. Reports of them, including description and amount, are required to be made to the State Land Office. We have not been furnished with a complete summary up to the present date, but the following statement made by the Register of the Land Office at Des Moines, will show the number of acres and town lots reported in the several counties, and such as had been patented to the state prior to 1865:

Since the first day of January, 1874, the boards of supervisors of the several counties have had the sole management and control of the loans of the school fund on notes and mortgages. Since that date also loans have been transferable to other counties in cases where a thousand dollars can not be loaned in the county according to law.

4TH—UNIVERSITY LANDS.

By act of Congress, July 20, 1840, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to set apart and reserve from sale out of any of the public lands within the Territory of Iowa to which the Indian title had been extinguished, and not otherwise appropriated, a quantity of land not exceeding two entire townships, for the use and support of a university within said territory when it should become a state. This land was to be located in tracts of not less than an entire section, and could be used for no other purpose than that designated in the grant. In an act supplemental to that for the admission of Iowa, March 3, 1845, the grant was renewed, and it was provided that the lands should be used "solely for the purposes of such university, in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe."

Under this grant there were set apart and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use of the state, the following lands:

5TH.—SALINE LANDS.

The right of the state to the use of the salt springs within her limits, not exceeding twelve in number, was granted by an act of Congress supplemental to the act of admission into the Union, approved March 3, 1845; and by a subsequent act, approved May 27, 1852, the United States relinquished and granted these springs to the state in fee-simple, together with six sections of land contiguous to each, to be disposed of, and the proceeds applied as the Legislature might direct. The Legislature directed as follows:

1. "An act in relation to the salt springs granted to the state," approved February 24, 1847, directing the method of selection.

2. "An act to dispose of the saline lands belonging to the state, and to appropriate the proceeds thereof," passed February 5, 1861. The second section of this act provides that the sales of these lands shall be made by the same officer as though the lands formed a portion of those set apart for the improvement of the Des Moines River. That officer was the Register of the Des Moines Improvement. The third and fourth sections provide for pre-emptions, and the fifth provides that the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund for founding and supporting a lunatic asylum. (Acts 1851, p. 227.) Under this act no sales were made.

3. "An Act to dispose of the Saline lands," approved January 23, 1853. This act provides that these lands shall be sold by the same officer and under the same regulations as though they formed a part of the school lands of the state, and provides also for paying over to the State Treasurer the money arising from such sales. (Acts 1853, p. 126.)

4. "An Act to amend Chapter sixty-five, of the Code of Iowa, and to provide for the sale of the Saline, School and University lands," passed January 25, 1855. By this act it is made the duty of the persons in charge of Saline, School, or University lands, to offer and sell the same as therein prescribed. It requires the Trustees of the State University to select a treasurer, and provides for tranferring to such treasurer all moneys, books, notes and other papers in the hands of the State Treasurer, belonging to the University or Saline funds. (Acts 1855, p. 136.)

5. "An Act for a further appropriation for the State Insane Asylum," approved July 14, 1856. By this act the proceeds of these lands are again appropriated to the Insane Asylum. (Acts extra session, 1856, p. 90.)

6. "An Act to repeal Section 2 of An Act for a further appropriation for the State Insane Asylum, approved July 14, 1856." Approved March 23, 1858. This act repeals that part of the act of 14th July, 1856, which appropriated the proceeds of Saline lands to the Insane Asylum. (Acts 1858, p. 263.)

7. "An Act to authorize the County Judge and County Treasurer to sell the Saline lands," passed March 26, 1860. This act confers on the judge and treasurer of the county, all the powers, in relation to the Saline lands, that were by the act of January 25, 1855, vested in the School Fund Commissioner. (Rev. 1860, p. 345.)

8. "An Act appropriating the Saline lands and funds to the State University of Iowa," passed April 2, 1860. This act makes the Saline lands and funds a part of the permanent fund of the State University, and requires the proceeds of the lands to be paid over to the treasurer of that institution. (Rev. 1860, p. 346.)

9. "An Act for extending the time for claimants to prove up and purchase certain Saline lands," which became a law without approval, March 31, 1862.

This act is amendatory of the act of March 26, 1860, and extends the time for proving up and purchasing certain specified tracts, but in all respects, except as to time, according to the provisions of said act of March 26, 1860. Such was, in brief, the substance of the state legislation upon this subject prior to the meeting of the General Assembly in 1864.

In consequence of the difficulties in the administration of this grant, and the embarrassments, both to the State Land Office and the State University, resulting from these imperfect and conflicting statutes, the General Assembly in 1864 passed the act entitled "An Act authorizing the Trustees of the State University to sell the Saline lands, and for other purposes," approved March 25, 1864.

That act places these lands, with the proceeds of the same, and all notes, contracts, and other securities therefor, under the control of the Board of Trustees of the State University. It authorizes said Board to sell the lands and make certificates of final payment, on which patents shall be issued, and legalizes patents previously issued on certificates of the Treasurer of said University, and the clerk of Lucas County. (Acts 1864, p. 84.)

The amount of lands thus placed at the disposal of the trustees for the benefit of said University is 46,101.53 acres, which added to the lands donated and certified under the University grant, make 92,030.37 acres dedicated to the support of that institution.

The following table exhibits the counties in which these lands lie, with the number of patents issued, the amount patented, amount unpatented, and total amount in each:

6TH—THE DES MOINES RIVER GRANT.

The act of Congress making this grant, approved August 8, 1846, is in the words following:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is, granted to said Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding said territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork (so called) in said territory, one equal moiety, in alternate sections, of the public lands (remaining unsold and not otherwise disposed of, incumbered or appropriated), in a strip five miles in width on each side of said river, to be selected within said territory by an agent or agents to be appointed by the Governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted shall not be conveyed or disposed of by said territory, nor by any state to be formed out of the same, except as said improvement shall progress; that is, the said territory or state may sell so much of said lands as shall produce the sum of thirty thousand dollars, and then the sales shall cease until the Governor of said territory or state shall certify the fact to the President of the United States that one half of said sum has been expended upon said improvements, when the said territory or state may sell and convey a quantity of the residue of said lands sufficient to replace the amount expended, and thus the sales shall progress as the proceeds thereof shall be expended, and the fact of such expenditure shall be certified as aforesaid.

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said River Des Moines shall be and forever remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from any toll or other charge whatever, for any property of the United States or persons in their service passing through or along the same: Provided, always, That it shall not be competent for the said territory or future state of Iowa to dispose of said lands, or any of them, at a price lower than, for the time being, shall be the minimum price of other public lands.

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Territory of Iowa shall be admitted into the Union as a state, the lands hereby granted for the above purpose shall be and become the property of said state for the purpose contemplated in this act, and for no other: Provided the Legislature of the State of Iowa shall accept the said grant for the said purpose." Approved Aug. 8, 1846.

The State of Iowa, by joint resolution of the General Assembly, approved January 9, 1847, did accept the grant for the purposes specified in the above act of Congress.

By an act entitled "an act creating the Board of Public Works, and providing for the improvement of the Des Moines River," approved February 23, 1847, the General Assembly gave the control of the work to a Board, consisting of a president, secretary and treasurer, to be elected by the qualified electors of the state, defined the nature of the improvement, and provided that the work should be paid for out of the funds to be derived from the sales of the lands, which the Board was authorized to sell, under the regulations adopted for the sale of United States lands. This Board was elected August 2, 1847, and was fully organized September 22, 1847.

Agents were appointed by the Governor of the state, who selected the sections designated by "odd numbers," throughout the whole extent of the grant. The selections thus made included all of the sections of the public lands designated by odd numbers (then remaining unsold, and not otherwise disposed of, incumbered or appropriated), lying and being in said Territory or State of Iowa, within a strip of five miles in width on each side of said River Des Moines, from its mouth to its source. The selection by "odd numbers" was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

February 23, 1848, Richard M. Young, Commissioner of the General Land Office, construed the grant to mean that "the state is entitled to the alternate sections within five miles of the Des Moines River, throughout the whole extent of that river within the limits of Iowa."

On the 19th of June, 1848, some of the lands above the Raccoon Forks, which would belong to the state according to the above decision, were ordered into market by proclamation, and on the 18th of September a remonstrance was filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office against such sale, by the Board of Public Works. The Board also sent in a protest to the State Land Office, at which the sale was ordered to take place. On the 8th of January, 1849, the Iowa Senators and Representatives in Congress also protested against the sale, in a communication to Hon. Robert J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury, to which the Secretary replied, concurring in the opinion that the grant extended the whole length of the Des Moines River in Iowa.

On the first of June, 1849, the Commissioner of the General Land Office directed the Register and Receiver of the Land Office at Iowa City, "to withhold from sale all lands situated in the odd numbered sections within five miles on each side of the Des Moines River above the Raccoon Forks," and "inclosed a diagram upon which the State selections above that point were colored yellow." The diagram extended to 83 N. 26 W. as far as the surveys had then progressed in that direction.

On the 19th December, 1849, the Commissioner of the General Land Office wrote the Board of Public Works, in answer to its request "for lists of lands of the Des Moines River grant above the Raccoon Forks," saying "that the lists had not been furnished, for the reason that the posting of the land warrants in the Iowa City District was not completed in his office until recently," and adds, "the list is now in course of preparation, and will be ready for transmission at an early day."

On the 13th March, 1850, the Commissioner of the General Land Office submitted to the Secretary of the Interior three lists of land, the first of which had the following heading:

"No. 1.—Showing the tracts falling within the limits of the Des Moines River grant, above the Raccoon Forks, etc., under the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury, of March 2d, 1849."

On the 6th April, 1850, the Secretary of the Interior (Mr. Ewing), in a communication to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, reversed the decision of Secretary Walker, of March 2d, 1849, but directed the withholding the lands from sale until an explanatory act could be passed by Congress.

The authorities of Iowa protested against this decision of Mr. Ewing, and appealed therefrom to the President. He referred the matter to the Attorney General (Mr. Johnson), who, on the 19th July, 1850, made his report, giving it fully as his opinion that by the terms of the grant itself it extended along the Des Moines River to its very source.

Previous to the publication of this opinion, President Taylor died, and a new Cabinet was formed before any further action was taken in the matter. The question was submitted to the Attorney General (Mr. Crittenden), who on the 30th June, 1851, decided that in his opinion the grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork. The Secretary of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), at first concurred in this opinion, but afterwards consented to bring the whole matter before the President and Cabinet, who made a decision favorable to the claim of the state.

On the 29th of October, 1851, Mr. Stewart directed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to "submit for his approval such lists as had been prepared, and to proceed to report for like approval lists of the alternate sections claimed by the State of Iowa above the Raccoon Forks, as far as the surveys have progressed, or may hereafter be completed and returned." On the following day three lists of lands were prepared in the General Land Office, as follows:

"List No. 1, showing the tracts falling within the limits of the Des Moines River grant above the Raccoon Fork, as far as the surveys had extended, under the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury of March 2, 1849, that such grant extended to the north boundary of the state.

"List No. 2, showing tracts disposed of within those limits in the intervals between the date of one of the previous orders limiting the grant, and of those extending it above the fork.

"List No. 3, showing the lands vacant and subject to the claim of the state."

The third of these lists was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval, and received it October 30, 1851.

The lands approved and certified to the state of Iowa under this grant and all lying above the Raccoon Fork, are as follows:

By Secretary Stewart, Oct. 30, 1851	81,707.93 acres.
March 10, 1852	143,908.37 "
By Secretary McClellan, Dec. 17, 1853	33,142.43 "
Dec. 30, 1853	12,813 51 "
Total	271,572.24 acres.

The list, which was approved by the Secretary of the Interior on the 17th of December, 1853, was headed as follows: "A list showing the vacant lands in the odd-numbered sections above the Raccoon Fork and within five miles of the Des Moines River, so far as the surveys have progressed, falling to the state of Iowa under the act of the 8th of August, 1846, as construed by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter of the 2d of March, 1849, and of the Secretary of the Interior of the 29th of October, 1851, which have not been heretofore approved."

The Commissioner and Register of the Des Moines River Improvement in their report to the Governor, November 30, 1852, estimate the lands of the Des Moines River grant, including those then in possession of the state and those to be surveyed and approved, at nearly a million acres as available for the future prosecution of the work of improvement. They state the indebtedness then existing against the Des Moines River Fund to be about $108,000, and estimate the work to be done to amount to $1,200,000. The General Assembly, January 19, 1853, authorized the Commissioners to sell all or any of the lands which have been, or may hereafter be, granted for not less than $1,300,000.

On the 24th of January, 1853, the General Assembly provided for the election of a Commissioner by the people, and appointed two Assistant Commissioners with authority to make a contract selling the lands of the Improvement for $1,300,000. Accordingly, June 9, 1849, the Commissioner and Assistants made a contract with the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, agreeing to sell all the lands donated to the state by act of Congress of August 8th, 1846, which the state had not sold prior to December 23d, 1853, for $1,300,000, to be expended on the improvement of the river, and in paying the indebtedness then due. This contract was duly reported to the Governor and General Assembly, and may be found in the Appendix to the House Journal, 1855.

By act approved January 25, 1855, the General Assembly authorized the Commissioner and Register of the Des Moines River Improvement to negotiate with the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company for the purchase of lands in Webster County which had been sold by the School Fund Commissioner as school lands, but which had been certified to the state as Des Moines River lands, and had become the property of the Company, under the provisions of its contract with the state.

On the 21st of March, 1856, the Commissioner of the General Land Office decided that the Des Moines River grant was limited to the Raccoon Fork. The matter was then brought anew before the Secretary of the Interior, and was by him referred to the Attorney General, who decided in favor of the claim of the state to the Des Moines River lands to its northern boundary. All claim to lands along the river in Minnesota was relinquished. The land which had been certified, as well as those extending to the northern boundary within the limits of the grant, were reserved from pre-emption and sale by the General Land Officer, for the purpose of satisfying the grant of August 8th, 1846, and were considered as having passed to the state. The state proceeded from time to time to sell and dispose of them, prior to the final transfer of them to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company on the 9th of June, 1854, applying the proceeds to the improvement of the river, according to the provisions of the donating act. In this way the state paid the United States for the lands. Up to June 9th, 1854, the state had sold about 327,000 acres, of which amount 58,830 acres were located above the Raccoon Fork. The last certificate of the General Land Office bears date December 30, 1853.

Subsequent to June 9th, 1854, the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company carried on the work under their contract with the state. As the improvement progressed, the state, from time to time, by its authorized officers, issued to the Company, in payment for said work, certificates for lands. These certificates were in the usual form of certificates issued for entries of public lands. The first one, dated May 14, 1855, certified 88,853.10 acres. The second, dated May 6, 1856, certified 116,636.54 acres. Together, 205,489.64 acres, and all located above the Raccoon Fork, excepting about 50,000 acres.

The General Land Office having ceased to certify lands under the act of August 8th, 1846, and there being no other provision for paying for the improvement, and matters of disagreement and misunderstanding having arisen between the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and the state, the General Assembly, for the purpose of making a final settlement with said company, passed a joint resolution on the 22d March, 1858 making a proposition to the Company, which was accepted and ratified on the conditions therein named. The Company paid to the state $20,000 in cash, and released and conveyed the dredge boat and materials named in the resolution; and the state, on the 3d of May, 1858, executed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company fourteen deeds or patents to the lands, amounting to 256,703.64 acres. These deeds were intended to convey all the lands of this grant certified to the state by the General Government not previously sold; but, as if for the purpose of covering any tract or parcel that might have been omitted, the state made another deed of conveyance on the 18th day of May, 1858. These fifteen deeds, it is claimed by the Company, convey 266,108 acres, of which about 53,367 are below the Raccoon Fork, and the balance, 212,741 acres, are above that point.

In addition to the 212,741 acres thus deeded to the Company, the state has sold and deeded to individual purchasers above the Raccoon Fork 58,830 acres, making in all deeded above said fork 271,571 acres, all of which had been certified and approved to the state by the General Government as Des Moines River lands. The General Assembly donated the remainder of this grant to the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad Company, by an act approved March 22, 1858, on condition that the Company should assume all liabilities growing out of the operations of the state in the Des Moines River improvement, and reserve to the state 50,000 acres of the land in security for the payment thereof and the completion of the locks and dams at Croton, Plymouth, Bentonsport and Keosauqua. For every three thousand dollars worth of work done on the locks and dams, and for every three thousand dollars paid by the Company on the liabilities, the Register of the State Land Office was to certify to said Company one thousand acres from said 50,000 acres of land. Up to 1865 there had been presented and allowed by the Company, under this act, claims and liabilities amounting in the aggregate to $109,579.37, about three-fourths of which had been settled.

At the December term of the Supreme Court of the United States, held in 1859 and '60, a decision was made as to the limit of the Des Moines River grant. This decision limits the grant to the Raccoon Fork, and declares all certificates of land above the fork as issued without authority of law and void. (See 23 How. 66.)

On the 3d of March, 1861, Congress passed the following joint resolution:

"Resolved, That all the title which the United States still retains in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River, and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said state improperly by the Department of the Interior, as part of the grant, by act of Congress, approved August 8th, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is, hereby relinquished to the State of Iowa.

By act of Congress, in response to the above, approved July 12, 1862, it is enacted "That the grant of lands to the then Territory of Iowa, for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the act of August 8th, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within five miles of said river, between the Raccoon Fork and the northern boundary of said state; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 22d, 1858. And if any of said lands shall have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States before the passage of this act, excepting those released by the United States to the grantees of the State of Iowa under joint resolution of March 3d, 1861, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to set apart an equal amount of lands within said state to be certified in lieu thereof; Provided, That if the state shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant, the title of which has proved invalid, any lands which shall be certified to said state in lieu thereof by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall inure to, and be held as a trust fund for the benefit of the person or persons respectively whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid."

On the 11th September, 1862, extra session, the General Assembly by joint resolution accepted the grant of lands donated by the above act of Congress.

On the same day the General Assembly authorized the Governor to appoint one or more Commissioners to select the lands embraced in the above grant—the Commissioners to report their selections to the Register of the State Land Office, and directing that the lands be held for the purposes of the grant, and in nowise to dispose of the same until future legislation is had. —(Acts Ex. Scs. 1862, p. 48.)

The Governor appointed D. W. Kilbourne, of Lee County, Commissioner to make the selections, and the General Land Office, on the 25th of April 1864, issued scrip authorizing the selection of 300,000 acres from the vacant public lands as part of the grant of July 12, 1862. Said Commissioner has made the selections as authorized, in the Fort Dodge and Sioux City Land Districts, and has furnished the State Land Office with a list of the lands selected.

These lands are held in trust by the state for the following purposes:

1. For the benefit of any person or persons to whom the state has sold lands within the limits of the Des Moines River grant, and whose title has failed, or may yet fail.

2. For reimbursing the state for all moneys advanced, and interest thereon, from the general revenue, to pay claims against the Des Moines River Fund, and all claims audited or assumed by the state, but not paid, against said fund, and which are on file in the State Land Office.

3. For paying the liabilities against the Des Moines River Fund, arising out of the contracts for the completion of the works on the Des Moines River Improvement, as provided by acts of the General Assembly of March 22, 1858, and March 3, 1860.

4. For the purpose of aiding in the completion of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad.

Many difficulties and conflicts as to claims and titles have grown out of these lands, which it has been the purpose of the General Assembly to adjust by appropriate legislation, and to protect the integrity of titles derived from her, particularly those held by actual settlers who had paid their money, received patents for portions of these lands, and made improvements upon them, prior to the passage of the railroad grant.

7TH—DES MOINES RIVER SCHOOL LANDS.

These lands include 28,378.46 acres selected by the agent of the state in Webster County, under the 500,000 acre grant made by act of Congress September 4, 1841. These selections were approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office February 20, 1851. On the 6th of June, 1853, the Superintendent of Public Instruction ordered these lands into market, and authorized John Tolman, School Fund Commissioner for Webster County, to sell the same as school lands, as provided by the law then in force for the disposition of the lands of the 500,000 acre grant.

Afterwards, when the construction of the act of 1846 was changed by the executive officers of the General Government, and it was held that the Des Moines River grant extended above the forks of the Raccoon, it was concluded that these lands, so far as they were in odd sections, and within five miles of the Des Moines River, were appropriated by that act. Of the lands thus in odd sections and falling within the limits, there were 12,813.51 acres set apart and approved to the state by the Secretary of the Interior, December 30, 1853, as a part of the Des Moines River grant, under the act of the 8th of August, 1846.

On the 6th of January, 1845, the Commissioner of the General Land Office transmitted to the Superintendent of Public Instruction a certified copy of the list of these lands, with the Secretary of the Interior's approval indorsed thereon.

Previous to the notice of this action by the department, John Tolman had sold 3,194.28 acres of these as school lands to individual purchasers.

For the relief of these purchasers, the General Assembly passed an act, which was approved on the 2d of April, 1860, providing that, upon application therefor, and the proper showing, any purchaser of such land shall be entitled to draw from the state treasury, upon the warrant of the Auditor, the amount of money paid, principal and interest, on the contract for the purchase of said land with said School Fund Commissioner, with interest thereon from the time it was paid, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum.

Under this act five applications were made for relief prior to the session of the General Assembly in 1864. The applicants received their warrants from the State Auditor, amounting to the aggregate sum of $949.53.

To further protect the purchasers, the General Assembly passed an act, approved April 7, 1862, forbidding the issuing to the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company, by the Governor, any certificate of the completion of any part of said road, or any conveyance of lands, till they should execute and file in the land office of the state a release, 1st, to certain swamp lands; 2d, to these Des Moines River lands sold by Tolman; and 3d, to certain other river lands. The act provides that "the said company shall transfer their interest in those tracts of land in Webster and Hamilton Counties, heretofore sold by John Tolman, School Fund Commissioner, to the Register of the State Land Office, in trust, to enable said Register to carry out and perform said contracts in all cases where he is called upon by the parties interested to do so before the first day of January, A.D. 1864."

On the 27th of February, 1864, the company filed in the land office their release to these Tolman lands, protesting at the same time that they had no claim whatever on them, and never had pretended or sought to claim them. Being doubtful of his authority to issue patents to the Tolman purchasers, the Register of the Land Office applied to the Attorney General of the State for his opinion, which was given on the 3d of August, 1864, deciding that patents might legally be issued in all cases where contracts had been made prior to December 23, 1853, and remained uncanceled under the act of 1860. The parties desiring patents were notified of the decision by the Register of the Land Office; but before they were issued, namely, on the 27th of August, 1864, a suit in chancery was commenced in the District Court of Polk County, by the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, to enjoin the issuing of said patents. On the 30th of the same month, an ex parte injunction was issued, in pursuance of an order of allowance by the Judge of the Supreme Court. Mr. J. A. Harvey, Register of the Land Office, in January, 1865, filed with the Court an elaborate answer to the petition of the plaintiff, denying entirely the Company's right or title to the lands. Another answer, still more exhaustive, was made by his successor in office, Hon. C. C. Carpenter, on the 10th of February, 1868, which induced the plaintiff, on the 20th of that month, to file an amended petition. The District Court, on the 3d of August, 1868, dissolved the injunction, when it was appealed to the Supreme Court of the state, and in December, 1869, the decision of the lower court was affirmed by Chief Justice Dillon.

8TH—SWAMP LAND GRANT.

By an act of Congress approved March 28, 1850, the United States, to enable the State of Arkansas, and other states, to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits, granted to the several states the whole of the swamp and overflowed lands therein, made thereby unfit for cultivation, which should remain unsold at the date of the passage of the act. The total amount of swamp lands claimed by the State of Iowa under this act does not exceed 4,000,000 of acres, while Michigan received 9,000,000, and in other states the proportion is equally large. The Register of the State Land Office, in an elaborate report made to the Governor in 1865, makes the following remarks:

"Notwithstanding that Iowa has expended enormous sums of money in making the selections, procuring proof, etc., and done all in her power to hasten a final and favorable settlement of the grant, it seems to be the special design of the Department at Washington to thwart her efforts; and by decisions inimical to the grant itself, and by every pretext to delay its administration, and to curtail the advantages the state is entitled to receive therefrom.

If this policy of the Department can not be changed, the state had better give up a large share of her claims under this grant, and avoid any further expense and trouble in reference thereto.

I would suggest that you recommend the General Assembly to call the attention of our delegates in Congress to this matter, and by joint resolution to urge them to procure a change of this policy, and, if necessary, to procure the passage of an act protecting the interest of the state, and securing to her indemnity for all swamp lands sold by the Government since September 28, 1850.

It was through the efforts of our members of Congress, in response to the memorial of the Legislature of July 12, 1856, and joint resolution of Dec. 18, 1856, that the act of the 3d of March, 1857, was passed, and the state was saved from the fatal results following the then ruinous policy of the Department, in permitting contests before the Land Office as to the character of land already selected and returned as swamp land. A similar early and earnest effort may now prove of incalculable advantage to the state.

Early in the administration of this grant, the Department seemed to receive the impression that Iowa was acting in bad faith; that she had selected a large amount of dry lands, and that, as if conscious of being in the wrong, and wishing to avoid difficulty with the General Government, she had transferred her interest to the counties, and the counties to private speculators and land sharks, who, by means of this grant, are endeavoring to perpetrate a gigantic fraud upon the General Government. I say such seems to have been and still to be the impression at the Department at Washington; and to its prevalence, in a great degree, if not altogether, may be attributed the difficulty we there meet with.

I do not claim that all the lands selected are swamp within the meaning of the grant, but I do say that neither the state nor the counties (except possibly in one or two instances), designed any fraud upon the Government, and that the dry land selected is not sufficient in quantity to warrant the imputation of unfairness on the part of the state.

Many of these lands were selected in 1854 and 1855, immediately after several successive and remarkably wet seasons, and it was but a natural consequence then to select some which would not appear as swampy after a few of the succeeding dry seasons.

It is easy to account for the dry land (if any there be) in the later selections, consistent with good faith, except perhaps in one or two counties, and of the truth of the charges of fraud as to those, this office is not advised.

Some time after the first selections were made, numerous applications were made to the local land offices by persons desiring to enter parcels of the swamp lands, and offering to prove that they were not swamp lands. In such cases the General Land Office ordered a trial to be had before the local land officers, and if they should decide the land to be dry, the applicant was permitted to enter it, and the claim of the state was to be rejected.

Under this ruling, land claimed as dry, in many instances, came fully within the grant. In some cases, at least, it was claimed and proved to be dry and tillable, whereas the applicant and his witnesses had rafted, and seen others raft, saw logs off and across it during the high stages of water in the neighboring river, for seasons in succession!

In fact, an enterprise was set on foot by some speculators, to wrest from the counties a large amount of the swamp lands in the western part of the state. Affidavits were bought. Irresponsible and reckless men were found, who, for a few dollars for each affidavit, would testify to the character of land that they never saw. Applications multiplied here and elsewhere until they reached, as stated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, 3,000,000 acres, when the General Assembly, seeing the effect of the course pursued, called the attention of Congress to the matter, by the memorial and resolution above referred to, and urged the passage of an act confirming to the state all the lands selected as swamp land. The act of Congress of March 3, 1857, was intended as a full and complete confirmation of all the selections, as claimed by the state under the act of September 28, 1850, and March 2, 1855, and designed to secure, without further difficulty, the patenting to the state of the same. Such as the General Government had already parted with her title to, and such as were interfered with by actual settlement, were excepted. The first exception was intended for those swamp lands disposed of by the General Government since the 28th September, 1850, and which were provided for in the act of March 2, 1855. It was right that this class of land should be excluded. It was already sold by the United States, and the title confirmed. It was otherwise appropriated, and not vacant, and the state was to take the indemnity provided. The other exception was designed to protect persons having the right of pre-emption by settlement upon the public lands. But the Commissioner of the General Land Office holds that it is only a qualified confirmation of the selections. And by this qualification it is sought to sustain the action of the Department in rejecting the claim of the state to a large amount of these lands as swamp, and certifying them, under the act of 15th May, 1856. This brings me to the conflict between the Swamp and Railroad grants.

The Railroad Companies claim, under the act of May 15, 1856, all swamp lands in odd numbered sections within the limits of their several roads, and seem to tender several issues:

1st. They plant themselves on the first or original construction of the grant of September 28, 1850; and insist that no title vests in the state to the swamp lands till she receives patents therefor. Hence, if they can secure (as they have done) a rejection by the department of the claim of the state under the swamp grant, and the recognition and approval of the lands under the railroad grant, they claim their title is secure.

2d. Provided they fail on the first issue, they claim the right to contest the swampy character of the lands; and, having procured the approval under the act of 1856, they thus throw the burden of proof upon the state, expecting to hold all that is not shown affirmatively to be swamp lands.

3d. They claim that their right to these lands had attached prior to the act of the 3d March, 1857, and is not affected by it; and further, that their rights are protected by the exception contained in that act.

We have already seen that the construction given to the grant of 1850 by the General Government since December, 1851, is that it was a present grant, and that no patent is necessary to convey the title. The patent is but the evidence of title, and therefore if a state is in such a situation as to demand a patent, she has the title already vested. This view of the act is confirmed by the passage of the act of March 2d, 1855. If the title to the swamp lands did not vest in the states till the issuing of the patents, the sales thereof made by the United States to individuals up to that time would be valid, and there would be no necessity for the indemnity provided for by that act.

These lands have been certified to the state under the railroad grant, pursuant to a decision of Secretary Thompson of February 8, 1860. This decision requires the Commissioner to determine from the records and files of the General Land Office whether the land did pass by the swamp grant. In other words, to determine the question from the field notes of the original surveys. If they appear from that record to be swamp and overflowed lands, they were to be certified as swamp lands, if not they must be certified as railroad lands.

The great error in this decision is apparent to every one familiar with the very loose and careless manner in which the public lands in the west have been surveyed. The fact as to whether the land was dry or wet was considered immaterial. Very little attention was paid to it by the surveyor. There were no interests or rights involved; and hence thousands of acres of swampy, marshy and overflowed lands are not distinguished upon the field notes.

On the other hand, the agents of the state, in selecting lands under the swamp grant, act under oath, and with a direct reference to the character of the land. Great interests are to be determined by that one fact, and with a full knowledge of the importance of the issue, the agents addressed themselves solely to the one point.

The selections thus made ought at least to have been considered prima facie swamp lands, and then unless the railroad companies show otherwise by clear and competent proof, they should be patented under the act of September 28, 1850.

This decision is manifestly unjust towards the states, and under it the Commissioner has certified thousands of acres to the state for railroad purposes that come fully and completely within the swamp land grant. The Secretary of the Interior refuses to review this decision—at least so far as to affect lands already certified.

The amount of swamp lands thus certified is 553,293.33 acres, and so far as these lands are concerned, on the part of the United States, the controversy is at an end. But the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in issuing a patent, is but a ministerial officer (Arnold vs. Grimes et al., 2 Clarke, p. 1 to 20), and his acts are not conclusive and binding, except upon the General Government. They are not conclusive as to the right of the state or other parties. These lands were selected under the swamp land grant, long before the act of May 15, 1856, and were granted by the state to the counties, which proceeded to sell and dispose of them, in many instances appropriating the proceeds, in accordance with the provisions of the grant. Thus, some of the counties have expended enormous sums of money in reclaiming these very lands. In view of all these facts, and with a full knowledge of the disapprobation of the state, the Department has, under the decision aforesaid, rejected her claim, and certified the lands under the railroad grant.

From the opinion of the Attorney General of this state, dated March 4, 1862, and submitted to the General Assembly, and from a letter from the then acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, of August 20, 1856, these railroad companies were not entitled even to contest the right of the state to these lands under the swamp grant.

When the railroad grant was passed, it was not expected nor intended that it should include any of the swamp lands; they were already disposed of by the Government; nor did the railroad companies at the time of their acceptance of the grant, under act of the General Assembly, expect to receive any of these lands, but finding the way open by the rulings and decisions of the Department, adverse to the claim of the state, by their agents acting in the name of the state, have procured the approval as aforesaid.

The General Assembly, by joint resolution, approved April 7, 1862, expressly repudiate the acts of the railroad companies in the premises, and disclaim any intention upon the part of the state to claim these lands under any other grant than the act of September 28, 1850.

The following acts of the General Assembly have been passed with reference to the swamp lands:

1. "An act in relation to the swamp lands within this state." Passed February, 1851.

2. "An act to dispose of the swamp and overflowed lands within this state, and to pay the expenses of selecting and surveying the same." Passed January 13, 1853.

3. "An act, supplemental to an act entitled: 'An act to dispose of the swamp and overflowed lands within this state, and to pay the expenses of selecting and surveying the same,' approved January 13, 1853." Approved January 24, 1853.

4. "An act providing for the collection of money due to the State of Iowa from the Government of the United States, arising from the disposition of the swamp lands, and for selecting the swamp lands, and securing the title to the same." Passed January 25, 1855.

5. "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to dispose of the swamp and overflowed land within this state,' approved January 13, 1853." Approved January 25, 1855.

6. "A bill to prevent trespass or waste on swamp or other lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes." Approved January 25, 1855.

7. "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to dispose of the swamp and overflowed lands within the state and pay the expenses of selecting and surveying the same,' approved February 2 (January 13), 1853." Approved July 15, 1856.

8. "An act in relation to the swamp lands of this state." Approved January 24, 1857.

9. "An act making an appropriation for swamp land purposes." Approved January 27, 1858.

10. "An act for the relief of swamp land pre-emptors." Approved March 22, 1858.

11. "An act to authorize the counties to use the swamp lands to aid in the construction of railroads and seminary buildings." Approved March 22, 1858.

12. "An act to authorize the Governor and Board of County Supervisors to appoint agents in regard to swamp lands belonging to the State of Iowa, and defining their duties." Approved April 8, 1862.

9TH—THE RAILROAD GRANT.

The following is the act of Congress known as the railroad grant:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That there be and is hereby granted to the State of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads from Burlington, on the Mississippi River, to a point on the Missouri River, near the mouth of Platte River; from the City of Davenport, via Iowa City and Fort Des Moines to Council Bluffs; from Lyons City northwesterly to a point of intersection with the main line of the Iowa Central Air Line Railroad, near Maquoketa; thence on said main line, running as near as practicable to the forty-second parallel; across the said State of Iowa to the Missouri River; from the City of Dubuque to a point on the Missouri River, near Sioux City, with a branch from the mouth of the Tete des Morts, to the nearest point on said road, to be completed as soon as the main road is completed to that point, every alternate section of land, designated by odd numbers, for six sections in width on each side of said roads. But in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the lines or routes of said roads are definitely fixed, sold any sections or any part thereof, granted as aforesaid, or the right of pre-emption has attached to the same, then it shall be lawful for any agent or agents to be appointed by the Governor of said state to select subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from the lands of the United States nearest to the tiers of sections above specified, so much land in alternate sections or parts of sections as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold, or otherwise appropriated, or to which the rights of pre-emption have attached as aforesaid; which lands (thus selected in lieu of those sold and to which pre-emption rights have attached as aforesaid, together with the sections and parts of sections by odd numbers as aforesaid, and appropriated as aforesaid) shall be held by the State of Iowa, for the use and purpose aforesaid: Provided, that the land to be so located shall in no case be further than fifteen miles from the lines of said roads, and selected for and on account of each of said roads: Provided further, that the lands hereby granted for and on account of said roads severally, shall be exclusively applied in the construction of that road for and on account of which such lands are hereby granted, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses, and the same shall be applied to no other purpose whatever. And provided further, that any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever, be and the same are hereby reserved from the operations of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of said railroads through such reserved lands; in which case the right of way only shall be granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of land which by such grant shall remain to the United State, within six miles on each side of said roads, shall not be sold for less than the double minimum price of the public lands when sold, nor shall any of said lands become subject to private entry until the same have been first offered at public sale at the increased price.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted to the said state shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, and no other; and the said railroads shall be and remain public highways for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said state shall be disposed of by said state only in manner following, that is to say; that a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections for each of said roads, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of each of said roads, may be sold; and when the Governor of said state shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that any twenty continuous miles of any of said roads is completed, then another quantity of land hereby granted, not to exceed one hundred and twenty sections for each of said roads having twenty continuous miles completed as aforesaid, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of each of such roads, may be sold; and so from time to time until said roads are completed, and if any of said roads are not completed within ten years, no further sale shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the United States mail shall be transported over said roads, under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such price as Congress may by law direct; Provided, that until such price is fixed by law, the Post Master General shall have the power to determine the same.

Approved May 15, 1856.

The General Assembly convened in special session accepted the grant and made disposition of the lands in the following act, approved July 14, 1856:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That the lands, rights, powers and privileges granted to, and conferred upon, the State of Iowa, by the Act of Congress entitled "an Act making a grant of lands to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of railroads, in said state, approved May 15, 1856," be and the same are hereby accepted upon the terms, conditions and restrictions contained in said act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That so much of the lands, interest, rights, powers, and privileges as are or may be granted and conferred, in pursuance of the act of Congress aforesaid, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Burlington, on the Mississippi River, to a point on Missouri near the mouth of Platte River, are hereby disposed of, granted and conferred upon the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, a body corporate, created and existing under the laws of the State of Iowa.

SEC. 3. That so much of the lands, interest, rights, powers, and privileges as are or may be granted and conferred, in pursuance of the act of Congress aforesaid, to aid in the construction of a railroad via Iowa City and Fort Des Moines to Council Bluffs, are hereby disposed of, granted and conferred to and upon the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad Company, a body corporate, created, and existing under the laws of the State of Iowa.

SEC. 4. That so much of the lands, interest, rights, powers and privileges as are or may be granted and conferred, in pursuance of the act of Congress aforesaid, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lyons City northwesterly to a point of intersection with the main line of the Iowa Central Air Line Railroad near Maquoketa, thence on said main line, running as near as practicable to the forty-second parallel, across the said state to the Missouri River, are hereby disposed of, granted and conferred to and upon the Iowa Central Air Line Railroad Company, a body corporate, created and existing under the laws of the State of Iowa.

SEC. 5. That so much of the lands, interest, rights, powers and privileges as are or may be granted and conferred, in pursuance of the act of Congress aforesaid, to aid in the construction of a railroad from the City of Dubuque to a point on the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, with a branch from the mouth of the Tete Des Morts to the nearest point on said road, to be completed as soon as the main line is completed to that point, are hereby disposed of, granted and conferred to and upon the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company, a body corporate, created and existing under the laws of the State of Iowa.

SEC. 6. The lines and routes of the several roads above described shall be definitely fixed and located on or before the first day of April next, after the passage of this act, and maps or plots, showing such lines and routes, shall be filed in the office of the Governor of the State of Iowa, and also in the office of the Secretary of State of the State of Iowa. It shall be the duty of the Governor, after affixing his official signature, to file such map in the Department having the control of the public land at Washington; such location being considered final only so far as to fix the limit and boundary within which lands may be selected; and if it shall appear that the lands that have been donated by the act of Congress aforesaid, for the construction of the several lines above indicated, can not be obtained by said companies within the limits and along any part of the line aforesaid, the Governor shall from time to time appoint agents to make such selections as may be authorized or granted by Congress for the lines aforesaid; but the compensation of such agents and the costs, expenses and charges attendant upon and occasioned by making such selections, shall be fixed, regulated, paid, and borne by each of said Railroad Companies respectively, upon and for its own line.

SEC. 7. The Iowa Central Air Line Railroad Company shall furnish, equip and operate the branch of their Railroad that will be constructed under this grant from Lyons City to the point of intersection with the main line of their road near Maquoketa, in the same manner with their main line from the west, and as completely as though the same was a continuation of said main line, and shall never give any preference to the main line of said road, or any part thereof, as defined in their articles of incorporation, by business arrangements, tariff of prices, or otherwise, over the said branch of their railroad.

SEC. 8. The grants aforesaid are made to each of said companies respectively, upon the express condition, that in case either of such Railroad Companies shall fail to have completed and equipped seventy-five miles of its road within three years from the first day of December next, thirty miles in addition in each year thereafter, for five years, and the remainder of their whole line of road in one year thereafter, or on the first of December, A.D. 1865, then and in that case it shall be competent for the State of Iowa to resume all rights conferred by this act upon the company so failing, and to resume all rights to the lands hereby granted and remaining undisposed of by the company so failing to have the length of road completed in manner and time as aforesaid.

SEC. 9. The roads aforesaid shall be constructed upon a guage with a width of four feet, eight and one-half inches, and the iron used in the track shall be of approved quality and pattern, and the said roads shall be completed and finished in style and of a quality equal to the average of other first-class western roads, and when the roads, or any of them, authorized to be constructed by this act, shall be intersected by the roads of any other railroad company now constructed, or hereafter to be constructed, it shall be the duty of such road or roads, receiving the benefit of this act, to furnish all proper and reasonable facilities and to join such other company in making all necessary crossings, turnouts, sideings and switches, and other conveniences necessary for the transportation of all freight and passengers over either or any road or roads hereby mutually accommodated, whether said passengers or freight are brought by the roads benefited by this act, or any other road or roads now constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed, and at such rates as shall not in any case exceed the regular tariff of charges on such road or roads.

SEC. 10. All persons, who at the time said grant was made, held valid claims by actual occupation and improvement upon any of the lands embraced in said grant, shall be protected in the same, and entitled to purchase and enter the same upon the terms and conditions hereinafter provided.

SEC. 11. Any person, wishing to avail himself of the provisions of this act, shall within three months of the passage thereof, file his application for that purpose with the judge of the county where such lands may be situate, and shall prove to the satisfaction of said judge that his claim is valid, and that the same existed at the time said grant was made; and upon such proof being made, such judge shall give to the applicant a certificate of the fact, and such certificate shall entitle the holder or his bona fide assignee to enter such land at the rate of two dollars and fifty cents per acre; Provided, that no person, claimant, or assignee of a claim, shall be entitled to more than one hundred and sixty acres of land under this act; And provided further, that the person asserting a claim, whether as claimant or assignee, shall file his affidavit that he has not either directly or indirectly received the benefits of the provisions of this act. Before any rights shall be acquired under such certificate, a copy of the same together with the evidence shall be served on the secretary of the company interested, and such company shall have the right to appeal from the decision of such Judge to the District Court, in the same manner as appeals are taken from the decisions of justice of the peace at any time within ninety days after the service of such papers, and the same shall be tried as other appeal cases, and an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court by either party, in the same manner as appeals in other cases.

SEC. 12. Such certificate on being filed with the secretary of the company upon whose line of road such lands may be situate, when no appeal has been taken as herein provided, shall entitle the holder or his assignee to the possession of said land, until the title shall become vested in the company; upon the payment thereafter to the treasurer of the company for said land at the price above designated, such person shall receive from the secretary of the company a patent to such land, not exceeding in quantity one hundred and sixty acres. Such deed or patent shall vest in the purchaser all the title of said company in and to such lands, except so far as to reserve to the company all such right of way and station grounds as may be actually necessary for the uses of the company.

SEC. 13. The said companies shall each severally assent to and accept the provisions of this act, by a written instrument, under the seal of such corporation, with the signatures of the proper officers, within ninety days after the passage of this act, which said acceptance shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and be by the Secretary recorded in the book by him kept for the recording of articles of association.

SEC. 14. Said railroad companies, accepting the provisions of this act, shall at all times be subject to such rules and regulations as may from time to time be enacted and provided for by the General Assembly of Iowa, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and the act of Congress making the grant.

SEC. 15. It shall be the duty of the companies receiving the benefits of this act, to make a regular annual report of their proceedings at the usual time and place of electing their officers, exhibiting a detailed statement, as far as practicable, of the amount of their expenditures, liabilities, etc., a copy of which shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State.

SEC. 16. Be it further enacted, That any of said companies accepting the grants of lands under this act, shall take the same with the conditions imposed and incumbrances specified in this act, and shall in no event have any claim or recourse whatever upon the State of Iowa, for a misapplication of said grant, incumbrances or conditions in this act imposed.

SEC. 17. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Iowa Capital Reporter, and Iowa City Republican.

The several companies accepted the grant on the conditions and under the restrictions imposed in said acts, and proceeded to locate their roads and make selection of the lands falling to them under the grant, between the six and fifteen mile limits.

The Iowa Central Air Line Railroad Company, however, failing to comply with the requirements of the grant, the General Assembly resumed the lands on that line of road by an act, approved March 17, 1860. The same session, by another act, granted these lands to the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad Company, and were duly accepted by said Company.

The ninth General Assembly passed an act to require the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company to release certain swamp, school and river lands on the line of said road, and providing for the compensation therefor by an extension of the time for the building of said road, which was approved April 7, 1862. This act provided that said road shall not be entitled to receive any certificate for lands on said line of roads until said Company shall have executed a deed of release of all the swamp and overflowed lands now approved, or that may be hereafter approved by the Surveyor General, in any county within the fifteen mile limits of said road, to the county in which such swamp and overflowed lands may be situated, including all such swamp or overflowed lands as were returned and certified to the General Land Office and ratified to the State by act of Congress of March 3d, 1857, nor until said Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company shall transfer their interest in those tracts of land in Webster and Hamilton Counties, heretofore sold by John Tolman, School Fund Commissioner of Webster County, within the fifteen mile limits of the grant of said roads (whether the same are held by patents from the state, or contracts made with said Commissioner), to the Register of the State Land Office, in trust, to enable said Register to carry out and perform said contracts in all cases where he is called upon by the parties in interest to do so, before the first day of January, 1864, (after which day he is authorized and required to re-convey those tracts aforesaid not demanded or claimed as aforesaid at that time, to said Railroad Company), nor until the said Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company shall execute deeds of release to the State of Iowa of all lands sold by the state prior to the 7th day of May, 1854, of the odd sections above the Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines River within five miles of said river, and of such other of said lands as have been sold since that date and prior to the first day of January, 1862.

The Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company filed in the State Land Office, on the 27th February, 1864, a release as to all lands sold by John Tolman as school lands.

There is a diversity of opinion as to the effect and proper construction of this grant, occasioned, no doubt, by want of a closer attention and better acquaintance with its terms. The act of Congress grants the land to the state,—making no reference whatever to Railroad Companies, and provides for its sale, as prescribed in the act; evidently contemplating that the state would sell the land and appropriate the proceeds in the construction of the roads.

By the act the state was authorized to sell the land, not exceeding 120 sections, along the first twenty miles of each of said roads; and then, when twenty miles of road was completed, and that fact was certified to the Secretary of the Interior by the Governor, the state was authorized to sell the lands along the next twenty miles, not exceeding 120 sections, and so on until the roads were completed, provided it be done within ten years.

The Interior Department proceeded to list and approve to the state for the use of these several roads all the lands within their respective limits, in the opinion of the Secretary subject to the grant, thus at once conferring on her the legal title to be held till by the terms of the grant she might sell and convey the lands. The list of lands thus approved are forty-three in number; nine for the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, eleven for the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad; thirteen for the Air Line; ten for the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad. The original lists are filed for record in the General Land Office, and certified copies sent to the state and also to the railroad companies.

These certified lists, under the act of Congress, entitled "An act to vest in the several states and territories the title in fee of the lands which have been or may be certified to them," approved August 3, 1854, convey to the state "the fee simple title to all the lands embraced in such lists that are of the character contemplated by such act of Congress, (Act May 15, 1856,) and intended to be granted thereby; but where lands embraced in such lists are not of the character embraced by such act of Congress, and were not intended to be granted thereby, said lists, so far as these lands are concerned, shall be perfectly null and void, and no right, title, claim or interest shall be conveyed thereby."—(Chap. 201, 1st Session, 33d Congress.)

The lists are evidence of title in the state, and confer the fee simple the same as a patent, so far as the lands certified "embraced in the act and intended to be granted thereby." As to all other lands they are null and void.

The following tables exhibit the number of acres of land thus certified:

A part of these lands were selected as swamp under the act of September 28, 1850.

The exact extent of the conflict between the claims under the two grants it is impossible to determine from the records of the State Land Office for want of a copy of the swamp land selections of some of the counties. But the Commissioner of the General Land Office has reported a list of lands claimed by the state as swamp, under the act of September 28, 1850, and claimed also by the railroad companies under the act of May 15, 1856, the claim to which as swamp has been rejected by the Department and the land certified as railroad land, amounting to 553,293.33 acres. (For further particulars as to this conflict, see Swamp Land.)

These lands belong to the state for the purposes of the grant, and the companies must look to her for title. (State ex rel. Lockwood et al. v. Kirkwood, 14 Iowa 162.) There has been no mode prescribed for passing the title from the state. The Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, believing that some act on the part of the state, besides the act of July, 1856, was necessary to confer title on them, procured Governor Lowe to certify to them, on the 9th of November, 1859, (commencing at the Missouri River)—187,207.44 acres; and on the 27th of December, 1859, 43,775.70 acres—total 231,073.14 acres—by attaching to the certified lists his official certificates under the seal of the state.

These are the only lands certified by the state with any apparent design of passing title, or furnishing evidence of title. The subsequent lists delivered to that company it is true, have been also certified to by the Governor, but only to the effect that they are correct copies or duplicates of those lists furnished the state. These subsequent lists contain the lands claimed as swamp.

The other companies have obtained no certificates of this character, and seem to think that nothing but the act of the Legislature of July 14, 1856, is necessary to complete their title. In other words, it is claimed that that act grants all the rights, powers, etc., to the companies which the act of Congress of May 15, 1856, conferred on the state—putting the companies in the place of the state as a party to the grant from Congress—and that that which completes the title to the state will, by virtue of this act of the Legislature, enure to and complete the title of the companies.

To this position several objections have been urged: First, that the grant was made to the state in trust for a specific object; second, that it is evident from the act of July 14, 1856, that the General Assembly did not understand that the state thereby was to lose the control of these lands, but that she was still to retain a supervision over them, with the right to resume and withdraw from the companies all rights and powers conferred, in case of failure on their part; and, third, that the certified lists from the General Land Office operate as a patent and convey title only by virtue of the act of August 3, 1854.

The State Land Office has held this to be the correct position: That the act of July 14, 1856, when accepted by the companies, became a conditional contract to ripen into a sale of the land, from time to time as the work progresses, and as the state thereby becomes authorized under the act of Congress to sell.

The act of Congress of May 15, 1856, was amended by an act approved on the 2d of June, 1864. The object of this amendatory act was to allow the Davenport and Council Bluffs Railroad "to modify or change the location of the uncompleted portion of its line," so as to run through the town of Newton, in Jasper County, or as near that point as practicable. The act provided that whenever the said railroad company should file in the General Land Office at Washington, a map definitely showing such new location, the Secretary of the Interior should cause to be certified and conveyed to said company, from time to time, as the road progressed, out of any of the lands belonging to the United States, not sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of, or to which a pre-emption claim, or right of homestead, had not attached, and on which a bona fide settlement and improvement had not been made under color of title derived from the United States or from the State of Iowa, within six miles of such newly located line, an amount of land per mile equal to that originally authorized to be granted to aid in the construction of said road by the act to which this was an amendment; and if the amount of land granted by the original act for the construction of said railroad should not be found within the limits of six miles from such line, then such selections might be made along such line within twenty miles thereof; Provided, that the said company should not be entitled to, and should not receive, any land under that grant, which was situate within fifteen miles of the line of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, as indicated by the map of said road then on file in the General Land Office.

Similar provision was made in the act for the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad, the lands to be conveyed on the following conditions: "When the Governor of the State of Iowa shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that said company has completed in good running order a section of twenty consecutive miles of the main line of said road west of Nevada, then the secretary shall convey to said company one third, and no more, of the lands granted for said connecting branch; and when said company shall complete an additional section of twenty consecutive miles, and furnish the Secretary of the Interior with proof as aforesaid, then the said secretary may convey to said company another third of the lands granted for said connecting branch; and when said company shall complete an additional section of twenty miles, making in all sixty miles west of Nevada, the secretary, upon proof furnished as aforesaid, may convey to the said company the remainder of said lands to aid in the construction of said connecting branch; provided, however, that no lands shall be conveyed to said company on account of said connecting branch road until the Governor of the State of Iowa shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that the same shall have been completed as a first-class road. And no land shall be conveyed to said company situate and lying within fifteen miles of the original line of the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad, as laid down on a map on file in the General Land Office. Provided, further, that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, and he is hereby required, to reserve a quantity of land embraced in the grant described in this section, sufficient, in the opinion of the Governor of Iowa, to secure the construction of a branch railroad from the town of Lyons, in the State of Iowa, so as to connect with the main line in or west of the town of Clinton, in said state, until the Governor of the state shall certify that said branch railroad is completed according to the requirements of the laws of said state. Provided, further, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to release said company from its obligations to complete the said main line within the time mentioned in the original grant. Provided, further, that nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with, or in any manner impair, any rights acquired by any railroad company named in the act to which this is an amendment, or the rights of any corporation, person or persons, acquired through any such company; nor shall it be construed to impair any vested right of property, but such rights are hereby reserved and confirmed. Provided, however, that no land shall be conveyed to any company or party whatsoever, under the provisions of this act and the act amended by this act, which has been settled upon and improved in good faith by a bona fide inhabitant, under cover of title derived from the United States or from the State of Iowa, adverse to the grant made by this act or the act to which this act is an amendment; but each of said companies may select an equal quantity of public lands as described in this act within the distance of twenty miles of the line of each of said roads in lieu of lands thus settled upon and improved by bona fide inhabitants in good faith, under color of title as aforesaid.

The act also made like provision for the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad, allowing the company so far to change their line between Fort Dodge and Sioux City as to secure the best route between those points, without impairing the right to, or changing the location of, the land granted in the original act.

The act further provided that the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad Company should have the right to transfer and assign all or any part of the grant hereby made to said company to any other company, or persons, if in the opinion of said company the construction of said railroad across the State of Iowa would be thereby sooner and more satisfactorily completed; but such assignee should not in any case be released from the liabilities and conditions accompanying this grant, nor acquire perfect title in any other manner than the same would have been acquired by the original grantee.

The Burlington and Missouri River Railroad was also by this act entitled to receive, out of any public lands belonging to the United States, not sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of, or to which a pre-emption claim or right of homestead had not attached, within six miles of said road, as then located, an amount of land per mile equal to that mentioned in the original act, and if that could not be found within the limits of six miles from the line of said road, then such selection might be made along such line within twenty miles thereof.

This act of Congress has been the occasion of considerable controversy between the state and the railroad companies. The original act had given the grant of land to the state, and not directly to the railroad companies. The state had accepted the grant, on the terms proposed, and had obtained control of the lands till May 15, 1866. The Secretary of the Interior had already certified to the state all these lands falling within fifteen miles of the lines of railroad; yet, notwithstanding all this, Congress seems to have acted in the passage of the amendatory act of June 2, 1864, with such ignorance of what had been already done, or such disregard of it, as to require the secretary, on certain conditions, to certify these lands directly to the railroad companies. When the Secretary of the Interior certified the lands to the state under the act of 1856, the United States was divested of title, until the lands reverted at the end of the ten years. The Interior Department has recognized this fact, and refused to review its action in so certifying, and refused all investigations asked for the purpose of establishing adverse claims (except in cases of pre-emptors), on the ground that the United States had parted with her title, and had no power over the land.

On the 12th of May, 1864, Congress made a grant of lands to the State of Iowa for the use and benefit of the McGregor Western Railroad Company, to aid in the construction of a railroad from McGregor to Sioux City. By this act every alternate section of land, designated by odd numbers, for ten sections in width on each side of the proposed road, was granted for the object stated, the United States reserving to itself the right to substitute other lands therefor in case it should be found that this grant infringed upon pre-emption, or settlement, or lands that had been reserved by the United States for any other purpose. In that case, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to cause lands, in lieu of these, to be selected from the public lands of the United States nearest to the tiers of sections above specified.

10TH—AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE AND FARM LANDS.

On the 22d of March, 1858, the General Assembly passed an act establishing "an Agricultural College and Model Farm," under the management of a Board of Trustees. (Chapter 91, Acts 7th General Assembly.)

The 11th section of that act appropriates the proceeds of the five section grant (provided Congress should consent to the diversion), together with all lands that Congress might thereafter grant to the state for the purposes contemplated by said act, for the benefit of said College.

On the 23d of March, 1858, said General Assembly passed a joint resolution asking the consent of Congress to such diversion of said five section grant.

In response thereto Congress passed an act, approved July 11, 1862, removing the restrictions contained in said grant, and authorizing the General Assembly of the State to make such disposition of said lands as they shall deem best for the interest of the state. (Chap. 146, 2d Sess. 37th Congress.) By these acts, the five sections of land in Jasper County, approved to the state to aid in the erection of public buildings, under act of Congress entitled "An act supplemental to the act for the admission of the States of Iowa and Florida into the Union," approved March 3d, 1845, have been fully appropriated for the benefit of the Iowa Agricultural College and Farm, and have nearly or quite all been sold by the trustees of that institution, The Agricultural College and Farm are located in Story County, and seven hundred and twenty-one acres of land in that county have been donated by individuals for the institution, and two hundred in Boone County.

By an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, the General Government made an appropriation to each state and territory of an amount of land equal to thirty thousand acres for each Senator and Representative in Congress to which the states were respectively entitled by the apportionment under the census of 1860, for the purpose of endowing Colleges of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts.

The Ninth General Assembly, convened in extra session by proclamation of the Governor, passed an act entitled "An act to accept of the grant, and carry into execution the trust conferred upon the State of Iowa by an act of Congress entitled 'An act granting public lands to the several states and territories which may provide Colleges for the benefit of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts,' approved July 2, 1862." Approved September 11, 1862, accepting the grant upon the conditions and under the restrictions contained in said act of Congress, and requiring the Governor to appoint an agent to select and locate the land granted in said act, and providing that no lands shall be selected under said grant that are claimed by any county as Swamp Lands, requiring said agent to report to the Governor, and making it the duty of the Governor to lay the list of selections before the Board of Trustees of the Agricultural College at their next meeting for their approval, etc.; and appropriating $1,000 to carry out the provisions of the act. (Acts Ex. Session, 1862, p. 25.)

The state having eight Senators and Representatives in Congress, thus became entitled to 240,000 acres of land for the purpose of establishing and maintaining in this state an Agricultural College.

Peter Melendy, of Black Hawk County, was appointed under the act of the legislature to select the lands. He made the selections during August, September and December, 1863, in the Des Moines, Sioux City and Fort Dodge Land Districts.

These selections were certified by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on the 8th of December, 1864, and approved to the state by the Secretary of the Interior on the 13th of said month. The title to said lands is vested in fee-simple in the state without any danger of conflicts with claims under other grants.

These lands are approved to the state as 240,000.96 acres, but 35,691.66 acres lie within railroad limits and are therefore computed at double their quantity, making the actual quantity approved under the grant 204,309.30 acres as follows:

The Tenth General Assembly by an act entitled "An Act authorizing the Trustees of the Iowa State Agricultural College and Farm to sell all lands acquired, granted, donated or appropriated for the benefit of said College, and to make an investment of the proceeds thereof," approved March 29, 1864, appropriate and grant these lands to said college, and authorize the trustees to sell or lease the same as therein prescribed. (Acts 1864, p. 148.) In pursuance of this act the trustees took possession of these lands and opened an office for the sale or lease of the same at Fort Dodge, under the agency of Hon. G. W. Bassett. How much has been actually sold or leased we are not informed.

There are, according to the records of the State Land Office, of lands appropriated to the benefit of the Agricultural College, and under the control of the Trustees of the same, as follows:

POLITICAL RECORD.

MICHIGAN TERRITORY.

The political organization of Iowa began in its attachment to Michigan Territory for judicial purposes by act of Congress, June 28, 1834, though at an earlier date one or two justices and post masters had been appointed in the territory. In September, 1834, the Territorial Legislature of Michigan erected two counties in what is now Iowa—Des Moines and Dubuque—the dividing line between them being at the foot of Rock Island. These counties were partially organized, with political and judicial machinery, under the territorial government of Michigan, Isaac Leffler, of Burlington, being Chief Justice of Des Moines County, and John King of Dubuque County. The judicial system at that time embraced also two associate justices, appointed by the Governor, in each county.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATE.

On the first Monday in October, 1835, Gen. George W. Jones, now a citizen of Dubuque, was elected a delegate to Congress from this part of Michigan Territory. On the 20th of April, 1836, he procured the passage of a bill by Congress establishing the Territory of Wisconsin, which became a law on the 4th of July following. Iowa was thenceforward included in the Territory of Wisconsin, till its organization into a separate territory, in 1838.

WISCONSIN TERRITORY.

The Territory of Wisconsin was organized by the appointment of Henry Dodge, Governor; John S. Horner, Secretary; Charles Dunn, Chief Justice; David Irwin and William C. Frazer, Associate Justices.

On the 9th of September, 1836, Governor Dodge ordered a census to be taken of the territory; made an apportionment for members of the Legislature, and issued his proclamation calling an election. The census showed the population of the two counties west of the Mississippi to be 10,531, and the apportionment entitled these counties to nineteen members, six of the Council and thirteen of the House of Representatives.

The election was held on the first Monday in October, 1836. The following were the members elected from the two counties west of the Mississippi:

Council.—Dubuque County: John Fally, Thomas McCraney, Thomas McNight. Des Moines County: Jeremiah Smith, Jr., Joseph B. Teas, Arthur B. Ingham.

House.—Dubuque County: Loring Wheeler, Hardin Nowlin, Hosea T. Camp, Peter Hill Engle, Patrick Quigley. Des Moines County: Isaac Leffler, Thomas Blair, Warren L. Jenkins, John Box, George W. Teas, Eli Reynolds, David R. Chance.

Henry T. Baird was elected President of the Council; Peter Hill Engle, Speaker of the House.

The sessions of this Legislature were as follows:

Belmont, Wisconsin Territory, October 25, 1836. Adjourned December 9, 1836.

Burlington, Wisconsin Territory, November 10, 1837. Adjourned January 20, 1838.

Burlington, Wisconsin Territory, June 1, 1838. Adjourned June 12, 1838.

IOWA TERRITORY

The act of Congress establishing Iowa as a separate territory, was approved June 12, 1838, and took effect on the 4th of July following. It provided for the appointment of a Governor, whose term of office should be three years, and for a Secretary, Chief Justice, two Associate Justices, and United States Attorney and Marshal, who should serve four years. The territory was divided into three Judicial Districts, each judge being required to live and hold court in his own district. The organic act also provided for a Legislative Assembly, consisting of thirty-nine members, thirteen of the Council and twenty-six of the House of Representatives. The Judicial Districts apportioned by the first Territorial Legislature, in 1838, were as follows:

First District.—Lee, Van Buren, Henry and Des Moines Counties—CHARLES MASON, Judge.

Second District.—Louisa, Washington, Johnson, Cedar and Muscatine Counties—JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Judge.

Third District.—Jackson, Dubuque, Scott and Clayton Counties—THOMAS S. WILSON, Judge.

In the territorial courts, Charles Mason held the office of Chief Justice.

In each of the Judicial Districts, the office of District Attorney was created, whose duty it was to attend to the civil and criminal business for the territory and of the counties in his district. This officer, and also the Sheriff and Territorial Treasurer, were appointed by the Governor, with the concurrence of the Council, and held their offices three years.

TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Governors.—Robert Lucas, appointed in 1838; John Chambers, appointed in 1841; James Clarke, appointed in 1845.

Secretaries.—William B. Conway, appointed in 1838—died in office in 1839; James Clarke, appointed in 1839; O. H. W. Stull, appointed in 1841; Samuel J. Burr, appointed in 1843; Jesse Williams, appointed in 1845.

Auditors.—Office created January 7, 1840: Jesse Williams, appointed January 14, 1840; William L. Gilbert, appointed January 23, 1843—re-appointed February 27, 1844; Robert M. Secrest, appointed in 1845.

Treasurers.—Office created February 23, 1839: Thornton Bayliss, appointed January 23, 1839; Morgan Reno, appointed in 1840.

Territorial Agents.—Office created January 14, 1841: Jesse Williams, appointed January 15, 1841; John M. Colman, appointed in 1842—re-appointed February 15, 1843, February 12, 1844; Anson Hart, appointed in 1844 or 1845. Office abolished May 29, 1845.

Superintendent of Public Instruction.—Office created February 12, 1841: William Reynolds, appointed in 1841. Office abolished March 19, 1842.

Capital Commissioners.—Appointed under the act of January 21, 1839, to locate the seat of government at Iowa City: Chauncey Swan, appointed February 20, 1839; John Reynolds, appointed February 20, 1839; Robert Ralston, appointed February 20, 1839. Legislated out of office January 14, 1841.

Delegates in Congress.—William W. Chapman, XXXV and XXXVI Congress; Augustus C. Dodge, XXXVII, XXXVIII and XXXIX Congress.

Francis Gehon was elected in 1839, but did not act as delegate. On the 3d of March, 1839, Congress passed an act relating to Iowa Territory, which, among other things, contained the provision that the delegate from Iowa (William W. Chapman) should hold his seat till the 11th day of October, 1840, and that the next representative after the expiration of Mr. Chapman's term should only hold his seat till the 4th of March following, after which the term should be two years, the same as other members of Congress.

FIRST LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Convened at Burlington, November 12, 1838. Adjourned January 25, 1839.

Council.—Jesse B. Browne, Lee County; J. Keith, E. A. M. Swazy, Van Buren County; Arthur Ingham, Robert Ralston, George Hepner, Des Moines County; Jesse J. Payne, D. B. Hughes, Henry County; James M. Clark, Muscatine, Louisa and Slaughter Counties; Charles Whittlesey, Cedar, Johnston, Jones and Linn Counties; Jonathan W. Parker, Scott and Clinton Counties; Warner Lewis, Stephen Hempstead, Dubuque, Jackson and Clayton Counties.

Jesse B. Browne, President, elected November 13, 1838.

B. F. Wallace, Secretary, elected November 13, 1838.

House.—William Patterson, Hawkins Taylor, Calvin J. Price, James Brierly, Lee County; James Hall, Gideon S. Bailey, Samuel Parker, Van Buren County; James W. Grimes, George Temple, Van B. Delashmutt, Thomas Blair, George H. Beeler, Des Moines County; William G. Coop, William H. Wallace, Asbury B. Porter, Henry County; John Frierson, William L. Toole, Levi Thornton, S. C. Hastings, Muscatine, Louisa and Slaughter Counties; Robert G. Roberts, Cedar, Johnson, Jones and Linn Counties; Laurel Summers, Jabez A. Burchard, jun., Scott and Clinton Counties; Chauney Swan, Andrew Bankson, Thomas Cox, Hardin Nowlin, Dubuque, Jackson and Clayton Counties.

William H. Wallace, Speaker, elected November 13, 1838.

Joseph T. Fales, Chief Clerk, elected November 13, 1838.

SECOND LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

The General Assembly of Iowa, as at present constituted, is composed of fifty Senators and ninety-nine Representatives. The Senatorial Districts correspond with the number of Senators, while the Representative Districts are seventy-three. These districts, together with the Congressional and Judicial, are shown by colored maps in this work.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The public school system of Iowa is justly regarded as one of the most complete in the United States. It did not spring at once and full-grown into being, like Minerva from the brain of Jupiter, but is the result of a gradual growth and development through a series of years, extending down from the incipient stages of territorial legislation, and being improved from time to time as experience suggested and as the exigencies of education seemed to demand. The germ of the free school system, which has become a tree, extending its sheltering branches to all the children of the state, and yielding copiously the beneficent fruit of rudimentary knowledge, was planted in the soil of Iowa by the first settlers. They were men and women who came from other states, where the advantages of the common schools had been tested by experience, and brought with them their ideas, to be enlarged and improved upon in the broader and more fertile fields of the West. Coetaneously with the cabins of the early settlers, sprang up school houses; teachers came with the first wave of immigration; among the pioneers and miners of the lead region, education was one of the earliest necessities, to be provided for even before they had comfortable houses to live in. As the country became settled, and population and wealth increased, in nothing was the progress more marked than in the better class of school buildings which took the place of the primitive cabins. Iowa, to-day, is dotted over with school houses unsurpassed, if not unequalled, by those of any other state. Especially is this the fact in her cities and villages, where a liberal, and even lavish, expenditure has been voted for the erection of elegant and commodious school buildings, and their equipment with all the modern improvements calculated to facilitate the acquisition of a common school education. In the towns and villages scattered over her broad prairies, it is not uncommon to see elegant and imposing brick and stone structures which have been erected at a cost of from ten to twenty and even forty and fifty and sometimes sixty thousand dollars each.

The people of the state have expended not far from ten millions of dollars for the erection of public school buildings. The value of school houses in the state was placed, in 1873, at $8,164,324.66. In Polk County alone, which reaches the highest figure, the value was $470,485. The counties next highest, respectively, were, Scott, $325 330; Wapello, $252,523; Clinton, $251,325; Dubuque, $233,890; Des Moines, $177,949. But it is not our purpose in this place to give full statistics of the schools—those are furnished in the statistical portions of this work. All we aim at in this article is to give a few of the general and leading features. As exhibiting the rapid and uniform growth of the school system during the decade from 1863 to 1873, the following table, prepared by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, is inserted:

Years.	No. of Schools.	No. of youth between the ages of 5 and 21 years.	No. of youth enrolled.	Ave. average attendance.	Ave. age number of months School has been taught. From the remarks of the Superintendent on the above statement, we make the following extracts:

"The most remarkable advance exhibited is that in relation to the school expenditures; the annual amounts paid teachers, rising from $570,115 to $2,248,677, an increase of two hundred and ninety-four per cent. The expenditures for new school houses and sites, and for libraries and apparatus have increased from $160,253 to $1,184,082, and that for rent and repairs of school houses, for fuel, for compensation of district secretaries and treasurers, and for other incidentals from $31,169 to $796,696. The aggregate annual expenditures rising from $761,537, in 1863, to $4,229,455, in 1873, or four hundred and fifty-five per cent.

"The significance of these facts is unmistakable. Such munificent expenditures can only be accounted for by the liberality and public spirit of our people, all of whom manifest their love of popular education and their faith in the public schools by the annual dedication to their support of moer than one per cent. of their entire taxable property; this too uninterruptedly through a series of years commencing in the midst of a war which taxed our energies and resources to the extreme, and continuing through years of general depression in business; years of moderate yield of produce, of discouragingly low prices, and even amid the scanty surroundings and privations of pioneer life. Few human enterprises have a grander significance, or give evidence of a more noble purpose than the generous contributions from the scanty resources of the pioneer for the purposes of public education. The cost of supporting the public schools of the state, is a subject of such general discussion at the present time, that it was thought best to publish some facts giving the cost to each person; to each scholar; to each dollar of taxable property, etc., for the past year.

"These facts are based upon the aggregate expenditures for schools, including the interest on the permanent school funds, amounts received from fines, etc., so that the actual cost to our people is somewhat less than the figures given. From these statements it appears that the total expense of supporting the public schools, exclusive of school house building, is two dollars and fifty-five cents to each man, woman, and child in the state; eight dollars and eighty-two cents to each pupil enrolled in the schools; also twelve dollars and eighty-three cents to each head of a family; about eleven dollars to each adult male, and eight and forty-one one-hundredths mills on the dollar of the taxable property of the state. If the cost of building school houses be added, the expense is considerably increased, as will be seen from the foregoing summary.

"There is but little opposition to the levy of taxes for the support of schools, and there would be still less if the funds were always properly guarded and judiciously expended. However much our people disagree upon other subjects, they are practically united upon this. The opposition of wealth has long since ceased to exist, and our wealthy men are usually the most liberal in their views and the most active friends of popular education. They are often found upon our school boards, and usually make the best of school officers. It is not uncommon for boards of directors, especially in the larger towns and cities, to be composed wholly of men who represent the enterprise, wealth and business of their cities.

"The taxes which are levied to support the schools by our people, are self imposed. Under our laws no taxes can be legally levied or collected for the erection of school houses until they have first been voted by the electors of the district at a legally called school meeting. Our school houses are the pride of the state, and an honor to the people. If they are sometimes built at a prodigal expense, the tax-payers have only themselves to blame. The teachers' and contingent funds are determined, under certain restrictions, by the boards of directors elected annually in all except independent districts, where the board is wholly changed triennially. The only exception to this method of determining school taxes, is in case of the county school tax of from one to three mills on the dollar, usually the former, which is levied by the board of supervisors."

The laws relating to the public schools are found in the Code of 1873, with the exception of the amendatory acts passed by the Fifteenth General Assembly. The school laws, as amended, have been published in a neat volume, accompanied with valuable notes by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and are accessible to all school officers and others who may desire them. This work, with its carefully prepared notes and blank forms, is a valuable compend of authority on school matters, and should be carefully studied by all who have anything to do with the practical working of the school system. From the preface to Mr. Abernethy's work we give the following summary of the amendments made to the school laws during the session of 1874–5:

The laws enacted by the Fifteenth General Assembly affecting the school laws are chapters 27, 57, 64 and 67 of the general and public acts.

Chapter 27 amends sections 1721 and 1802 of the code of 1873, by changing the time for the election of secretaries and treasurers of all school districts from the third Monday in March to the third Monday in September; and provides that the secretaries and treasurers elected on the third Monday in March, 1874, shall hold their offices until the third Monday in September, 1874, and until their successors are elected and qualified; it also provides that the secretaries of school districts containing a population of less than five hundred may or may not be chosen from the board.

Chapter 57 repeals section 1769 of the code, and substitutes in lieu thereof a provision for holding annually in each county a teachers' normal institute under the direction of the county superintendent.

Chapter 64 authorizes boards of directors and sub-directors to maintain industrial expositions in the public schools.

Chapter 67 authorizes school districts formed from territory lying in adjoining counties to vote and certify to the respective boards of supervisors the number of mills required to levy the necessary school taxes for their districts.

With the exceptions above indicated, the law remains as found in the code of 1873, and the sections of this edition of the school laws are identical with those of the corresponding numbers of the code. A few verbal errors in the printed copy of the code are here corrected.

Every school officer should study carefully the school laws and the accompanying notes to enable him to comply strictly with the law in the levy and disbursement of school funds, the care of school property, the employment of teachers, and the conduct of the schools.

Under the judicious management of faithful officers, the condition and character of the public schools of Iowa ought constantly to improve.

The Superintendent of Public Instruction is the highest school officer of the State, and exercises a general supervision over its educational interests, so far as relates to the public schools. Each county has a county superintendent, who examines applicants for teachers' certificates, visits the schools, reports annually to the State Superintendent, and exercises a general charge over the schools of the county. Each civil township constitutes what is called a district township, which is divided into sub-districts, and each sub-district elects a sub-director. The several sub directors in the district township constitute a Board of Directors. In towns and cities there are independent districts, which elect officers to manage their affairs independently of the district townships.

The public schools are supported by funds arising from several sources. The sixteeth section of every Congressional township was set apart by the General Government for school purposes, being one thirty-sixth part of all the lands of the state. The minimum price of these lands was fixed at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. Congress also made an additional donation to the state of five hundred thousand acres, and an appropriation of five per cent. on all the sales of public lands to the school fund. The state gives to this fund the proceeds of the sales of all lands which escheat to it; the proceeds of all fines for the violation of the liquor and criminal laws. The money derived from these sources constitutes the permanent school fund of the state, which can not be diverted to any other purpose. The total of this fund is now over four millions of dollars. The penalties collected by the courts for fines and forfeitures, go to the school fund in the counties where collected. The proceeds of the sale of lands and the five per cent. fund go into the state treasury, and the state distributes these proceeds to the several counties according to their request, and the counties loan the money to individuals for long terms at eight per cent. interest, on security of land valued at three times the amount of the loan, exclusive of all buildings and improvements thereon. The interest on these loans is paid into the state treasury, and becomes the available school fund of the state. The counties are responsible to the state for all money so loaned, and the state is likewise responsible to the school fund for all moneys transferred to the counties. The interest on these loans is apportioned by the state auditor semi-annually to the several counties of the state, in proportion to the number of persons between the ages of five and twenty-one years. The counties also levy an annual tax for school purposes, which is apportioned to the several district townships in the same way. A district tax is also levied for the same purpose. The money arising from these several sources constitutes the support of the public schools, and is sufficient to enable every sub-district in the state to afford from six to nine months' school each year.

MILITARY RECORD.

[The subjoined military record of Iowa, in connection with the War of the Rebellion, has been kindly furnished by Colonel A. P. Wood, of Dubuque, whose forthcoming history of Iowa and the War, we understand is nearly ready for the press. We take occasion to say, on the merits of what we have examined of Mr. Wood's work, that it will be the most complete and exhaustive of anything that has been published in the way of a state history of the Rebellion.—W. W. C.]

Whether in the promptitude of her responses to the calls made on her by the General Government, in the courage and constancy of her soldiery in the field, or in the wisdom and efficiency with which her civil administration was conducted during the trying period covered by the War of the Rebellion, Iowa proved herself the peer of any loyal state. The proclamation of her Governor, responsive to that of the President, calling for volunteers to compose her First Regiment, was issued on the fourth day after the fall of Sumter. At the end of only a single week men enough were reported to be in quarters (mostly in the vicinity of their own homes) to fill the regiment. These, however, were hardly more than a tithe of the number who had been offered by company commanders for acceptance under the President's call. So urgent were these offers that the Governor requested (on the 24th of April) permission to organize an additional regiment. While awaiting an answer to this request he conditionally accepted a sufficient number of companies to compose two additional regiments. In a short time he was notified that both of these would be accepted. Soon after the completion of the Second and Third Regiments (which was near the close of May), the Adjutant General of the State reported that upwards of one hundred and seventy companies had been tendered to the Governor to serve against the enemies of the Union.

Much difficulty and considerable delay occurred in fitting these regiments for the field. For the First Infantry a complete outfit (not uniform) of clothing was extemporized,—principally by the volunteered labor of loyal women in the different towns,—from material of various colors and qualities, obtained within the limits of the state. The same was done in part for the Second Infantry. Meantime, an extra session of the General Assembly had been called by the Governor, to convene on the 15th of May. With but little delay that body authorized a loan of $800,000, to meet the extraordinary expenses incurred, and to be incurred, by the Executive department in consequence of the new emergency. A wealthy merchant of the state (ex-Governor Merrill, then a resident of McGregor) immediately took from the Governor a contract to supply a complete outfit of clothing for the three regiments organized, agreeing to receive, should the Governor so elect, his pay therefor in state bonds at par. This contract he executed to the letter, and a portion of the clothing (which was manufactured in Boston, to his order,) was delivered at Keokuk, the place at which the troops had rendezvoused, in exactly one month from the day on which the contract had been entered into. The remainder arrived only a few days later. This clothing was delivered to the regiments, but was subsequently condemned by the Government, for the reason that its color was gray, and blue had been adopted as the color to be worn by the national troops.

The state, while engaged in these efforts to discharge her duty, in connection with the common emergency, was compelled to make separate and large provision for the security of her own borders. On the south she was threatened with invasion by the Secessionists of Missouri, while on the west and northwest there was danger of incursions by bands of hostile Indians, now freed from the usual restraint imposed by garrisons of regular troops at the frontier posts. For border defense the Governor was authorized to raise two regiments of infantry, a squadron (not less than five companies) of cavalry, and a battalion (not less than three companies) of artillery. Orly mounted troops, however, were enlisted for this service; but in times of special danger, or when calls were made by the Unionists of Northern Missouri for assistance against their disloyal enemies, large numbers of militia on foot often turned out, and remained in the field until the necessity for their services had passed.

The first order for the Iowa volunteers to move to the field was received on the 13th of June. It was issued by General Lyon, then commanding the United States forces in Missouri. The First and Second Infantry immediately embarked in steamboats, and moved to Hannibal. Some two weeks later the Third Infantry was ordered to the same point. These three, together with many other of the earlier-organized Iowa regiments, rendered their first field-service in Missouri. The First Infantry formed a part of the little army with which General Lyon moved on Springfield, and fought the bloody battle of Wilson's Creek. It received unqualified praise for its gallant bearing on the field. In the following month (September) the Third Iowa, with but very slight support, fought with honor the sanguinary engagement of Blue Mills Landing; and in November the Seventh Iowa, as a part of a force commanded by General Grant, greatly distinguished itself in the battle of Belmont, where it poured out its blood like water—losing more than half of the men it took into action.

The initial operations in which the battles referred to took place, were followed by the more important movements led by General Grant, General Curtis of this state, and other commanders, which resulted in defeating the armies defending the chief strategic lines held by the Confederates in Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Arkansas, and compelling their withdrawal from much of the territory previously controlled by them in those states. In these and other movements, down to the grand culminating campaign by which Vicksburg was captured, and the Confederacy permanently severed on the line of the Mississippi River, Iowa troops took part, in steadily-increasing numbers. In the investment and siege of Vicksburg, the state was represented by thirty regiments and two batteries, in addition to which, eight regiments and one battery were employed on the outposts of the besieging army. The brilliancy of their exploits on the many fields where they served, won for them the highest meed of praise, both in military and civil circles. Multiplied were the terms in which expression was given to this sentiment, but these words of one of the journals of a neighboring state—"The Iowa troops have been heroes among heroes"—embodies the spirit of all.

In the veteran re-enlistments that distinguished the closing months of 1863 above all other periods in the history of re-enlistments for the National armies, the Iowa three years' men (who were relatively more numerous than those of any other state) were prompt to set the example of volunteering for another term of equal length, thereby adding many thousands to the great army of those who gave this renewed and practical assurance that the cause of the Union should not be left without defenders.

In all the important movements of 1864–'65, by which the Confederacy was penetrated in every quarter, and its military power finally overthrown, the Iowa troops took part. Their drum-beat was heard on the banks of every great river of the South, from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, and every where they rendered the same faithful and devoted service, maintaining on all occasions their wonted reputation for valor in the field and endurance on the march.

Two Iowa three-year cavalry regiments were employed during their whole term of service in the operations that were in progress from 1863 to 1866 against the hostile Indians of the Western Plains. A portion of these men were among the last of the volunteer troops to be mustered out of service. The state also supplied a considerable number of men to the navy, who took part in most of the naval operations prosecuted against the Confederate power on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and the rivers of the West.

The people of Iowa were early and constant workers in the sanitary field, and by their liberal gifts and personal efforts for the benefit of the soldiery, placed their state in the front rank of those who became distinguished for their exhibitions of patriotic benevolence during the period covered by the War. Agents appointed by the Governor were stationed at points convenient for rendering assistance to the sick and needy soldiers of the state, while others were employed in visiting, from time to time, hospitals, camps and armies in the field, and doing whatever the circumstances rendered possible for the health and comfort of such of the Iowa soldiery as might be found there.

Some of the benevolent people of the state early conceived the idea of establishing a Home for such of the children of deceased soldiers as might be left in destitute circumstances. This idea first took form in 1863, and in the following year a Home was opened at Farmington, Van Buren County, in a building leased for that purpose, and which soon became filled to its utmost capacity. The institution received liberal donations from the general public, and also from the soldiers in the field. In 1865 it became necessary to provide increased accommodations for the large number of children who were seeking the benefits of its care. This was done by establishing a branch at Cedar Falls, in Black Hawk County, and by securing, during the same year, for the use of the parent Home, Camp Kinsman, near the City of Davenport. This property was soon afterward donated to the institution, by act of Congress.

In 1866, in pursuance of a law enacted for that purpose, the Soldiers' Orphans' Home (which then contained about four hundred and fifty inmates) became a state institution, and thereafter the sums necessary for its support were appropriated from the state treasury. A second branch was established at Glenwood, in Mills County. Convenient tracts of land were secured, and valuable improvements made at all the different points. Schools were also established, and employments provided for such of the children as were of suitable age. In all ways the provision made for these wards of the state, has been such as to challenge the approval of every benevolent mind. The number of children who have been inmates of the Home from its foundation to the present time, is considerably more than two thousand.

At the beginning of the War the population of Iowa included about one hundred and fifty thousahd men presumably liable to render military service. The state raised, for general service, thirty-nine regiments of infantry, nine regiments of cavalry, and four companies of artillery, composed of three-years' men; one regiment of infantry, composed of three-months' men; and four regiments and one battalion of infantry, composed of one hundred days' men. The original enlistments in these various organizations, including seventeen hundred and twenty-seven men raised by draft, numbered a little more than sixty-nine thousand. The re-enlistments, including upward of seven thousand veterans, numbered very nearly eight thousand. The enlistments in the Regular Army and Navy, and organizations of other states, will, if added, raise the total to upward of eighty thousand. The number of men who, under special enlistments, and as militia, took part at different times in the operations on the exposed borders of the state, was probably as many as five thousand.

Iowa paid no bounty on account of the men she placed in the field. In some instances, toward the close of the war, bounty to a comparatively small amount was paid by cities and towns. On only one occasion—that of the call of July 18, 1864—was a draft made in Iowa. This did not occur on account of her proper liability, as established by previous rulings of the War Department, to supply men under that call, but grew out of the great necessity that there existed for raising men. The Government insisted on temporarily setting aside, in part, the former rule of settlements, and enforcing a draft in all cases where subdistricts in any of the states should be found deficient in their supply of men. In no instance was Iowa, as a whole, found to be indebted to the General Government for men, on a settlement of her quota accounts.

It only remains to be said, that while many loyal states, very much wealthier than Iowa, incurred large debts for objects arising out of the war, she succeeded in discharging all her obligations in that connection without adding, substantially, to her previous pecuniary liabilities. The settlement made after the close of hostilities, showed that her claims upon the General Government fully equalled the amount of bonds she had sold to provide the means of placing her troops in the field, and meeting such other demands as were being made on her by reason of the war.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

The growth and importance of this Order in Iowa seems to require special mention in this work. We had hoped to obtain an article specially prepared by Col. A. B. Smedley, Master of the Iowa State Grange, but his various duties prevented its preparation in time for publication. We therefore do the best we can toward supplying the place of such an article by making some selections from Colonel Smedley's able resume of the Patrons of Husbandry, published as a "Supplement" to "The Footprints of Time," by Charles Bancroft, R. T. Root, Burlington, Iowa, Publisher. Through the courtesy of Mr. Root, we are permitted to use the following matter:

ORIGIN OF THE ORDER.

In 1866 Mr. O. H. Kelley, a farmer and resident of Minnesota, received an appointment in Washington, and after a trip through the South, conceived the idea that some plan might be devised to unite together the different agricultural societies and enable them to, by co-operation, aid each other.

He submitted his thoughts to William Saunders, A. B. Grosh, John Trimble, Jr., John Ireland, T. M. McDonald and J. R. Thompson. The subject was thoroughly discussed at different times, and the question ever recurring was, "Why can not the farmers, both North and South, unite in the same manner as the Masons and Odd Fellows, who have clung together for so long a period, for social and educational purposes, with a view to promote their common interest."

It was felt that the time for some such organization had come; and they set themselves earnestly to the task of working out the fundamental idea in practical and tangible shape. They clearly saw that to do this required great energy, untiring labor, and much self-sacrifice. They were all of them men eminently fitted for the work they desired to accomplish. Mr. Saunders had a national reputation for marked ability in his chosen profession as a horticulturist, and no man stood higher for integrity of character. Mr. Grosh, well known in connection with Odd Fellowship, and Mr. Kelley, with his untiring energy of purpose and enthusiasm, were all members of high rank in secret, social and benevolent societies, and therefore proficients in ritualism; while all were gentlemen of education and refinement. Each seemed fitted for a work of this character, and comprehended fully the needs in this direction. During the early period of the work the difficulties they met with would have disheartened most men. None of them were wealthy, and money was needed. This they freely gave as their means would permit. They were also aided by others who sympathized with their aims. Thomas B. Bryant, of Chicago, for instance, early in the organization, felt deeply its necessity, urged strongly its merits, and gave liberally of his means while yet the Order was in its greatest straits. At various times funds were supplied by this gentleman when urgently needed; and they possessed the merit of being earned in legitimate and honorable business pursuits. Among others who early gave their influence and aid to the movement, were Anson Bartlett, of Ohio, and Wm. Muir, of Mo., the eminent Horticulturist.

Frequent meetings for consultation were held. The ground work was commenced, and finally Messrs. Kelley and Ireland, on the 5th of August, 1867, at their quarters at U. S. Hotel in Washington, acting upon the suggestions offered at former meetings, compiled and worked out a draft of the first degree of the Order.

It is said that each of the seven founders also prepared a portion and at the next meeting for consultation submitted it for the consideration of all.

After the work was well begun, at one of the meetings, the question was suggested as to whether, after all their labor and toil, they would not be forgotten.

It must be a source of gratification to these noble men that now, when the work is assured, a grateful Brotherhood does not fail to remember, with full appreciation, the self-denial and persistent effort of the founders of the Order.

In September, a circular was prepared by the leaders in the movement and sent out to individuals prominent in agriculture. The document stated what had been, so far, done towards organizing the system for association and co-operation; suggestions were asked for; and among other things, as to the proper name to be adopted in case the project met with approval. Responses came which, as a rule, were favorable to the plan contemplated; and the work on the ritual at last became so far advanced that it was imperative that a fitting and significant name should be decided on for the new Order, still, as it were, in embryo.

About forty names were, in all, received for consideration. The name under which the Order has since become famous, and which is so expressive of the true nature of the association—"Patrons of Husbandry"—was happily adopted as the name of the Order, and the title of the members; while another term equally expressive was needed to indicate the Hall or place of meeting; and thus the word Grange was wedded to enduring fame.

It should be borne in mind that Grange is the name of the place of meeting and not the name of the Order. The word signifies simply a farm.

In England "Grange" is generally used to signify an old farm, or manor house surrounded by ancient trees, and sometimes by a moat or ditch.

During the civil wars which devastated England two centuries ago, these manor houses and farm strongholds were made the scenes of bitter strife between contending factions, and were often stubbornly defended.

Hence the term may be liberally construed as "stronghold," happily expressive of the sense in which the Patrons of Husbandry use it.

It would be well for all to remember this fact, and not misuse the English language by calling the individuals Grangers. The individual, is a Patron of Husbandry. The place of meeting, a Grange.

ORGANIZATION OF THE NATIONAL GRANGE.

On the fourth day of December, 1867, the National Grange was organized, at the office of Mr. William Saunders, in Washington, D. C., less than twenty members being present. But there were individuals from the various states who were each moved by the same strong desire to draw together the agricultural masses throughout the whole country; and to endeavor, by precept and example, to impress on them the necessity of such a thorough organization as should enable the fraternity to counteract the influences which had long been at work to depress, rather than elevate, the producing classes.

After a free and most earnest discussion of the means best adapted to forward the project, it was determined to organize the National Grange, and at once proceed to carry forward the work by a complete and thorough organization in the several states.

The following officers were elected for the first term

Master—William Saunders, Washington, D. C.
Overseer—Anson Bartlett, of Ohio.
Lecturer—J. R. Thompson, of Vermont.
Steward—Wm. Muir, of Pennsylvania.
Assistant Steward—A. L. Moss, of New York.
Chaplain—Rev. A. B. Grosh, of Pennsylvania.
Treasurer—Wm. M. Ireland, of Pennsylvania.
Secretary—O. H. Kelley, of Minnesota.
Gate Keeper—Edward P. Farris, of Illinois.

In the discussion of ways and means it was decided that this election should be for five years; rightly thinking that at the end of that time all would be better able to judge of the expediency of a longer or shorter term of office. The following is the preamble, with the names of the degrees of the Subordinate, State and National Grange:

PREAMBLE.

"Human happiness is the acme of earthly ambition. Individual happiness depends upon general prosperity. The prosperity of a nation is in proportion to the value of its productions. The soil is the source from whence we derive all that constitutes wealth; without it we would have no agriculture, no manufactures, no commerce. Of all the material gifts of the creator, the various productions of the vegetable world are of the first importance. The art of agriculture is the parent and precurser of all arts, and its products the foundation of all wealth."

The productions of the earth are subject to the influence of natural laws, invariable and indisputable; the amount produced will consequently be in proportion to the intelligence of the producer, and success will depend upon his knowledge of the action of these laws, and the proper application of their principles. Hence, knowledge is the foundation of happiness.

The ultimate object of this organization is for mutual instruction and protection, to lighten labor by diffusing a knowledge of its aims and purposes, expand the mind by tracing the beautiful laws the Great Creator has established in the universe, and to enlarge our views of creative wisdom and power. To those who read aright, history proves that in all ages society is fragmentary, and successful results of general welfare can be secured only by general effort.

Unity of action can not be acquired without discipline, and discipline can not be enforced without significant organization; hence we have a ceremony of initiation which binds us in mutual fraternity as with a band of iron; but although its influence is so powerful, its application is as gentle as that of the silken thread that binds a wreath of flowers.

The Patrons of Husbandry consist of the following:

ORGANIZATION.

SUBORDINATE GRANGES.

First degree: Laborer (man), Maid (woman).
Second degree: Cultivator (man), Shepherdess (woman).
Third degree: Harvester (man), Gleaner (woman),
Fourth degree: Husbandman (man), Matron (woman).

STATE GRANGE.

Fifth degree: Pomona (Hope).

Composed of Masters of Subordinate Granges, and their wives who are Matrons. Past Masters and their wives who are Matrons shall be Honorary members, and eligible to office, but not entitled to vote.

NATIONAL GRANGE.

Sixth degree: Flora (Charity).

Composed of Masters of State Granges and their wives who have taken the degree of Pomona. Past-Masters of State Granges, and their wives who have taken said degree of Pomona, shall be honorary members and eligible to office, but not entitled to vote.

Seventh degree: Ceres (Faith).

Members of the National Grange who have served one year therein may become members of this degree on application and election. It shall have charge of the secret work of the order, and shall be a court of impeachment of all officers of the National Grange.

Members of this degree are honorary members of the National Grange, and eligible to office therein, but not entitled to vote.

Each Grange, whether Subordinate, State or National, is intended to represent a farm, or family, with all its departments of work and production.

In the First degree is represented the condition of Material Labor. In the beginning man is uncultivated and has but a limited amount of knowledge; he must be directed by a more advanced intelligence to make his labor productive. Burdened with toil he seeks for a higher condition in life. Having neither flocks nor herds, he must depend on the labor of his hands alone. Commencing at the state of primeval man, he gains but a precarious subsistence, and his mental growth is necessarily slow. But, stimulated by the hope of bettering his condition, he struggles upward, being taught that the faithful laborer is worthy of a rich reward for his labor.

The Second degree, Cultivator, represents the man and woman rising slowly in intelligence; they gather flocks and herds about them, and begin to emerge from the primeval state; the light of intelligence begins to dawn; they learn to cultivate the soil and make the earth minister to their necessities.

In the next degree he seeks a more settled mode of life. At this stage men gather into communities and begin to make laws for the general welfare; they also begin to respect the rights of their fellow men, and to gather in the harvests they have planted. Finally, after the cultivation of the preceding conditions, man comes to the condition of husbandman. Here he is fitted to enjoy in a high degree the freedom and blessings of agricultural life. He, in connection with the Matron, having proved faithful in all preceding conditions, is fitted to enjoy the confidence and esteem of his fellow men. Educated labor here brings its reward; and the intellect and moral nature are made to perform their part, as well as the labor of the hands.

Passing beyond this we come to the degree of Pomona. Here the Fruits come to add to the comforts and enjoyments of life already rich in blessings.

We now come to the region of Flowers—the degree of Flora. The senses are here gratified by the most beautiful of all nature's creations. None of deep feelings and high aims can stand before these most wondrous works of God without having awakened in the heart a feeling of reverence.

Next we come to the region of Faith. Here the whole nature of man has received that complete and careful education which fits him for the high position his calling demands. Beginning a rude, uncultivated creature, he has learned the lesson of material labor, has brought to aid him domestic animals, has learned to plant and have his fields respected, to gather in peace his harvest, has learned to appreciate the nobility of his calling as a husbandman, has brought to his aid the fruits of the earth, has added to all these that high moral culture which comes from beautiful creations, and finally, fitted and prepared by intellectual training, has become a harmonious being; incarnating in his own nature all the attributes of man—vitalized and purified by the divine spirit of Deity.

Man is no longer a barbarian, for he has property and respects the property of others—comprehends and appreciates the dignity of educated labor—has civil rights and is fitted to become, in its highest sense, a citizen.

Such was the general scope and intention of the men who originated this movement, and they have so far steadily labored to carry out and perfect it. In this work they have been sustained by the best minds of our country.

WOMAN'S POSITION IN THE ORDER.

A considerable amount of criticism has been awakened by the admission of women to the Order. It is claimed that it is a "Woman's Rights" institution. If, when men work in harmony with their wives, daughters and sisters, they establish a Woman's Rights organization, then it certainly is such. In the Grange woman is man's equal in all things, according to the measure of her capacity. She may fill any office to which she may be elected. She has an equal right to speak and vote on all questions, and her counsel and advice is always listened to with deference and weighed according to its merits. No organization has ever promised so much to woman as this; and no class of persons have such need of something of this kind as farmers' wives. There is an unwritten history in every household, more especially in a new country, connected with woman's duties and responsibility in the family. She is weighed down with a multitude of cares; her life one unceasing round of labor, much of it unromantic in the extreme; often burdened with the care and responsibilities of a young and growing family of children. She has hitherto been quite deprived of variety and the relief and stimulus afforded by it, so essential to a well balanced and harmonious existence. Woman is eminently a social being. Man with his greater variety of occupations, may live comfortably with less social intercourse; but woman can not dispense with it without detriment to her intellectual and physical life.

STATISTICS OF THE ORDER.

The following is a list of the number of Granges in the several states, as reported from the National Secretary's office, March 31, 1874.

Alabama	528	New Hampshire	25
Arkansas	329	New Jersey	75
California	104	New York	154
Connecticut	1	North Carolina	303
Delaware	4	Ohio	761
Florida	44	Oregon	130
Georgia	593	Pennsylvania	181
Illinois	1,324	South Carolina	259
Indiana	1,763	Tennessee	688
Iowa	1,955	Texas	262
Kansas	1,220	Vermont	100
Kentucky	779	Virginia	101
Louisiana	96	West Virginia	35
Maine	9	Wisconsin	457
Maryland	59	Colorado	55
Massachusetts	38	Dakota	40
Michigan	357	Washington	23
Minnesota	499	Canada	12
Mississippi	571	Idaho	2
Missouri	1,832	Montana	9
Nebraska	554

Making in all 16,400 Subordinate Granges. The whole number of members at that date somewhat exceed 1,000,000. Not far from one-tenth part of this number are in Iowa. Several other states are, however, rapidly approaching her in numbers. The Granges average 50 members each, as a general statement.

Below will be found the date of the organization of the several State Granges, and the name of the first Master elected:

Alabama—Nov., 1873. W. H. Chambers.
Arkansas—June, 1873. John T. Jones.
California—Feb., 1873. J. W. A. Wright.
Florida—Nov., 1873. B. T. Wardlaw.
Georgia—April, 1873. T. J. Smith.
Illinois—March, 1873. Alonzo Golder.
Indiana— —— 1872. John Wier.
Iowa—Jan., 1871. D. W. Adams.
Kansas— —— 1872. F. H. Dumbald.
Kentucky—Nov., 1873. M. D. Davie.
Louisiana—Dec., 1873. H. W. L. Lewis.
Maine—April, 1873. Nelson Ham.
Maryland—Jan., 1873. Jas. T. Moore.
Massachusetts—Dec., 1873. T. L. Allis.
Michigan—April, 1873. S. F. Brown.
Minnesota—Feb., 1869. T. A. Thompson.
Mississippi—March, 1872. A. J. Vaughan.
Missouri—May, 1873. T. R. Allen.
Nebraska—Aug., 1872. Wm. B. Porter.
New Hampshire—Dec., 1873. Dudley T. Chase.
New Jersey—Nov., 1873. Edward Howland.
New York—Nov., 1873. Geo. D. Hinkley.
North Carolina—July, 1873. Columbus Mills.
Ohio—April, 1873. S. H. Ellis.
Oregon—Sept., 1873. Daniel Clark.
Pennsylvania—Sept., 1873. L. B. Mauger.
South Carolina—Oct., 1872. Thomas Taylor.
Kentucky—July, 1873. Wm. Maxwell.
Texas—Oct., 1873. J. B. Johnson.
Vermont—July, 1872. E. P. Colton.
Virginia—Dec., 1873. J. W. White.
West Virginia—Oct., 1873. B. M. Kitchen.
Wisconsin—Oct., 1873. John Cochrane.
Colorado—Jan., 1874. R. Q. Tenny.
Dakota—Nov., 1873. E. B. Grew.

[It will be seen by the above statistics that Iowa has the largest number of Subordinate Granges, 1,955, Nebraska approaching nearest to this number, the Subordinate Granges in the latter state being 1,832. Although the movement began in Washington, and extended to Pennsylvania, thence to Western New York, and from there to Chicago and Minnesota, and did not reach Iowa till early in 1871, yet Iowa from that time forward took a leading part in the movement, and, after the first brief season of discouragement had passed, moved rapidly to the front rank of the Order in the United States, under such able and indefatigable leaders as Col. A. B. Smedley, Dudley W. Adams, Wm. Duane Wilson, J. C. Aldbott and others. We regret that we have not the statistics of the Order in Iowa, showing the Granges by counties, and giving a complete list of the officers and leading men.

The chief idea of the Order, as a co-operative association for the benefit and information of the agricultural classes, has been carried out quite extensively in Iowa, and in many places stores and other establishments on the co-operative plan have been quite successful.—W. W. C.]

DUBUQUE COUNTY.

This county is situated on the Mississippi River, in the third tier of counties south from the Minnesota line. It is bounded north partly by Clayton County, northwest and east by the Mississippi River, south by Jackson, and west by Delaware County. Dubuque contains the following seventeen townships, viz.: Cascade, Centre, Concord, Dodge, Iowa, Jefferson, Julien, Liberty, Masalem, New Vienna, Peru, Prairie Creek, Table Mound, Taylor, Vernon, Washington and Whitewater, all fully six miles square, except Peru and Masalem, which are rounded by the channel of the Mississippi. The area of the county is therefore about 612 square miles, or 391,680 acres.

STREAMS.

The Little Maquoketa and its numerous branches water the northern and central portions of the county, while the larger stream of the same name and its tributaries run through the southern, southeastern and western townships. There is a considerable amount of water-power on both sides of the Little and Big Maquoketa and their branches.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The nature of the surface and soil varies considerably in different portions of the county. In the northwestern townships the streams have cut deep valleys, exposing the rocks in steep bluffs; the surface is therefore quite broken, and a large part of it well timbered, mostly with oak of good quality. The soil of these townships is rather sandy, except in the river bottoms, where it is of the most fertile description. Julien township (T. 89, R. 2, E.), wherein Dubuque is situated, is mostly high rolling prairie with very little timber, except on the bluffs, which border on the Mississippi, and mark the line of out-crop of the Niagara limestone. The township immediately west of this (T. 89, R. 1, E.) is very much broken and intersected with deep ravines. It is almost entirely covered with timber of vigorous growth, and a great variety of species. Farther west in the same tier of townships, the country becomes more elevated and less broken; the proportion of timbered land to prairie constantly increasing. In the southern half of the county, the same gradual passage from a broken timbered region to the high rolling prairie takes place in going from the east to the west. The central and western townships are almost entirely prairie, except in the extreme southwestern corner of the county, where the Maquoketa River and its tributaries have cut deep into the rocks.

GEOLOGY.

The geological formations exposed in this county include all the groups from the Trenton to the Niagara limestone. The former is the lowest which makes its appearance. It is seen along the Mississippi in the neighborhood of Dubuque, and at Eagle Point, two miles above, where it has been quarried; the thickness of the exposure above low water mark is from twenty to thirty feet. This is all that need be said in this place about the Trenton, as the Galena, or lead-bearing limestone, the formation next above, is that which gives to the geology of this county its peculiar character.

The Galena limestone is finely exposed along the bluffs of the Mississippi for the whole length of the county, and extends into Clayton County to the neighborhood of McGregor. It is also seen on the Little Maquoketa and its branches, and the smaller streams emptying directly into the Mississippi. At Buena Vista the whole height of the bluffs which border the river is of Galena limestone. But at a distance of between two and three miles from the river, the precipitous cliffs of the Niagara limestone may be seen, and can be followed in a southeasterly direction, passing about seven miles west of Dubuque and gradually approaching the river again, and finally reaching it a little south of the Tete des Morts Valley in Jackson County.

The space thus enclosed between the Niagara limestone and the Mississippi, forming a belt some eight or ten miles wide in its widest part, is chiefly occupied by the Galena limestone, which may also be traced for some distance up all the valleys of the streams running down from the Niagara plateau.

In its lithological character the Galena limestone is almost a pure dolomite, containing a small percentage of siliceous substances intermixed with the double carbonate of lime and magnesia, and tinged of a light grayish color with a little carbonate of iron, when it has not been exposed, but which soon changes to a light buff by the oxidation of the iron when acted upon by the atmosphere.

A thickness of a little over 250 feet of this formation is exposed at Dubuque, which is probably its maximum thickness.

Of the Niagara limestone, overlying the Galena, we need say but little in this connection. This formation occupies all the elevated prairie regions of Dubuque County, composing about three-fourths of its surface. The line of out crop is well marked, and may be traced in a range of precipitous bluffs, having a very irregular outline, and with occasional outlying masses, in a direction parallel with Turkey River, and at a distance of from one to two miles from it, diagonally across the county, gradually curving in towards the Mississippi to the south of Dubuque, when it reaches the river about five miles below the city, in a high and precipitous bluff. The numerous small streams which descend from the elevated plateau of the Niagara have cut deep down into the rocks so that the lower formations may be followed up the valleys far above the point where the Niagara occupies the general level of the country.

The St. Peter sandstone is exposed a few feet within the limits of the county, and the Cincinnati (formerly supposed to be the Hudson River) shales have quite an extensive area in conjunction with the Trenton and Galena limestones.

LEAD.

Dubuque County being the principal lead-mining section of Iowa, it is proper here to state a few facts with regard to this mineral product. The area of the lead region in the Northwest is about four thousand square miles, and includes the cities of Dubuque and Galena, and a number of smaller towns that have grown up from the wealth derived from mining. This region is over sixty miles in diameter, divided by the Mississippi River, parts of it being in Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin. Some of the most valuable mines of this region are worked beneath cultivated fields, and the district generally, unlike most mining countries, is in a rich agricultural country. This region contains mineral enough to supply the world with lead for ages. The existence of the lead deposit of this region was probably known to the Aborigines, but it does not appear that they ever made any use of the metal till after the advent of the white miners. The first mention of the discovery of lead in this portion of the country occurs in an account of the expedition of Nicholas Parrot, who, in 1689, was sent by De LaBarre, Governor of Canada, to establish friendly relations among the Indians of the Upper Mississippi, and who erected Fort St. Nicholas, and took formal possession of the Northwest in the name of the King of France. A second discovery was made by LeSueur, a French explorer, in his famous mining expedition to the Blue Earth River, Minnesota, in 1700.

About twenty years after this period mining was actually commenced in the Missouri lead region. As early as 1822 the lead mines began to be worked at Galena by Col. Johnson, of Kentucky, and a few others. Thirty-four years earlier, however, in 1788, Julien Dubuque, a French Indian trader, of Prairie du Chien, commenced with a colony of miners to work the lead mines on the site of the flourishing city which now bears his name, and continued there till his death in 1810. (See Early History of Dubuque, in this work.) The lead mines of Dubuque have been almost constantly worked for eighty-seven years, and have been a source of great profit to the inhabitants. They were under the control of the War Department of the United States as Indian possessions till June 1, 1833, and were subsequently for a time under the management of an agent appointed by Congress. During this period a geological survey was made of the entire lead region of this section for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the productive lead formation, in pursuance of an act of Congress approved in 1839.

The occurrence of lead ore in this mineral region is limited to the groups between the Cincinnati shales and the lower sandstones. Some fair specimens have been found in the exposures of the lower magnesian, higher up the river than Dubuque County; but lead has never been found in paying quantities in this region except in the Galena limestone. The terms "dice-mineral," "cog-mineral," "sheet-mineral," "chunk-mineral," and the like are names given by miners to the different forms of lead ore, as it is found in the mines.

The freedom of the Galena, or lead ore, in this section from mixture with other metals is remarkable. Sulphuret of zinc is almost the only one that occurs in any quantity intimately associated with the Galena, and a large majority of the mines do not show even a trace of this. Hence the purity and softness of the metallic lead of this region, and the high price it bears in the markets, compared with most of the imported metal.

The simplest form in which lead ore is found in this region is the vertical or upright crevice, which is usually from one to three inches in thickness, and then gradually closing up, the ore thins out and disappears. It occurs chiefly in horizontal lodes, extending from a few rods to miles in length, of a thickness varying from a few feet—or even inches—to yards in width and at intervals expanding into what may be called caves in the rocks. The general direction of these lodes is on nearly the same horizontal line. The "openings," as these expansions are called, whether containing ore or not, are frequently in a vertical series of two or three, and sometimes four, separated by layers of harder rocks. In such instances the upper one usually contains the largest amount of mineral. Sometimes the cavities are connected with irregular vertical openings called "chimneys," which are often lined with the ore. In such cases, within the same range, the mineral has been found to occupy a vertical space in the rocks of more than sixty feet.

The two principal forms in which the lead ore occurs in this vicinity are the irregular, massive and the crystalline, the latter being almost invariably a regular cube.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

Soon after Wisconsin became a territory, July 4, 1836, that part of its domain lying west of the Mississippi River, was divided into two counties—Dubuque and Des Moines, the boundary line between them being at the foot of Rock Island. Dubuque County then embraced all the northern half of the state, and by estimate of population was entitled to a representation in the Territorial Legislature, of three members in the Council and five members in the House. The following is a list of the places named in the proclamation of Governor Dodge, as election precincts: The 1st, Town of Dubuque, house of Robert Bourne; 2d, headwaters of Catfish Creek, house of H. T. Camp; 3d, Peru, house of M. Patterson; 4th, Turkey River, house of Robert Hatheid; 5th, Prairie La Porte; 6th, Dunrango; 7th, Belevue; 8th, North Fork Maquoketa River; 9th, Higginsport; 10th, Upper end of the Rapids; 11th, Brophy's Ferry on the Wapsipinicon River; 12th, Cedar River.

FIRST ELECTION.

The first election was held October 10, 1836, with the following result:

Civil Officers.—Delegate in Congress—Geo. W. Jones; Members of the Council—James Foley, Thomas McCraney, and Thomas McNight; Representatives—Loring Wheeler, Hardin Nowlin, H. T. Camp, P. H. Engle, and Patrick Quigley.

Militia Officers.—Colonel, W. W. Chapman; Lieutenant Colonel, Paul Cain; Major, Wm. S. Anderson.

JUDICIAL.

Under Wisconsin, the first judge of the District Court was David Irwin; Clerk, Warner Lewis. The first term of this Court was held in Dubuque, May 1, 1837. The first Grand Jury empanelled consisted of the following named persons:

Thomas Childs, foreman; Paul Cain, Wm. Smith, John Parker, David Sleator, David Hogan, J. L. Langworthy, Chester Sage, Ambrose Kennedy, August Bowers, James Smith, L. J. Ackron, Thomas McCraney, J. E. Miller, Wm. Carter, C. C. Bellows, Andrew J. Divine, Jacob Hamilton, Reuben Estis, Matthias Ham, Rufus Miller, James Miller, John Wharton, Thos. R. Brasher, Lyman Dillon.

The first term of Probate Court was held at Dubuque, January 10, 1835. E. Lockwood, Judge. Joseph T. Fales was appointed his successor in 1838.

Under Iowa Territorial Government, the first District Court held at Dubuque was on April 15, 1839, Judge Thomas S. Wilson, presiding; Phillip S. Dade, Clerk, I. V. Berry, District Attorney. John King was the first Judge of County Court after Iowa became a territory.

The first Circuit Court was held at Dubuque, January, 1869. The same year, by enactment of the State Legislature, County Courts were abolished throughout the state, and the office of County Auditor created. Winslow T. Barker was made Circuit Judge, and H. A. Rooney, Clerk. Stephen Hempsted was elected to the auditorship.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The first Board of County Supervisors met May 30, 1836, and consisted of F. Gehon, Wm. Smith, and John Paul. Warner Lewis was appointed clerk. By records of that time the historian finds grocers and victualing house keepers taxed $10 per annum, payable quarterly. On the list is made mention of thirty-eight groceries, etc., that afforded revenue to the county. Also in their proceedings of that year can be found a pauper and insane expense account of $35.38. The first jail built cost $577.25. On June 11, same year, plans and specifications for a court house were received. John A. Wright was appointed assessor and collector, and a tax levied of three-fourths per cent. on valuation of property assessed. At their meeting April 1, 1837, Geo. W. Cummins was appointed Sheriff, and a bill of F. Gehon amounting to $4.00, allowed in full for service as County Treasurer for preceding year.

The Territorial tax of the county for 1835 was $280.00. County taxes for same year, $1,952.78. The amount of $176.00, for territorial taxes, was added and accrued by reason of business institutions being established after the assessment was made.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The old County Commissioners' records, under Wisconsin Territory, showed that a "court house of hewed logs" was ordered to be built, "twenty-six by twenty feet in size, walls to be seven inches thick, first story nine feet high, second story five feet to the beginning of the roof, second story, to be divided into three rooms, lower story to have five seven light windows, and upper story two eight-light windows. Said court house to have a good stout lock, and thumb-latch on the lower door, to be furnished with a circular pine table, two and a half feet wide, and to be finished by October 1, 1836." This was the first court house of Dubuque County. A jail had been erected previously, and in September, 1836, a suit was ordered to be brought to recover damages from parties who had contracted for its erection. The above described court house was never used for judicial purposes, but as a jail, and courts were held in various churches and public halls till 1843, when, according to the best information we can get of the date, the present court house was constructed—or the rear portion of it. In 1854 it was enlarged to its present size. It is built of red brick, and in early times met every requirement in convenience of offices and court room. Such is the wealth and importance of the county, it is probable it will be superseded by a grand temple of justice at no distant day.

At the September term of the County Court, 1856, the contract for the construction of a county jail was awarded, its dimensions to be 35x54 feet, built of stone, two stories high and basement, with three rows of cells, to be completed November 1, 1857, at a cost of $36,000. In course of construction it was found necessary to make additional expenditures in excess of the contract price to the amount of $5,447.47, bringing the cost figures up to $41,458.47. In 1874 the jail was enlarged by adding an apartment for females at a cost of $5,600, and Dubuque has now one of the safest and best constructed jails in the West.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

A county agricultural society was organized in 1854, and the first fair held in the Fall of 1855. Fairs continued to be held annually, except when the State Fair was held at Dubuque in 1861 and '62, until 1870, when they were discontinued, and the small sum remaining in the treasury was turned over to its successor—the Dubuque Agricultural and Manufacturing Exposition. This latter is an important institution, and promises to be of great advantage to the agricultural and manufacturing interests of the Northwest.

Dubuque County has also a farmers' club which was organized in 1860, and is reported in a prosperous condition.

The Early Settler's Association of Dubuque City and County was organized in 1865, and has a membership of over two hundred. This association, through its indefatigable Secretary, Mr. C. Childs, has collected a great amount of valuable information, both historical and biographical, on the early settlement of the city and county, and is doing much to preserve the records of the oldest settled portion of Iowa in a complete form.

President—Benjamin Rupert.

The County Poor House, with twelve acres of land attached, is located about two and a half miles north of Dubuque, and is a large three-story stone building. The number of inmates for 1874, was 52. Expenses for the year, $6,500. The relief granted by the Board of Supervisors outside amounted to $16,000. Steward of the Poor House, Michael Martin.

COUNTY OFFICERS FOR 1875.

FRANK MCLAUGHLIN, Auditor.	L. H. CADY, County Attorney.
V. J. WILLIAMS, Treasurer.	N. W. BOYES, Sup't of Schools.
MICHAEL LIDDY, Sheriff.	W. EVANS, County Surveyor.
PATRICK J. QUIGLEY, Clerk of Court.	J. O'HEA CANTILLON, Coroner.
WARNER LEWIS, Recorder.

SUPERVISORS.

THEOPHILUS CRAWFORD, Chairman. WILLIAM COATES, and MARK SULLIVAN.

CITY OF DUBUQUE.

The City of Dubuque is situated on the west bank of the Mississippi River, four hundred and seventy miles above St. Louis, and is the seat of justice of Dubuque County. It is the oldest, and in point of business and population, if not to say commercial importance, the chief city of Iowa.

The site on which Dubuque is built combines many points of beauty and desirableness of location, being on a plateau or table-land which rises gradually from the river, and at the average distance of about half a mile swells into an almost semi-circular range of bluffs, which rise about two hundred and fifty feet above the river level. While the business portion of the city is situated on the plateau and is compactly and substantially built, containing some costly and elegant blocks and one of the finest streets in the state, the most attractive part, on account of fine residences, gardens and ornamented grounds, extends up the sides and over the bluffs, presenting from this high point of observation a picturesque and beautiful appearance.

The improvements which have been made in the way of decoration and grading have not only enlarged the area of land in front of the city, but have added an artistic effect to the general aspect of the place. The low lands near the river have been raised at considerable cost, a large portion of which has been borne by the different railroad companies, in making room for a suitable location for their business and buildings.

The river at this point runs almost due south, so that the principal streets of the city are nearly in a line with the cardinal points of the compass.

Dubuque contains a population of about twenty-five thousand inhabitants, and possesses all the institutions, comforts, social appliances and business facilities which characterize any city of similar dimensions in any part of the country. The growth and progress of such a city from its humble beginning, by a few lead miners scarcely more than forty years ago, to its present status among the flourishing commercial centers of the West, must be a matter of interest, not only to the present population, numbering as it does many survivors and descendants of the early settlers, but to the public generally. We can not of course go into details, for our article would swell into volumes were we to attempt to write all the particulars of the History of Dubuque. The most that we can do is to give a brief outline of the more important facts.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settlement in this vicinity was made by a colony of miners from Prairie du Chien under Julien Dubuque in 1788—one hundred and fifteen years after the discovery of these shores by Marquette and Joliet. The entire territory now belonging to Iowa was then a part of the Spanish province of Louisiana, and the northern portion of the present state was occupied by the Fox Indians. From the representative chiefs and braves of these Indians, assembled in council at Prairie du Chien, September 22, 1788, Julien Dubuque obtained a permit to work the lead mines of this vicinity, and in that year sent here nine Frenchmen whom he had employed as miners.

The extent of the mining territory claimed by Dubuque, as shown by a petition to Baron Carondelet, Governor of Louisiana, for a confirmation of his purchase from the Indians, in 1795, was defined as "about seven leagues" along the Mississippi, extending from the Little Maquoketa, several miles north of the city, to the mouth of the Tetes des Morts, then known as the Mesquabysnonques, several miles below. The distance between these points is about sixteen miles. The claim also extended "three leagues" in width from the river, including the prairie and bluffs on which the city is situated and nearly all the lead-bearing land in the vicinity.

On the petition above referred to, a mining privilege was granted to Dubuque, September 10, 1796, which, however, was never confirmed by the Spanish Government.

Dubuque lived on good terms with the Indians, acquired great influence over them, was a sort of patriarchal chief in his colony, collected around him a number of French and half-breeds, built a furnace for smelting lead, a horse-power mill, and carried on some trade with the Indians in the sale of goods obtained in exchange for lead at St. Louis.

In October, 1804, he transferred to Auguste Choteau, of St. Louis, a part of his interest in the mines—about seven-eighths of the whole claim, which was decided by a majority of the Board of Land Commissioners in September, 1806, to be a valid claim of the Spanish grants. The tract would probably exceed 20,000 acres.

Dubuque died at the mines in 1810. He was buried on a high bluff near the Indian village, at the mouth of Catfish Creek, in a stone vault, and a red cedar cross was erected near by, on which was the following inscription in French: "Julien Dubuque, miner, of the mines of Spain, DIED 24th of March, 1810, aged 45 years and 6 months."

For the next fifteen years little was done by the French miners, although many followers of Dubuque remained in the vicinity nearly twenty years. The settlement made by Dubuque was broken up in the fierce Indian wars between the rival tribes of the Northwest. But the Indian owners, sometimes driven away by their enemies, the Sioux, at length gained strength enough to maintain their position, and carried on mining to a considerable extent. They claimed that Dubuque had only a life-interest in the privilege they had granted him.

In 1830 the Langworthy brothers and a few others obtained permission from the Indians to explore the lead mines around Dubuque. They crossed the Mississippi at that time swimming their horses by the side of a canoe. It was the first flow, or the first title of civilization on these Western shores. There was not then a white settler north of the Des Moines, and west of the Mississippi to Astoria on the Columbia River, with the exception of Indian traders. On their arrival they found but few traces of Dubuque's settlement remaining. His followers had buried their leader twenty years before and had all departed. The Indians had all along guarded this mining district with scrupulous care. They would not allow the white people to visit the place, even to look at the old grass-grown diggings of Julien Dubuque, much less would they permit mining to be done or settlements to be made. When these white settlers arrived, however, the place had been abandoned by the Indians. Their moccasin tracks were yet fresh in the prairie trails, along which the retreating race had fled on their mysterious mission westward, and the decaying embers were yet cooling on the deserted hearths within their lonely and silent wigwams.

Where Dubuque now stands cornfields stretched along the bluffs and up the ravines; a thousand acres skirting the shore was covered with tall grass like a field of waving grain. The stalks of corn were of the last years' growth; the ears had been plucked and they, withered and blighted, remained sad memorials of a vanished race. A large Indian village was then standing at the mouth of Catfish Creek. About seventy buildings constructed of poles and the bark of trees remained to tell of those who had so recently inhabited them. Their council-house, though rude, was ample in dimensions and contained a great number of furnaces in which kettles had been placed in the preparation of feasts of peace or war. On the inside of the bark covering this council room were many paintings or rude inscriptions, representing animals of the chase, and their wild sports and feats in war, where chief met chief in the bloody fray. Could this rude record of their national life have been preserved on the canvas or by the Daguerrean art, it would have been an interesting relic. But it was burned down in the Summer of 1830 by some visitors to the place, much to the regret of the more thoughtful of the first settlers.

At the time of the arrival of these first settlers the land here was not in the actual possession of the United States. The Indian title had not been extinguished; and, being outside of any state or territorial government, the settlers were obliged to make such temporary laws as the exigencies of their situation demanded. The first act resembling civil legislation within the limits of the state, was done at this point in June, 1830. The miners met by the side of an old cotton-wood drift log, situated on the shore at the Jones street levee, and appointed a committee to prepare such regulations as might be deemed expedient. The committee reported the following, the original of which is still preserved. It was written by J. L. Langworthy on a half sheet of coarse unruled paper, the old log around which they assembled being used for a desk:

"We, a committee having been chosen to draft certain rules and regulations, by which we as miners will be governed, and having duly considered the subject do unanimously agree that we will be governed by the regulations on the east side of the Mississippi River, with the following exceptions, to wit:

ARTICLE 1. That each and every man shall hold 200 yards square of ground by working said ground one day in six.

ART. 2. We further agree that there shall be chosen, by the majority of the miners present, a person who shall hold this article and who shall grant letters of arbitration on application having been made, and that said letters of arbitration shall be obligatory on the parties concerned so applying.

To the above we, the undersigned, subscribe.

J. L. LANGWORTHY,
H. F. LANDER,
JAMES McPHEETERS,
SAMUEL SCALES,
E. M. WREN."

The person chosen in pursuance of the second article of the above was Dr. Jarote. Hence, the doctor was the first person in the territory clothed by the people with the judicial power to grant letters of arbitration.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE.

But mining operations, although proving very successful, and attracting considerable numbers to this locality, were soon interfered with by the military commander at the nearest garrison under authority of the War Department. The west side of the river belonged by treaty to the Sac and Fox Indians, who, through certain of their chiefs, had previously ceded to the United States all their territory lying south of the Wisconsin River, between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi. Hence, the Government to preserve peace on the frontiers, as well as to protect the Indians in their rights, ordered the military to disperse the intruders from the Dubuque mines. This order was executed by Col. Zachary Taylor, then in command at Prairie du Chien, who about the first of July sent an officer to the mines, by whom in a formal manner he forbade settlement and commanded the miners to re-cross the river. He gave them notice that, if they did not leave the mines within a week, they would be driven off by force. The miners were not disposed to relinquish their claims, the rich lodes of lead which they had already discovered and opened, and from which they had taken large quantities of mineral. Therefore, in a few days Col. Taylor sent a detachment of troops to enforce his order. All but three of the miners, anticipating the movement, had recrossed the river, and from its east bank saw the steamer bearing the troops land on the west shore. The three who had lingered an hour too long were, however, permitted to escape.

A military force was then stationed at Dubuque to keep the settlers from returning. The Indians ventured to the place, sure of protection, and were encouraged to mine upon the lodes and prospects opened by the late white occupants. From one mine alone it is said that the Indians obtained more than a million pounds of ore, in which they were assisted by the traders and settlers along the river with implements and teams; while the discoverers—those who had reopened these mines after they had been abandoned more than twenty years by the French miners—were compelled to look across the Father of Waters and see the fruits of their industry and enterprise consumed by the Indians. They probably lost in this manner more than $200,000 worth of mineral. The government troops guarded the mines the remainder of the year 1830 and 1831. But the Black Hawk war commencing in June, 1832, they were withdrawn to protect the settlements in Illinois and Wisconsin. Thus the same soldiers who protected the Indians at Dubuque, were compelled to fight them on the opposite side of the river; the same force that compelled the white settlers to respect the treaty on the west side of the river had to punish the Indians for its violation on the east side; for they had embarked in an insane attempt to regain possession of the lands they had ceded east of the Mississippi by the slaughter and massacre of the white inhabitants. Many of the miners who had been driven from Dubuque joined the volunteers under Col. Dodge, of Wisconsin. The war lasted only a few weeks, when it was terminated by the surrender of Black Hawk at the battle of Bad-ax, in August, 1832.

THE BLACK HAWK PURCHASE.

As a result of this war the Indians not only failed to regain by treachery and perfidy the lands which they had sold east of the Mississippi, but lost a large tract of their possessions in Iowa. The treaty which secured the Black Hawk Purchase followed in September. It was made by Gen. Joseph M. Street, on behalf of the Government, at Rock Island, with Black Hawk and the chiefs of the Sac and Fox Indians, and included that territory bordering on the west side of the Mississippi, extending back a distance of about forty miles, and comprising the eastern portion of the present State of Iowa.

RETURN TO THE MINES.

After the close of the war the Indians mostly abandoned the neighborhood of Dubuque, and some of the settlers who had been driven off in 1830 returned in the Fall of 1832 to take possession of their former claims. They built houses and erected furnaces; large quantities of lead were prepared for the market; and the industry and activity about the mines began to make them a noted place in this section of Iowa. In January, 1832, however, the troops were again sent from Prairie du Chien, to remove the miners a second time, on the ground that the treaty with the Indians would not take effect till June 1, 1833. This was a great hardship to the settlers, as they were compelled to leave their cabins in mid-winter. Many re-crossed the river and did not return; a few moved their lead to an island near the west side of the river, and there built rude huts of poles, in which to live till the opening of navigation in the Spring should enable them to float the products of their toil to St. Louis. Among these were the Langworthy brothers, who had accumulated and had on hand three hundred thousand pounds of lead.

Lieutenant Covington, the officer in command, ordered some of the cabins to be pulled down and wagons and other property destroyed; but it is just to Colonel Taylor to say that he disapproved of this wanton action, and superseded Covington by appointing Lieutenant George Wilson to take his place. This latter officer, so far as was compatible with his strict military duty, pursued a course just and friendly to the pioneers.

THE GOVERNMENT AGENT.

On the first of June, 1833, the treaty took effect; the military force was withdrawn, and the superintendence of the mines was placed under John P. Sheldon, who had been appointed Government Agent. Mr. Sheldon proceeded to grant permits to the miners and licenses to the smelters—the permits coinciding very nearly with the regulations adopted by the committee in 1830. They entitled the holder to have possession of two hundred square yards of land, wherever he chose, if not occupied by others, and required him to deliver his mineral to a licensed smelter. The smelter was required to give bonds to pay to the Government the value of six per cent. of all the lead he manufactured. This tax upon the miners produced great dissatisfaction. As pioneers they suffered hardships and privations enough in opening the way for the advance of civilization into a new country, without being subjected to the imposition of a Government tax on the means of their subsistence, when the Government could better afford to aid them than to gain a revenue from their scanty resources. The measure became so unpopular that it was abolished in about ten years, and no further tax was afterward imposed.

PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.

The permanent settlement of Dubuque dates from 1833. During that year about five hundred persons came to the place, one hundred and fifty of them from Galena. Notwithstanding the prevalence of cholera that year, and fever also in the Fall, most of the surviving miners and other residents determined to make this spot their home. In May, 1834, the people assembled and named the place Dubuque. The first survey of the town was made by George W. Harrison. It included thirty blocks of land, mostly in what is now the lower part of the city. The immigration during 1834, the establishment of many other branches of business besides mining, and the attention given to Dubuque by the outside public generally, began to point to it as a place whose prospects in the future were sufficiently promising to induce many to select it as their future home.

LYNCH LAW.

Every new community not included under an organized form of government has its period of transition from first settlement to a condition of law and order. Such was the experience at the Dubuque lead mines from 1833 to 1836. During that period, not only was there no legal government extending its protection over the settlement, for the punishment of offenders and the security of the rights of the people, but the influences of religion and the salutary restraints of family relations were in a great measure wanting. Sunday was made a holiday; drinking and gambling were common practices; the vices common to mining districts were prevalent; both the miners, and the desperadoes who lived by filching their earnings at the gaming table, carried bowie-knives and pistols. It is not to be wondered at that violence and bloodshed, as well as lesser crimes and misdemeanors, should have been of frequent occurrence in such a state of society, and should mark a chapter in the early history of the Dubuque mines.

During this period a man named O'Connor murdered his business partner, O'Keefe, by shooting him dead with a rifle. A general meeting of the settlers was called; a man was appointed to perform the part of sheriff; O'Connor was arrested; a temporary court was immediately organized; twelve men were selected as jurors; a lawyer appointed to defend the prisoner; a trial was had; the murderer was found guilty and condemned to die. After some time allowed him to prepare for death, by the aid of a priest of his own choice, he was hung on a gallows erected on a mound, at the corner of what is now White and Seventh Streets, in the presence of several hundred people. The mound and the bones of the murderer, who was buried beneath it, were removed in later years to make room for the erection of the Adams House on the same spot.

Lynching for minor offences was frequent. A fellow named Leck stole a canoe belonging to Thomas McCraney, and loading it with stolen lead, commenced a voyage down the river with a view of taking it to market. Leck was pursued to Rock Island, where he had sold his cargo. He was there arrested and brought back; tried before some one representing Judge Lynch, and sentenced to receive thirty-nine lashes. Mr. Enoch, who acted as temporary sheriff, inflicted the punishment. The whipping-post was a small oak tree on Main Street, not far from the residence known as that of Judge Dyer.

Among the murders committed on account of claim difficulties was that of Woodbury Massey, by a Mr. Smith and his son. Massey had purchased a lot and mineral lode. Smith and his son claimed it under the plea of some previous right. A suit was brought by the Smiths, and the magistrates awarded the title to Massey. The sheriff gave Massey possession of the premises. The Smiths, exasperated, concealed themselves on the ground, armed with guns, and on the approach of Massey shot him through the heart. The murderers were arrested and taken before the next session of the Circuit Court, then held at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, by Judge Irwin. The counsel for the prisoners objected to the jurisdiction of the court, and was sustained by the judge. The prisoners were discharged, and left for a time the neighborhood of the Dubuque mines. Mr. Massey was a very highly respected citizen. One of the younger brothers of Mr. Massey, feeling outraged at the tardiness of legal justice, resolved to take the punishment of the elder Smith into his own hands. He was then living in Galena. On seeing Smith pass by the door one day, he seized a rifle, and rushing into the street, fired and shot him. He had caused Smith to be previously warned of his intention, and to keep out of the way. Public sentiment generally exonerated Mr. Massey. He was not even arrested, but has lived in the country a quiet and respected citizen.

Information of the event soon brought the younger Smith to Dubuque to avenge the death of his father. He was known to be, like his father, of a rash temper, and it was understood that he had determined to kill, on the first opportunity, one of the brothers of Mr. Massey. These rumors reached a young sister of the Massey brothers, who by her affection was roused to form the daring and chivalrous resolution of preventing the murder of her brother by the assassination of Smith, wherever he might be found. Disguising herself for the occasion, and without informing any one of her purpose, she went into the streets in search of Smith, whom she did not even know by sight. She engaged the services of a boy who knew Smith to point him out. The boy designated him by his dress in passing a store. She well knew Smith's resolute and desperate character, yet she boldly entered the store, approached him where he was sitting, and in a voice ominous with indignant emotion, asked if he was Smith. He was about replying and rising from his seat, when she quickly drew a pistol, presented it toward his breast, fired, and retired from his presence. Smith fell, and for a moment it was supposed that he was dead. She had appeared so suddenly as to take Smith and those present entirely by surprise, so that they had no idea of her intentions until she had fired, and having retired from their sight as quickly as she came, the men present did not even notice which way she went. Smith was saved from death only by a thick pocket-book which he had in his breast pocket, in which the ball lodged. He soon recovered sufficiently to rush into the street in pursuit of his assailant. Meantime she had sought protection in the house of Mr. John Johnson, a merchant, and received also the protection of other citizens. She subsequently went to Illinois, and resided there with some of her relations. Smith was much injured by the shot, and though he lived several years, his death was thought to have been hastened by the effect of the wound. Miss Massey married a Mr. Williamson, formerly a resident of Dubuque. Both she and her husband are now dead. Her name, Louisa, was given to one of the river counties of the State.

Other cases of murder occurred during this period—that, for example, of John O'Mara by Patrick Brennen. The latter struck the former a fatal blow with a club, killing him almost instantly. He, however, escaped the self-constituted police authority, which in those early times was a sort of necessity. This tribunal took cognizance of a man who was known to shamefully ill-treat his family. He was taken, tarred and feathered and sent across the river.

These instances are a few that have been preserved, by tradition, of the exercise of lynch-law, in the infancy of Dubuque. At best it was only a necessity of the times, and as such had the sanction and support of those who, in a later stage of society, were the most law-abiding citizens. In its exercise it was always under the restraint of justice and humanity, and was administered with moderation. Capital punishment was not inflicted, nor has that penalty yet been enforced in Dubuque city or county, except in the single instance of the execution of O'Connor, before alluded to.

LEGAL AUTHORITY.

Legal authority can hardly be said to have assumed sway in this locality till the inauguration of the territorial government of Wisconsin, July 4th, 1836. A few justices had been appointed under the authority of the territory of Michigan, among whom was Ira Williams, in the fall of 1834. He was the first justice in Dubuque. The first warrant under judicial authority was issued by him, October 28, 1834. Patrick Quigley was appointed Justice of the Peace, October 29, 1835. His commission was issued by John S. Horner, Secretary and Acting Governor of the Territory of Michigan, and residing at Detroit. About the same time Gen. Warner Lewis was also appointed Justice of the Peace.

The officers of the territory were: Gen. Henry Dodge, Governor; John S. Horner, Secretary; Col. Charles Dunn, Chief Justice; Mr. Hoffman and Daniel Irwin, Associate Justices, and Capt. F. Gehon, Marshal. At that time there was not a brick building in Dubuque, few frame buildings, and no public building suitable to hold court in. The first session of the District Court having jurisdiction over what is now the northern half of Iowa, was held in a log building on the corner of Main and Fourth Streets. The first term commenced in May, 1837. The first official act of Judge Irwin was to order "that the seal, of which the following is a copy, be the seal of this court." The "copy" referred to was a common wafer stuck upon the page, with a piece of coarse white paper like that of a book, over it, and an impression made upon it with a silver twenty-five cent piece.

Gen. Warner Lewis was appointed clerk of the court. It is said that he used to carry his justice's docket in his hat, so as to be ready to hold court at any time and place when the administration of justice required his presence. Be that as it may, he has left a volume of well kept court records in the archives of the District Court.

There were but few attorneys in Dubuque at that time. The records show that the first session of the court held by Judge Irwin was attended by John Turney, Joseph P. Hoge and Thomas Campbell, attorneys from Galena. They are either dead now or have moved away from the country.

When the Territory of Wisconsin was organized it was expected that Dubuque, from its central location, would be made the capital. That honor, however, was conferred upon Belmont, a place now of only two or three houses, in Wisconsin. The members of the council elected for the first session of the legislature to represent this portion of the territory, were John Foley, Thomas McCraney and Thomas McKnight. The representatives were Lorin Wheeler, Hardin Nowlin, P. H. Engle, Patrick Quigley and H. T. Camp.

FIRST FOURTH OF JULY.

The day from which Wisconsin dates her political existence was celebrated, together with that of our national independence, with grand ceremonies, at Dubuque, July 4, 1836. Dr. Stephen Langworthy was president, and E. Lockwood marshal of the day. The proceedings, reported in The Visitor, filled over seven columns. William W. Coriell, Esq., delivered the oration, in the Catholic Church of St. Raphael, the walls of which were then erected, though the roof was not completed. Hon. W. R. Prentice read the Declaration. A dinner was partaken of by a large concourse on the green in front of the town. Many toasts were proposed and happily responded to, with an eloquence and patriotism which have hardly been improved upon by later Dubuque orators. We should like to quote some specimens of the speeches made on that occasion, did space permit.

On the 16th of July, 1836, a public dinner was given at Dubuque to Gov. Henry Dodge.

PROGRESS.

In 1835 a large number of immigrants, from the Eastern States and cities, came, many of whom became permanent citizens. In June, 1836, a Library Association was formed, at a meeting held in the Methodist meeting house.

S. Hempstead, since Governor of Iowa, Hon. John S. Horner, Acting Governor, and William W. Coriell, published their cards as practicing attorneys, at Dubuque. The population of the town, in the Fall of 1836, was 1,300. There were four principal streets, seven cross streets, and fifty stores and groceries, fifty-five dwelling houses, and one warehouse. In 1838 Dubuque began to assume the character of a well regulated community. Temperance and literary societies had been formed and public amusements begun to attract attention. An amateur dramatic society had been organized, under the name of the "Iowa Thespian Association." One of the means of promoting the prosperity of Dubuque was the location of the land office here, through the influence of Gen. George W. Jones, Delegate in Congress in 1837-8. In 1839, the first fire engine was purchased by the town, the principal streets were graded, and cross-walks and culverts constructed. In 1841 important harbor improvements were made. On the 5th of May, 1842, the first regularly organized fire company was formed. In 1843 improvements in grading and building culverts on Main, Bluff, Iowa, Clay, Locust and White streets were carried on. In 1844 an appropriation of $7,500 was made by Congress for harbor improvements, which was soon followed by another appropriation of $7,000. In the Fall of 1845 the Fifth Street Market House was erected, and the city for the first time divided into wards—three in number. In the Spring of 1847 the first appointment of city printer was made, the choice falling on A. F. Wood, at that time editor and publisher of the Dubuque Tribune. On the 11th of March, 1847, the first step was taken by the citizens to secure railroad connections with Chicago. A meeting was held and a committee appointed to take action in the matter. In 1848 the first night police was put on duty. In the same year a stock company was formed, and $6,000 subscribed for the first telegraphic connection of this city with the East and South, which was obtained in August, 1848. The Julien House (then the Waples) was opened in 1847; the City Hall in 1848.

In the Spring of 1852, the large immigration to Iowa gave new accessions to the population of Dubuque, and a new impetus to its trade. Wholesale business may be said to have begun in that year. During this year Congress made another appropriation of $15,000 for harbor improvements.

When Dubuque became a city of scarcely 2,000 people, in 1841, there was no railroad in any of the Northwestern States. Both trade and travel followed the river, on account of the cheaper freights and shorter time than by land. Many immigrants from the Eastern States came by the way of the Ohio River, and those who came by the way of the great lakes had still a wagon journey of 200 miles between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi. The farmer immigrants continued to come from the Eastern States, from the earlier settled Northwestern States, and from the South.

By the time Iowa Territory became a state, at the close of 1846, the fame of the lead mines and the fine lands of the lead district, indeed of the whole region around it, had reached thousands of would-be emigrants from the Eastern States and from Europe. From the time when the population of the City of Dubuque was only 2,500, of the county only 8,000, and of the state only 192,214, to the present, when the city has at least 25,000, the county 41,000 and the state over 1,200,000, there has been a steady immigration.

EARLY RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS.

Methodist Denomination.—The Methodists of Dubuque were indebted to the Galena Mission District, of which it was one station, for their first licensed public exponent of Christian truth, in the person of Reverend Barton Randle, who arrived November 6, 1833, and preached for the first time there the following Sabbath evening, at the boarding house of J. M. Harrison. About Christmas of that year the people made up a collection for him of a small sum of money—less than $100—of which a noted gambler contributed $10.

Religious services were well attended, and on Sunday, May 18, 1834, a society of that church was organized, and on June 1, following, the first class meeting was formed. Among the members of the class was Mrs. Charlotte Morgan (colored). The first edifice for religious purposes was erected July 25, 1834. Its dimensions were 20x26 feet in the clear, one story high, of ten feet, of hewn logs, pointed with lime and sand, shingle roof, batten door, two windows, and total cost $255. This church building, when not in use by the Methodists, was open to any other denomination for religious services. It stood in what is now Washington Square, permission having been first obtained from the Superintendent of the Upper Mississippi Lead Mines to occupy the ground on which it stood. It was used, by permission, as a court room, town hall, and school room, being for many years the only place sufficiently commodious to accommodate large public or judicial gatherings. The first quarterly meeting was held November 22 and 23, 1834, Reverend Peter Crews officiating. The first circuit preacher sent by Conference was Reverend N. S. Bastion, in 1838, and his circuit involved a travel of about 400 miles. The first assistant associated on this circuit was Reverend Mr. Smith, in 1838. In 1834-5 Mrs. Elizabeth Atkinson frequently preached. She was licensed by the Primitive Methodist Church of England. She was graceful, eloquent and talented. The compensation to the first preachers here by the Missionary Society was $100 per annum.

The first camp meeting service was observed in the Fall of 1837.

Catholics.—It is difficult to give a strictly correct early history of the first Catholic Church, from 1834 to 1837, by reason of the loss of all the early church records, which were deposited in the Catholic Church at Galena when that structure and contents were destroyed by fire. Our best information is that the first mass was celebrated at the house of Patrick Quigley, and services conducted by Reverend Father McMahon, in 1833. In 1834 the duties of priest were performed by Rev. Father Pitz Maurice. In the same year preparations were made for the erection of a church edifice, and on the 15th of August, 1835, the corner stone of St. Raphael's Church was laid, and the event observed with becoming ceremonies. The building was erected under the financial management and direct personal supervision of the Very Reverend Samuel Muzzuchelli, missionary for the Catholic denomination, who received his authority from Right Reverend Bishop Rosati, of St. Louis.

The building was located on the south side of the present St. Raphael's Cathedral, on Bluff street. It was built of stone, 40x70 feet. The walls were twenty-four feet high. It was designed to accommodate 360 persons. The missionary field of Father Muzzuchelli, embraced Illinois, Western Wisconsin, and Iowa. His jurisdiction west of the Mississippi River ceased July 2, 1837, the date of the consecration of the Reverend Father Mathias Loras as Bishop of the Diocese of Dubuque. Bishop Loras belonged to the nobility of France, and used his private fortune to build up the church and carry out the plans devised by his noble predecessor. He remained bishop of this diocese until the time of his death, in 1858.

Father Muzzuchelli was a man of very superior business talent, energy, and faithfulness to his mission, and did more to perpetuate and build up his church in the great Northwest than all other influences put together. Other noble and worthy fathers filled the responsible position to which they were appointed, but never long retained until 1840. The total number of members of the Catholic denomination, including children, at the close of the year 1839, did not exceed 300, and the total number in Iowa more than 400.

Congregational.—In August, 1833, Rev. Aratus Kent, of Galena, preached at the house of Mrs. Willoughby, located at what is now the corner of Third and Locust streets which was the first religious service of a public character ever held in this state He was stationed at Galena in 1829 by the American Home Missionary Society, and extended his labors throughout the mines and the whole upper country, bearing his labors with cheerfulness and a zeal that made him respected among all classes with whom he mingled, performing his duty like a true Christian, continuing in the service many years.

As near as we can ascertain, Reverend Cyrus L. Watson was the first minister of this denomination located here, in 1835. By his efforts and the hearty co-operation of citizens the construction of a church building for their use was begun. On July 18, 1836, the corner stone was laid, with ceremony, Dr. Timothy Mason delivering an address. There were present Colonel Dunn, Chief Justice of the Territory, and a large assemblage of citizens. The procession formed and marched, led by a band of music, to the place selected for the church, and after appropriate ceremonies the corner stone was put in position, a memorandum, one copy of the Dubuque Visitor, and a copy of the subscription list to the church were deposited, and the ceremonies closed with singing and prayer. The house was not completed prior to 1840, with the exception of the basement, which was used both for church purposes and for schools.

Presbyterian.—May 12, 1839, Reverend J. A. Clark organized a Presbyterian Society

(first in the State). The ceremonies took place in the Methodist log meeting house, and the society consisted of nineteen members. In December, 1839, Reverend Z. K. Hawley became their pastor, and remained in charge until 1841. Reverend John C. Holbrook supplied the pulpit of this church the last Sabbath in February, 1842. He received a unanimous call to become its pastor, which was accepted, and entered upon his pastoral duties the 26th of March following, but was not formally installed until April 5, 1843. At this time a heavy debt was hanging over the church. The total number of members on the church roll was but twenty-six, and the prospect of liquidating the obligation was very gloomy. In 1844 the mortgage on the church building was foreclosed, and although the situation was far from agreeable, these zealous Christians did not permit their religious order to be stifled, but continued worship, first in the court house, next in the Baptist church. Afterward, a small brick church edifice was erected on Main street, at a cost of $3,000. In time this became too small. The building was enlarged and improved until, in 1857, it was sold, together with the site, for $20,000, and the commodious structure they now occupy was erected, Reverend John C. Holbrook being their pastor.

Presbyterian.—Old School. In 1850, the Congregational Church having become quite large, and containing a considerable number of Old School Presbyterians, about twenty of its members, by request, were dismissed, to form the First Presbyterian Church of that school. They erected a small brick structure in which to worship.

A small Associated Reformed Presbyterian Church was formed in 1850, and occupied the old Presbyterian Church building on Ninth street.

Episcopalian.—Reverend Richard F. Cadle, chaplain of the military post at Prairie du Chien, visited here in April, 1838, and conducted the first service for this denomination. By the united call of the resident Episcopalians and Reverend Mr. Cadle, the General Episcopal Convention attached the part of the Wisconsin Territory west of the Mississippi to the diocese of Bishop Kemper, and in the same year the request was granted, and Bishop Kemper, accompanied by Reverend Mr. Cadle, visited Dubuque and organized St. John's Church, consisting of twenty-three members. E. M. Bissell and Richard Plumbe, wardens; and W. M. Miller, and Geo. L. Nightingale, vestrymen.

German Catholic.—The first society of this denomination here was that of the Holy Trinity, in 1851. The construction of a church building given that name was completed that year. The corner stone ceremonies were conducted by Reverend Father Kelley. The first priest of this parish was Reverend Father Platte. Out of this parish grew what is now St. Mary's Church. Two benevolent societies are attached to St. Mary's Church. The Pius Society, formed February 4, 1855, numbers now 200 members, and the fund for the protection of its members is about $6,000 at the present time. Its President is Peter Ferring; Secretaries, L. Lechner, and J. M. Werner. The other, the Alphonso Society, formed September 29, 1867, numbers 102 members, and has over $1,000 in cash. Its President is Jacob Klauer; Secretaries, J. Pregler, and J. Willinger.

Roman Catholic.—In 1854, St. Patrick's Church was organized by Bishop Loras. It was conducted by him for some time, but Father McCabe was its first pastor. He was succeeded by Father Walsh, and he by Rev. N. F. Scallan, who was succeeded by the present Rev. R. Ryan. This society numbers a congregation of about 1,200.

German Congregational.—This church was formed in 1867, by Rev. Henry Frankfurth, with a membership of twenty-three. They built a house of worship the same year. In the Fall of 1868 Rev. H. Frankfurth was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Hermann Ficke. The present membership is forty-five.

Presbyterian New School.—The Second Presbyterian Church of this city was organized, Sabbath, August 26, 1855, by Rev. S. G. Spees, of Galena. The society numbered seventeen members. For a short time they occupied the Locust Street Methodist Church as a place of worship; and at its own request was taken under the care of the Presbytery of Iowa City. They rented an upper hall on Main Street, and enjoyed the ministry of Rev. J. Gurnsey till June 1, 1856. He was succeeded in the pastorate by Rev. J. H. Trowbridge, who resigned in 1862. In 1859 the present church edifice was dedicated, December 14, 1862, Rev. H. B. Holmes became pastor, and continued until April 30, 1866, when he resigned. Rev. S. G. Spees accepted a call, and filled the pastorate from December 30, 1866, until May 21, 1871. On the 15th of September, 1871, Rev. L. A. Chandler was elected pastor, and installed November 1 following. The church now numbers 230 members.

Baptist.—The first Baptist Church was organized in the Spring of 1842, by Rev. Chester Carpenter, the society consisting of eleven members. Rev. Mr. Morey, of Galena, was arranged with to preach before it once in each month for one year. After that Rev. Chester Carpenter was called to the charge and remained in 1844–5. The society built a small frame meeting house on Clay Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets. They continued to worship in this house till 1856, when they built the brick structure now occupied by the Universalists, Rev. Thomas S. Griffith, pastor. Rev. J. Billings Smith succeeded him and remained until 1861. At this time the society was so much embarrassed financially, that the church building was transferred to the Universalists, and they (the Universalists) assumed the debts. The society as a church was then disbanded, and the present Second Baptist Church formed. Caleb Saddler, a member of the church, sold to the society its present building; the society purchased a lot and moved their building thereto. Rev. Asahel Chapin became pastor and remained over six years, resigning in 1868. Rev. Mr. Raymond was succeeded in the pastorate by Rev. J. M. Ferris, the present pastor, September 1, 1873. The present membership is about 150.

Universalist.—Movement for the establishment of this church began in February, 1858, and on the 22d of March following, the society was formed with Dr. Timothy Mason, President, and Charles A. McArthur, Secretary, and a membership of thirty-nine. Rev. J. W. Dennis was the first pastor, and began his labors in July, 1858. First Sabbath school was organized May 23, 1858. The present pastor, Rev. Asa Countryman, began his pastorate February, 1874. There is connected with the society about 100 families. Church located at the corner of Tenth and Main Streets. The church building was purchased from the Baptist Society in 1862, and was refitted the same year.

First Presbyterian (German).—The First German Presbyterian Church of this city was organized in the year 1847, by Rev. Peter Florey, with thirty-nine members. Its present membership is 175. Its first pastor was Rev. Peter Florey, and the time intervening between his resignation and the occupancy of the pastoral charge by the present Rev. J. Conzett, was filled by Rev. Madolot and Rev. A. Van Vliet, successively. The church is located corner of Iowa and Seventeenth Streets.

In connection with this church is the German Theological Seminary. It was formed by and kept under the immediate control of Rev. A. VanVliet, until its success required an enlargement to accommodate its attendants. Then the building was enlarged to its present magnificent proportions and given into the hands of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A. in 1866, by Rev. A. VanVliet. It has two professors, two tutors, and about twenty students.

Methodist Episcopal (African).—In 1864 this organization was perfected through the instrumentality of Rev. Mr. Spaulden, and consisted of thirty-nine members as the Colored Christian Association. Regular religious services have been kept up under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association and the co-operation of different denominational churches of the city. The present pastor is Rev. Mr. Willitt. Much of the credit for the success of this society is owing to the indefatigable Christian efforts of H. N. Rice of this city.

EARLY SABBATH SCHOOLS.

In the Summer of 1834 the first Sabbath school was organized. It met in a small room in the second story of a building on what is now the corner of Main and Third Streets, and afterward in the log church. Its list of teachers would embrace the names of all the devoted Christian women of that early day; and by their efforts this ennobling institution was made to prosper until absorbed by denominational Sabbath schools, established after 1839.

FIRST THINGS IN DUBUQUE.

The first steamboat that landed at Dubuque, for trade, was the "Galena," Capt. David G. Bates, in 1828.

The first family that lived in Dubuque was that of Hosea T. Camp, in 1832.

The first woman who came to the main shore at Dubuque, with a view to permanent residence, was Mrs. Noble F. Dean, in the Fall of 1832, who is at this writing enjoying good health.

The first raft of lumber that reached Dubuque, was owned by James H. and Ezekiel Lockwood; was brought from Chippewa River, Wisconsin, in the Fall of 1832.

The first white child born here was a daughter of Thomas McCraney, January 10, 1833. She was named Susan Ann.

The first sermon in Dubuque was preached by Rev. Aratus Kent, of Galena, in August, 1833.

The first ferry boat, by horse power, was put on in the Spring of 1834.

The first temperance meeting was on the 9th of March, 1834.

The first political speech was by Col. George W. Jones, in 1835.

The first estate administered upon was that of Noble F. Dean, January 10, 1835.

The first lawyer was W. W. Coriell, in 1835.

The first closing of stores and shops on Sunday was on August 1, 1835.

The first man who applied for naturalization was John Cunningham, August 1, 1836. The territorial court having no authority to naturalize aliens, it being a function of the State court, the first man actually naturalized was Alexander Levi.

The first public land survey was by William A. Burt, the inventor of the solar compass, November 2, 1836.

The first public observance of American Independence, by a celebration, was July 4, 1836.

The first district court was held May 1, 1837.

The first literary society or lyceum was organized December 27, 1837.

The first brick house completed was that of Leroy Jackson, in 1837. In the same year John Johnson completed his brick store-room on Main Street. James and Edward Langworthy commenced their brick houses in 1837, and completed them in 1838.

EARLY SCHOOLS OF DUBUQUE.

The first school house was built in the Fall of 1833, near the northeast corner of what is now Jackson Square. The funds for its erection were contributed by the worthy and generous pioneers of that time. The first term run through the close of the year 1833 and beginning of 1834. Its teacher was George Cabbage, with thirty-five pupils on the roll.

The second school term, taught in the same building, was by Barrett Whittemore, and had an attendance of twenty-five pupils.

Others filled in the line to instruct the young and develop the mental faculties of those that could be spared from assisting in the labors at home in that remote day. The first female teacher was Mrs. Caroline Dexter, who taught in the Methodist log church, in March, 1836. The first school opened exclusively for young ladies, was taught by Mrs. Louisa King, assisted by Miss Louisa C. F. King, during 1837–8–9, which was quite well patronized.

Alonzo P. Phelps opened in the year 1838 the first classical school which continued during 1839. In the same year, Mrs. Mary Ann O'Riley opened a boarding school for young ladies, which met with such success that it was continued a number of years. In 1839, Thomas H. Benton, for many years after Superintendent of Public Instruction for the State, opened an English and classical school. The first tax was levied for the support of public schools in 1840, although a law authorizing the levying of such a tax had been passed by the Territorial Legislature the previous year.

INCORPORATION AND LIMITS.

A town government by a board of trustees was organized under an act of the Territorial Legislature in 1837. Honorable T. S. Wilson was elected President, and Thomas C. Fassitt, Charles Miller, Timothy Fanning, and William Myers, members of the board.

A city charter providing for the election of a mayor and six aldermen was adopted by a popular vote in April, 1841. C. H. Booth was elected Mayor; Benjamin Rupert, Recorder; Jesse P. Farley, Chas. Miller, Edward Langworthy, William W. Coriell, H. Stiniplot, and Timothy Fanning, Aldermen.

The original corporate limits of Dubuque included only a single square mile. The limits were extended in 1852, and again in 1854, and now include eleven square miles, being about four miles on the river front and an average of nearly three miles wide, including much picturesque scenery, arising from the variety in the combination of bluffs, ravines, level spaces, and beautiful groves. The bluffs at an average of half a mile from the main channel of the river are about 250 feet high, and are intersected by ravines through which pass the principal roads leading to the country beyond.

The city charter as amended in 1855, provided for a board of education, clothed with full powers to manage the interests of the public schools, and in pursuance thereof the first Board of Education was created provisionally until the next regular election in January, 1856. It consisted of D. A. Mahony, President; Phineas W. Crawford, Secretary; James A. Reid, James Burt, James R. Goodrich, and Robert C. Waples members.

THE PRESS OF DUBUQUE.

DEMOCRATIC LINE.

The Dubuque Visitor. The first newspaper published west of the Mississippi River (except in St. Louis) was the Dubuque Visitor, issued May 11, 1836. It appeared under the management of John King, editor, and William C. Jones, printer. In politics it was neutral, and had for its motto: "Truth our Guide; the Public Good our Aim." Six months after its first appearance John King sold the Visitor to W. W. Chapman, who, three months later, sold the same to William H. Turner, and he, in April, 1837, disposed of the Visitor to W. W. Coriell, John King, and John B. Russell.

The Iowa News.—At the conclusion of the first volume of the Visitor, Coriell, King & Russell changed the name of the paper to The Iowa News, which became expressly Democratic in politics. In the Fall of 1838, W. W. Coriell sold his interest to Edwin Reeves, and its publication was continued under the management of Russell & Reeves till 1840, during which year it passed into the hands of W. W. Coriell.

The Dubuque Miner's Express.—In 1841 the Iowa News gave place to the Miner's Express, started by Avery Thomas, and six months later the Express became the property of D. S. Wilson and Andrew Keesecker, and was continued by them till 1845, when they sold to George Greene. He conducted the paper till 1848, and sold to William Y. Lovell, and the latter, three months later, sold to Harrison H. Holt and Andrew Keesecker. In March, 1851, they sold the Express to William H. Merritt and William Ashley Jones. Soon after Mr. Jones sold his interest to Mr. Merritt, who remained sole proprietor and continued as such till 1854, when the Express was absorbed by the Dubuque Herald. The Express was first issued as a daily August 19, 1851.

Dubuque Herald.—This paper had been in existence about three years when it swallowed up the Miner's Express in 1854. It was established as an independent newspaper by Dr. Harrison H. Holt, D. A. Mahony, W. A. Adams, and A. A. White in 1851, and issued its first number on the 19th of April of that year. On the 4th of July, 1851, it appeared as a continuous daily publication, the firm name of the publishers being Holt, Mahony & Co., and the labor of the office thus divided: Editor, D. A. Mahony; news department, A. A. White; mechanical department, W. A. Adams. In 1851 Mr. White died, and F. J. Stanton came into the firm in place of the deceased, and also purchased Dr. Holt's interest, and Mr. Adams sold his interest to J. B. Dorr. Later, Messrs. Mahony and Dorr bought Mr. Stanton's interest, and until sometime in 1854 the Herald was conducted by them. In this year the consolidation of the Miner's Express (Democratic) and the Herald (Independent) occurred, and the Express and Herald (as the consolidated paper was for some time called) became a strong advocate of Democratic faith under the proprietorship and editorial management of Merritt, Mahony & Dorr. In 1855 Mr. Merritt purchased the interests of his two partners and continued its management till 1860, when, in July of that year, D. A. Mahony purchased of him the entire establishment and took in as partners John Hodnett and James Brown, the firm name being D. A. Mahony & Co.

Early in 1862, Mr. Mahony purchased the interest of James Brown, and in the Fall of that year received Stilson Hutchins as a partner. In 1863 Mr. Hutchins leased the interests of Messrs. Mahony and Hodnett. In March, 1864, Patrick Robb, F. M. Zeibach, and M. M. Ham purchased and continued the publication of the Herald under the firm name of Patrick Robb & Co., till January 13, 1865, when M. M. Ham and D. D. W. Carver purchased the entire interest, and have continued its publication as a non-compromising Democratic organ to the present time (1875) under the firm name of Ham & Carver.

The Iowa State Democrat.—In 1852, D. A. Mahony published from the Herald office the Iowa State Democrat, which became merged in the Dubuque Herald in 1853.

The Northwest was started in 1856 by LaCossitt & Jarboe, who formed a publishing company, Mr. LaCossitt being the editor. He was succeeded for a short time by M. B. Muikern. In 1856, H. H. Heath, who got the appointment of postmaster of Dubuque through the influence of Gen. George W. Jones, then United States Senator from this district, became editor, and continued in that capacity till the expiration of the paper in 1858. The Northwest was established as a Buchanan organ in opposition to the Dubuque Herald, which espoused the principles of Stephen A. Douglas.

The Dubuque Telegraph.—The first number of the Dubuque Daily Telegraph was issued July 5th, 1870, by S. P. Rich and Dr. J. P. Quigley. In a few weeks Mr. Quigley sold his interest to Mr. Rich, who shortly after sold to Gen. M. M. Trumbull, and he in turn sold to James Hughes. Mr. Hughes formed a company, consisting of himself and several printers, by whom the paper was conducted till June, 1871, when D. A. Mahony bought out Mr. Hughes and most of the other proprietors, thus securing a controlling interest, and in April, 1872, took in Mr. M. Brady as a partner. The paper has since been published by them under the title of the Telegraph Publishing Company. Since the Winter of 1871 both a daily and weekly edition have been regularly issued.

The Dubuque National Democrat, a German newspaper, was established in 1856 by F. A. Schiffke. It is democratic in politics. This paper has passed the ups and downs, and experienced all the difficulties incident to a frontier newspaper, yet it has been under the sole management of Mr. Schiffke since its first appearance. In the Spring of 1857 a daily edition was published, and continued regularly till the stringent times of 1858, when the daily issue was discontinued and a tri-weekly kept up till 1860, when the tri-weekly was abandoned, since which it has been a weekly publication.

The Daily Union, a democratic war paper, was started early in 1861 by Bennett, Knowlton & Co., edited by Samuel McNutt. It continued about five months when it suspended, and was never afterwards revived. Some of the material of the office was purchased by the Telegraph establishment.

WHIG AND REPUBLICAN LINE.

The Dubuque Transcript was the first Whig paper published in the city. It made its appearance in 1843 under the editorship and management of H. H. Houghton, formerly editor of a paper at Galena, and who subsequently returned to that city. Mr. Houghton published the Transcript about a year, when he sold to Hill & Wharton, who continued it nearly a year longer. It was discontinued in 1845.

The Dubuque Tribune was first issued by A. P. Wood, December 21, 1846. It first appeared as a semi-weekly February 22, 1848, and continued as such till September 1 of that year, being the first semi-weekly newspaper published in Iowa. On the 26th of March, 1851, it was issued as a daily, and continued as such one year. Mr. Wood continued to publish the weekly Tribune till March 22, 1854. He then sold to William A. Adams, who took in A. W. Hackney as partner, and the firm thus formed continued the publication of the paper till March, 1858, when it was finally discontinued.

The Democratic Telegraph. This paper was not what its name indicates, but was really in spirit and purpose a Whig journal, while carrying a democratic banner. It advocated the election of Taylor and Filmore. It was issued as a weekly by an association of politicians, and published by Orlando McCraney. Its first issue appeared September 21, 1848, and it continued till October 1, 1850, at which date it was absorbed by the Tribune.

The Dubuque Observer.— In the Spring of 1854 the Dubuque Observer was issued as a daily and weekly by C. J. Chapline & Co., Dr. R. I. Thomas, a member of the firm, being editor. It was professedly a Whig paper, with the addition of know-nothingism, which it advocated in connection with its Whig principles. Chapline & Co. published it about a year and a half when it was discontinued.

The Dubuque Republican. In the Fall of 1855, C. C. Flint began publishing the Dubuque Republican, daily and weekly, having purchased the office of the Observer. He continued to publish it till April, 1857, when it was discontinued. On the 6th of June of the same year both the daily and weeky editions were revived by A. P. Wood, who conducted the paper till October 20, 1857, when it was absorbed by the Tribune.

The Dubuque Times was first issued June 15, 1857, by a joint stock company, G. G. Lyon, editor. It continued about fifteen months, when it expired. It was resuscitated about the beginning of 1859 by Palmer, Upham & Gilmore, who continued it till May, 1861, when Mr. Palmer withdrew, and the firm became Upham & Gilmore, till June, 1862, at which time they sold to G. T. Stewart, who published it till May, 1864. Mr. Stewart sold to Charles Aldrich and W. S. Peterson, who converted the stock into The Times Publishing Company, Mr. Peterson continuing as editor and manager for about four years, at which time he went out, and the stock fell into the hands of J. K. Graves, who employed J. L. McCreery as editor for a short time, and soon sold out to Barnes, Tompkins & Newcomb. This company was succeeded by Barnes & Ryan in 1867, who continued to publish the Times till 1870, when Jacob Rich succeeded Mr. Barnes, and the firm became Rich & Ryan till the death of Mr. Ryan in the Fall of 1873. In March, 1874, M. C. Woodruff bought the interest of Mr. Ryan, and the firm became Rich & Woodruff, present proprietors. Mr. Woodruff is editor-in-chief, J. L. McCreery, assistant editor, and A. Jordan, business manager.

Iowa Staats Zeitung.—This paper was established as a German Democratic journal by F. Hauf in 1847. Mr. Hauf published it till the Taylor and Filmore campaign in 1849, when it was purchased by George Price, George Nightingale and others in the interest of the Whig party, and became from that time a Whig paper till it was discontinued after the election. The materials were then purchased by Dr. Katman, who revived it as an independent paper, and continued to publish it about four years, when it was discontinued, and the materials of the office were afterwards purchased by the National Democrat.

In 1857 another Staats Zeitung (Republican) was founded, which continued to be published by Henry Richter, Dr. Bengel, Adolph Schill and Peter Karberg till 1873, when the materials were bought by Peter Karberg and removed to Lansing.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Morning Sun.—On the expiration of the Northwest in 1858, some of the printers who had been connected with that paper started a daily called The Morning Sun. It was edited by V. J. David, but was of short duration, continuing only a few months.

The Dubuque Commercial.—In 1872 the monthly Real Estate Journal was established by J. W. McLaury with an edition of 5,000 copies. On the first of October, 1873, W. G. Farrer issued the first number of the monthly Commercial, and in February following produced it as a weekly. By purchase, on the first of May, 1874, J. W. McLaury became proprietor, and consolidating with it the Real Estate Journal, has since continued to publish it as a mercantile, manufacturing and real estate journal for Iowa, under the name of the Dubuque Commercial.

The Luxemberger Gazette. This German weekly was established in 1871 by the German Catholic Printing Company. Its first number appeared August 4, 1871, with John A. Koob, editor. He was succeeded by the present editor, Nicholas Gonnor.

The Iowa, another German weekly, printed at the same place (the Times office), made its appearance January 5, 1875, and is also edited by Nicholas Gonnor.

The Presbyterianer, a German religious semi-monthly publication, is published by a corps of German Presbyterian Elders, and has a circulation of 1,000 copies. It is edited by Reverend J. Bantley, assisted by a committee of three clergymen. The composition is done at its own office, the printing at the office of the Times. This paper is now in its eighth year, having been established in 1867.

The Chess Journal is published from the Herald building by Professor O. A. Brownson, Jr., and meets with favor from the most celebrated chess players of the country.

The following is a list of other publications of a miscellaneous character which have appeared in Dubuque:

The Spike, a campaign paper, published by D. A. Mahony from the Herald office in 1852; the German Turn-Zeitung, published here for a time; The American Flag, for a short time during the war; The Ledger; the Northwestern Farmer, afterwards merged in the Iowa Homestead, by Mark Miller; the News-Letter, a religious paper, by Reverend J. Gurnsey; the Christian Witness, by J. C. Benedict; the Legal Inquisitor; the District School Journal of Education; the Evergreen, a Masonic publication, by Dr. E. A. Guilbert, Sr.; the Press, by J. J. E. Norman; and the Temperance Platform, by W. S. Peterson.

PERIOD OF THE DAILIES.

It will be seen from the above sketch of the papers of Dubuque that three daily newspapers appeared within a few months of each other, viz: the Daily Tribune, the Daily Herald and the Daily Miner's Express, in the order named. The first was Whig in politics, the second independent, and the third Democratic. The dates of the issue of these dailies respectively were, Daily Tribune, March 26, 1851; Daily Herald, July 4, 1851; Daily Express, August 19, 1851. Of these papers only one, the Daily Herald, has been a continuous daily to the present time, entitling it to be regarded as the oldest daily newspaper now existing in Iowa.

COMMERCIAL POSITION.

Physical geography and commercial necessity determine the location of prosperous cities. The banks of navigable rivers at intervals become places for the concentration of trade. Western civilization is advanced by migration on nearly the same parallel of latitude, encouraged by the higher agricultural, climatic and sanitary advantages as compared with the Atlantic States. For these reasons the twelve Iowa cities on the right bank of the Mississippi have all grown to an unusual degree of commercial importance considering the short time of their existence. Dubuque is favorably situated for commerce, having a good harbor on the Mississippi, and being nearer than any other Iowa city that will be likely to compete with it to the lumber regions of the Northwest. It is nearly midway between St. Louis and St. Paul, and also between the flourishing Illinois and Wisconsin cities on Lake Michigan and the second great commercial river, the Missouri. The railroads are so constructed as to make a large scope of country, now thickly settled and developing prosperous industries, tributary to Dubuque; and, notwithstanding the interior adjacent towns are favored with railroads and with freights often discriminative against the Key City, a very large wholesale trade is maintained against the competition of still larger cities, and a heavy volume of retail business is done in every department.

BUSINESS.

The amount and increase of trade and manufactures from year to year are correct criteria by which to measure the material progress of a new city. Allusion to only a few of the many interests under this head need be made to indicate the surprising advancement of all the interests which constitute the most healthful business condition.

In the Fall of 1833 a small raft of lumber, the first that ever descended the Upper Mississippi, furnished a widow lady at Dubuque with the materials for a frame boarding house. In 1869, 50,000,000 feet of pine lumber from the forests of Minnesota and Wisconsin were sold to the amount of $7,500,000, from the fifteen Dubuque lumber yards.

In 1834 there was but one man engaged in the manufacture of furniture. Now one of the principal furniture manufactories furnish employment for forty men.

In 1840, the country west of the Mississippi had not become self-sustaining in articles of food. Dubuque City and County did not become so till 1850. Now the shipments from Dubuque to Eastern and Southern markets are over 100,000 barrels of flour, 2,000,000 bushels of wheat, 500,000 bushels of oats, and nearly 100,000 bushels of barley per annum. The immense corn crop is mostly converted into animal products at a much greater profit than by the shipment of the grain. Twenty million pounds of dressed pork, 30,000 live hogs, and 10,000 head of cattle, do not overreach the shipments of these products annually from Dubuque.

The financial revulsion of 1837 did not materially affect Dubuque. Its main resource was lead, produced steadily by the enterprise of hundreds of miners and the working of half a dozen smelting furnaces. This product commanded a ready cash sale in the markets of St. Louis or New Orleans. In all American mining districts paper money is received slowly and cautiously as a circulating medium, and accordingly the depreciated bank-note currency of the Eastern States was despised by the miners. Gold and silver were the principal forms of money, and so continued for twenty years. The financial crisis of 1857, however, had a more disastrous effect. The West at that time was flooded with nearly worthless paper money. Iowa had then no bank of issue, but acceded afterwards to the policy of a general banking law, which has since been swept away by the necessity for a National Currency.

Dubuque in 1835 had one wagon shop. In 1869 eighteen wagon and carriage manufactories employed 150 men, and sold over 5,000 vehicles. The first mill of thirty years ago, after running twenty years, was succeeded by a dozen lumber mills, flouring mills, manufactories of wooden ware, planing mills, extensive iron foundries, machine shops and other branches of skilled industry, to such an extent that Dubuque now ships in every direction, and with few exceptions, all the articles required in practical agriculture, household economy, and most other useful and practical industries

However uninteresting statistics may be to the general reader, they become very significant to those who wish to trace the progress, determine the results, or estimate the future of a growing city. The following figures indicate a few of the branches of business and the amount done per annum in each:

Twenty-six grocery houses sell to the amount of $2,500,000. The sales of four hardware stores amount to $800,000. Drugs, paints and oils, $530,000. Three crockery stores, $180,000. Nine boot and shoe stores, $400,000. Sales from tobacco stores, $100,000. Five hat and cap stores, $80,000. Two Yankee notion houses, $190,000. Fourteen clothing and merchant tailors, $700,000. Nine leather, harness, etc., $400,000. Books and stationery, $162,000. Six furniture houses, $175,000. Wholesale liquor dealers, $350,000. Six dealers in stoves and tinware, $125,000. Fruit and confectionery, $370,000. Millinery goods, $75,000. One firm, seeds and agricultural implements, $60,000. Five produce and commission houses, $275,000. Musical instruments, $75,000. Coal, $75,000. Wood, $365,000.

The value of the manufacturing interests of Dubuque amounts to about $4,000,000 by assessment. Among them are works for the manufacture of steam engines, boilers, threshing machines, castings, iron foundries, machine shops, coppersmith works, pails and tubs, brooms, tobacco, window-shades, churns, fanning mills, trunks, soap and candles, flour, woolen goods, wagons and carriages, furniture, planing mill work, cooperage, breweries, vinegar, brick, and many other branches not named. Several branches are of quite recent establishment—namely, a packing house, with facilities for dressing 400 hogs daily; a metal stamping establishment, which supplies the city and country trade with pressed tin ware.

CITY LANDS.

The city obtained corporate possession of several hundred acres of land, portions of which, amounting to over two hundred acres, have been sold or donated to railroad companies for depot purposes, and to other corporations, in consideration of street extensions and harbor improvements required to be made, as an equivalent, and some have been sold at such a price as greatly to increase the city revenue. About sixty acres were sold to one company, in 1857, for $200,000, leaving still over a hundred acres belonging to the city.

ASSESSMENT AND TAXES.

As showing something of the financial history of Dubuque, the following facts may be stated. The village tax in 1838 was only $524. This was paid by ninety-nine persons, including business firms. In 1839 the tax was $645, paid by 123 business firms and individuals. The average for the two years was a little over $5 for each property owner. In 1854 the assessed value of property in the city was $4,323,530, which increased to $8,203,665 in 1855. So rapid was the increase of speculative values during this period of inflation that, in 1856, the property in the city was assessed at $13,000,000, and a tax levied of $113,000. The assessments and taxes, however, were soon after greatly reduced, throughout the West, in consequence of the financial revulsion of 1857, so that in Dubuque, in 1859, the assessed value of property was about $6,000,000, and the city tax levied about $50,000. Since then the valuation of property in the city has been gradually approaching a sound financial basis, and the figures for 1875 show the actual increase of wealth in Dubuque. The assessments were based on the actual value of property, and and were as follows:

ASSESSMENTS.

Total Real Estate	$11,788,338 00
Total Personal Property	6,177,753 00
Total Assessment	$17,965,091 00

The City Council reduced the above twenty per cent., which was thought to be fair on real estate, though not on capital and merchandise, as the latter had not been assessed above its true value. The reduced assessment stood as follows:

Total Real Estate	$10,025,200 00

TAXES.

The general tax on all city property is 14 mills; within the water limits a special tax of one and one-fourth mills is levied, making the city tax for 1875 as follows:

Consolidated Tax	$201,953 36
Water Tax	10,315 20
Total for the year	$212,268 56

WATER WORKS.

By the fortunate appropriation of a series of springs, issuing from a tunnel which had been dug to drain a lead mine, in the northwest part of the city, Dubuque has become possessed of a system of water works unsurpassed by any in the country. The water is as clear as crystal and abundant in supply. The stream issuing from the mouth of the tunnel was nearly a hundred feet above the level of Main Street. This stream has been enclosed, a reservoir constructed to supply water for extra occasions, and pipes laid to convey the abundant product to every part of the city. The head is such that in several instances the water is also used as a motive power, by being applied to a turbine water wheel, about six inches in diameter, and several of the printing presses of the city are run in this manner. The supply is sufficient to run several more in addition to the demands already made upon it.

CITY INSTITUTIONS.

Under this head we include quite a number of organizations not classed with schools and churches:

The Northwestern Agricultural and Manufacturing Exposition.—This is an organization of great importance to Dubuque and the Northwest. It had its origin in the expectation that the Iowa State Fair would be held at Dubuque, in 1874. But the directors of that institution deciding on Keokuk, led to the establishment of the exposition at Dubuque. The session of 1874 was a decided success, although there were several Fairs held adjacent to Dubuque, during the same week. The directors have taken the precaution to avoid this in the future, and with proper interest and management the Institution may become a great benefit to the city, and to the manufacturing and agricultural interests generally of the country.

A Citizen's Association to aid in the general improvement of the city, particularly of encouraging manufactures. This organization has been instrumental in bringing at least one important establishment into the place, of adding more than a hundred to the population directly, and indirectly increasing the business of the city and contiguous country to a considerable extent. We refer to Mr. Joseph Miller's establishment for the manufacture of boots and shoes.

The Iowa Institute of Science and Art, was designed to meet a demand for information in natural history and advanced culture in general science. Rooms have been kept open and a cabinet of specimens has been gathered, largely by the efforts of Prof. Woodman, who has made that subject a specialty. Prof. Woodman is now engaged in the Iowa State University, at Iowa City, and feels obliged to withdraw from the society.

The Young Mens' Literary Association is an organization that does much good in keeping up the standard of literature. The library numbers 7,000 volumes, and is a popular resort for all reading people.

The Fine Art Association has a gallery containing many creditable pictures, several of which are from the hands of home artists. Two resident artists of Dubuque have gained considerable reputation—Mr. E. S. Merrill and Mr. Alexander Simplot, the former as a painter of portraits and landscapes, the latter as a delineator and designer. Architecture is even more successful in Dubuque than the fine arts, as the fact that all the public buildings of the city were designed and superintended by home architects, will abundantly show.

SOCIAL AND MORAL.

Among the social and moral institutions may be remarked the Young Mens' Christian Association, whose rooms are open constantly, and good reading matter furnished; the Masonic and Odd-Fellows Fraternities, numerous and prosperous in the city; the Good Templars, Palestine Class, Children's Natural History Society; the Quintette Club for reading and conversation; Young People's Baptist Progressive Association; Shakesperian Club; Round Table; Young Mens' Sodality; Mechanics' Benevolent Society; German Benevolent Society; Soldiers' Benevolent Association; Home for the Friendless; Catholic Benevolent Sodality; St. Vincent De Paul, and many others. These societies have a large membership, and are doing a good work in their various departments of charity and social culture.

PUBLIC HALLS.

These are ample in number and size for all the purposes required. The City Hall building is perhaps the largest in the city, and the hall is free for all public occasions, the lower part being occupied as a general market. The Atheneum, on Main Street, is the principal place for operas, concerts and theatres; Turners' Hall is used by the German societies, and the Masons and Odd Fellows have capacious rooms for their own purposes.

There are two well organized brass bands in the city.

SCHOOLS.

In 1857 the present free school system of the city was inaugurated. Two buildings were erected each for the occupancy of twelve teachers and 600 pupils. In 1858 a third building of the same size was added, and since that time another, for the use of the Free High School. The number of pupils enrolled in the public schools is about 4,000. The public school property is worth about $250,000. The teachers employed, about sixty. The schools are graded, culminating in a high school department. This has a cabinet of geological and other specimens worthy of note.

There are several private and parochial schools in the city, receiving a large share of patronage. Among these are St. Joseph's and St. Mary's Academies, under the auspices of the Catholic Church; the German Theological Seminary, and Bayliss' Commercial College, the latter a popular institution in all branches relating to a business education

RAILROADS.

The first railroad which reached the shore opposite Dubuque was the Illinois Central, in 1855. It was unfortunate for this city and for the country west of it that the Illinois Central Railroad Company did not bridge the river in accordance with the terms on which the munificent land grant of 1850 was accepted. It required the road to be constructed to Dubuque, Iowa, before the 20th of September, 1860, but failing to comply with these terms, the building of the bridge was delayed ten years, until another corporation, the Dubuque and Dunleith Bridge Company, assumed the work. The bridge was completed in 1865. The main bridge is 1,760 feet long, and cost $750,000. It is built entirely of iron and stone.

The first railroad westward from Dubuque was the Dubuque and Sioux City, commenced in 1856, and since extended to its western terminus on the Missouri river. The Dubuque and Southwestern was soon after put in operation, and now connects Dubuque with Cedar Rapids. The Chicago, Clinton and Dubuque road, and the Chicago, Dubuque and Minnesota, complete the list centering in this city, and give it railroad facilities equal to the demands of its large and increasing business. The citizens, however, are agitating the subject of building, in addition to the above, a narrow-guage road from Dubuque to Milwaukee, which has a fair prospect of being soon constructed.

GAS AND STREET RAILWAY.

The city is lighted by gas furnished by a private corporation. A system of street railways is also in operation, extending from the Levee to Couler avenue, through the principal streets. It affords a small margin of profit during the busy season, and with the farther extension, particularly to the Fair Ground, will undoubtedly pay better.

CHURCHES.

Under another head we have given a sketch of the early history of nearly all the churches of the city. We have only to add here the present number of churches. There are seventeen churches in Dubuque—four Catholic, four Methodist, three Presbyterian, two Congregational, two Lutheran, one Episcopal, one Universalist, one Baptist and one Christian. The Main Street Methodist, the Congregational, the Second Presbyterian, the Cathedral and St. Mary's, are very fine church structures.

DYERSVILLE.

DYERSVILLE, a town on the extreme west line of Dubuque County, is beautifully situated on the line of the Illinois Central Railroad, twenty-nine miles from Dubuque. This road affords a highway important to its commercial prosperity, by putting it in direct communication with Dubuque, Chicago and the eastern cities; and Dyersville, being an inland patron, contributes largely to the commerce of the road, by its extensive shipments of grain, country produce, live stock, beef and pork.

The country surrounding Dyersville is rolling prairie, intermixed with considerable quantities of growing timber. The soil is light, yet of a very wholesome and productive character, east and west, while north and south it is of a black clay loam—the former giving a quick, and the latter a more substantial growth to the cereals; and the populous and well-to-do farming classes find the harvests yielding bountifully to their well-directed efforts. The general surroundings are such as to guarantee for all future time a healthful and pleasant location and a prosperous business for Dyersville. The country is well watered, its principal stream being the north branch of the Big Maquoketa, which affords very good water-power for milling purposes.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The earliest settlement of the town of New Wine by a civilized people dates back to 1837, when Theophilus Crawford and Messrs. Mouncey, Hewitt and others located claims, and to 1838, when Thomas Riggs and family settled in that neighborhood. The territory on which the town of Dyersville is situated was purchased from the government in 1848 by James Dyer, in whose honor the town was named, who commenced the settlement of what is now a thrifty and prosperous incorporated town. In 1849 his partner, James Dyer, Sen., and Rev. William Trick, with their families, came on from Bonwall, Somersetshire, England, and became permanent residents. Other families collected, and in 1853 the town was surveyed by Henry Jennings. In 1854 it was re-surveyed and platted, by Samuel Bethel.

In this year Dyersville made remarkable progress, and among other substantial improvements O. L. Foot built the present Dyersville hotel, purchased a one-half interest in the water-power, and in partnership with James Dyer, Jr., erected a grist mill.

The Sabbath was observed by public worship, with preaching by Rev. William Trick, in James Dyer's store, and early in the year 1855, through the instrumentality of Rev. William Trick, the present Methodist Church was formed and a house of worship erected. The old church building is now the district school house.

In 1855 the dark mantle of sorrow overspread the entire community by the loss of many of its enterprising, esteemed and respected citizens, by the ravages of cholera, which broke forth upon their prosperous village in the dark hours of night, on the 20th of June, and so general, instantaneous and fatal was its work, that of the inhabitants who retired well and hearty at night, four were found dead the next morning; six more died within the next twenty-four hours; and for two long months, day and night, could be heard in all parts of the place the sound of hammer or saw, preparing coffins for the numerous victims of this terrible malady.

In 1856 the first newspaper was established, The Dyersville Mercury.

Dyersville had scarcely recovered from the stagnation produced by the ravages of the cholera when the crash of 1857-8 came upon it and found it, like all new towns, unprepared for such a crisis, and it fell. For a long time very little business was done, until in 1863 it began to improve and has since continued every year to increase in prosperity.

The first frame house built was by George Hyler, and is at present a part of the Pennsylvania House.

In 1872 Dyersville became an incorporated town, and at the March election, in 1873, the following officers were chosen: William Trick, Mayor; A. Limback, D. S. Smith, C. C. Chesterman, Andrew Krapff, August Mauche, Trustees; John Morley, Recorder; W. E. Bagley, Marshal.

Since its incorporation many improvements of a public character have been made, and all from revenue derived from saloon and other licenses. No officers of the town are salaried, except the recorder and marshal, who have $50 each. In 1874 a new iron truss bridge was built, at a cost of $4,500. Bonds have been voted and orders issued for the erection of an $8,000 school house, to be built of brick, with all modern appliances.

There are five church societies—the Methodist, the Episcopal, the German Presbyterian, the Catholic, and the Congregational. All have church buildings, except the Episcopal, who worship in the Congregational Church.

The Dyersville Commercial, a wide-awake, seven-column weekly newspaper, both sides printed at its own office, was started March 12, 1873, and has continued since, under the management of Rose & Son; Jerome Rose, editor. It is well conducted and has a circulation of 650, which is considered a fair patronage.

The population of the town is about 1,200, and its business is classified as follows: One bank, four dry goods stores, two drug and stationery stores, two hardware stores, two breweries, two agricultural implement depots, six grain and produce elevators, two hotels, two livery stables, ten saloons, two jewelry stores, two photograph galleries, two butcher shops, five blacksmith shops, and one merchant and flouring mill, one vinegar factory, two wagon factories, five boot and shoe shops, and other branches of trade. There are also lodges of Masons and Good Templars.

SCOTT COUNTY.

Scott County is situated in the river tier of counties, the fifth from the southern boundary of the state. It has a water front on the Mississippi of about thirty-five miles, that river forming the eastern and southern boundaries. The Wapsipinicon River, from a point about six miles from the northwest corner of the county, forms the boundary between Scott and Clinton Counties.

The superficial area of Scott County is about 500 square miles, or to figure more exactly the fractional townships, according to the survey completed in 1837, it contains 280,516 acres. The surface of the county is chiefly rolling prairie, of an excellent quality of soil, but in places somewhat sandy. Along the Mississippi and the Wapsipinicon there are some fine groves of timber, and also a few groves bordering on the smaller streams. The different kinds of oak, black walnut, and hickory are the principal varieties.

The bottom lands along the streams are in some places quite extensive, and generally among the most productive in the county. On the Wapsipinicon and portions of the Mississippi they are subject to annual inundation, and afford excellent meadows and pasturage. The soil of the county is generally productive, yielding large returns to the agriculturist of the various grains, vegetables, and fruits common to this section of Iowa.

TIMBER AND COAL.

In a historical sketch of Scott County, published in 1863, we find the following:

"Buffalo Township has more timber than any other in the county. There are thousands of acres covered with a growth that has arisen since the first settlement, that will cut from twenty to fifty cords of wood to the acre. It is estimated that there is five times as much timber in Buffalo Township as there was at the first settlement, in 1834—a fact showing how easily timber may be produced if cared for, and the annual fires kept out of the woodlands.

"Coal was first discovered here in 1834, and as early as 1835 and 1836, was dug and sold to steamboats at the mouth of Bowling's Creek, which empties into the Mississippi between Buffalo and Rockingham. The first bank opened was about half a mile up this creek, and was worked to a considerable extent by Dr. A. C. Donaldson, who settled near its mouth in 1837. Some three miles higher up the creek, Benjamin Wright and Captain E. Murray, from Zanesville, Ohio, opened a bank in 1838, and furnishe, coal to Davenport and Rockingham for fifteen cents per bushel. From that day to this mines have been opened and worked in almost every part of the township, until at the present time (1863) more than twenty-five coal mines are open and ready for work."

Such was the prospect for coal in Buffalo Township in 1863, and while considerable quantities have been mined, the amount for steady supply has not proved as great as was then anticipated.

Good building stone is quarried in several parts of the county, especially at LeClaire, on the Mississippi River.

HISTORICAL.

Scott County was organized by an Act of the Territorial Legislature of Wisconsin, which convened at Burlington in December, 1837. It was named in honor of General Winfield Scott, who in September, 1832, held an important treaty with the Indians upon its soil. By that treaty, the territory embraced in the county of Scott, together with all the country included in the Black Hawk purchase, was ceded to the United States, and opened for settlement on the 1st of June, 1833. The treaty was appointed to be held at Rock Island, but owing to the prevalence of cholera among the soldiers at Fort Armstrong, it was deemed advisable to meet the representatives of the Sac and Fox Nation on the west side of the Mississippi. The treaty was accordingly held in Davenport, on the spot of ground now occupied by the depot of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad.

First Claim.—The first "claim" made within the limits of Scott County was by George L. Davenport, Esq., in Davenport Township immediately after the treaty of September, 1832. By the terms of this treaty, no white man had a legal right to settle on the territory ceded to the United States till the expiration of the Indian title, June 1, 1833. But Mr. Davenport was an exception, because he was a favorite among the Indians, having been adopted into the Fox tribe, and grown up from boyhood among them. Hence he was allowed to go upon the lands yet in possession of the Indians, while others who attempted to settle on them were driven off by the military, till the Indian title expired on the first of June, 1833.

First Ferry.—Colonel Davenport appears to have made no actual settlement upon his claim, though he established a flat-boat ferry at this point as early as 1827, running between the island and the main shore, carrying pack-horses, cattle and goods for the Indian trade west of the Mississippi. He also, after steamboats began to run to this point, kept a wood-yard on the island, and brought wood from Maple Island and other places.

First Actual Settlement.—The first actual settler on the soil of Scott County was Capt. Benjamin W. Clark, a native of Virginia. He had been captain of a company of mounted rangers under Gen. Dodge in the Black Hawk war, and had made a settlement on the Illinois side of the river, at Andalusia. In 1833 he moved across the Mississippi and began a settlement on the site of Buffalo, which in a few years became the most important and prosperous town on the river between Burlington and Dubuque. Here Captain Clark erected the first cabin, broke the first soil, and planted and raised the first crop in Scott County. While living in Andalusia, he established a ferry across the river at this point, which was known as "Clark's Ferry," and was for many years the only place of crossing for immigrants in all this region of country.

Captain Clark was a man of push and energy, and he set to work to build up a town at the western terminus of his ferry. In 1835 he brought lumber from Cincinnati, and erected a large frame hotel, which was considered a great enterprise for that day, the lumber costing him sixty dollars a thousand feet. In 1836 he built the first saw mill in the county, at the mouth of Duck Creek. It was a small mill, but for many years was of great service to the early settlers.

In 1836, Captain Clark laid out the Town of Buffalo, which was the first regularly laid out town in the county. Being the only avenue of immigration into this section of the Territory, which by this time had begun rapidly to set in, it grew to be a place of importance, and in a few years became one of the most flourishing villages on the Black Hawk Purchase.

Captain Clark was a great benefactor to the early settlers in this part of the country, spending much time in assisting them to locate their claims. He died at Buffalo, October 25, 1839.

Rival Towns.—Buffalo had a fair prospect of becoming the county seat; but by the rivalry of other towns, and the action of the Legislature in laying out the counties, her interests were sacrificed. Soon after a start had been made at Buffalo, Davenport and Rockingham were laid out; Antoine Le Claire established a ferry between Davenport and Rock Island, and travel was diverted to that point. This injured the prospects of Buffalo. But the crowning act of her ruin was consummated by the town site speculators, who met in the Legislature at Burlington in 1837. To show how matters were there managed, we have only to explain the cause of the present shape of Scott and Muscatine Counties, as they appear on their respective maps. It will be seen that Muscatine County has two townships in the northeast corner that properly belong to Scott, and that a jog is consequently made in the southwest corner of the latter county. This happened as follows: Dr. Reynolds, a member of the Legislature from Muscatine, had laid out a town which he named Geneva, some three or four miles above Bloomington, and on this all his efforts were centered as the future county seat. In order to secure his object, on the ground of the "central location" of his town, and thereby defeat

Bloomington, Dr. Reynolds insisted on establishing the upper line of Muscatine County as far up the river as possible. At the same time the member from Rockingham and Davenport, Alexander McGregor, Esq., had a similar interest in regard to the lower line of Scott County, knowing that the farther it was carried up the river the more it would diminish the chances of Buffalo for becoming the county seat, and increase those of Rockingham and Davenport, on account of their more central position in the county. Accordingly these members "put their heads together" and carried their scheme through the Legislature.

Thus Buffalo was sacrificed, and gradually "died out" by being placed in the lower end of the county. Doctor Reynolds, however, failed to secure the county seat of Muscatine at Geneva, that honor being given by a vote of the people to Bloomington. Davenport and Rockingham combined to defeat Buffalo, and finally, after a long and spirited contest, Davenport carried off the prize.

ROCKINGHAM.

Settlement was begun at Rockingham in the Fall of 1835, by Colonel John Sullivan, of Zanesville, Ohio, James and Adrian H. Davenport, Henry W. Higgins and others, who purchased a claim that had previously been made upon the town site. Among the "many advantages" set forth for Rockingham, the most important was that it would "command the trade of Rock River," directly opposite, which at that time was supposed to be navigable.

The town was laid out in the Spring of 1836, and strenuous efforts made to bring it into public notice. A fine lithographic map and picture of it, with its beautiful surrounding scenery, was made, and circulated in Eastern cities, and drew many emigrants who were "desirous of making homes in the West." During the dry season of the year it was a beautiful spot, and had many attractions; but the annual inundation of the Mississippi filling a vast slough in the rear, left the embryo city literally on an island, cut off from all access except by boats with the main land. Many of the settlers who came with high expectations were therefore disappointed when the freshet came down the Father of Waters in the Spring or after heavy Fall rains.

In the Fall and Winter of 1836, Rockingham contained some thirteen houses and about one hundred inhabitants. Among the prominent citizens were Colonel John Sullivan, the first merchant in Rockingham, and Doctor E. S. Barrows, the first practicing physician located in Iowa between Burlington and Dubuque. In the Summer of 1837 a steam saw and flouring mill was erected by Colonel Sullivan, the first of the kind built in Scott County. A Methodist church was organized in 1836; in 1837 a small Presbyterian church was founded by Reverend Enoch Mead; the Episcopal church was represented in an organization by Rev. Zachariah Goldsmith in 1840. All these congregations worshiped by turns in a small building erected by subscription, and which also served the purpose of a school house.

A ferry was established across the river at this point in 1837, connecting with a state road up the south side of Rock River, which brought much travel on that route, and added considerably to the business of Rockingham.

CREDIT ISLAND.

This island, west of the main channel of the Mississippi, contains about four hundred acres, and belongs to Scott County. The early French traders had a trading post on it, where credit was first given to the Indians, hence its name, "Credit Island." In March, 1834, Adrian H. Davenport made a claim on this island, and shortly after, he and his father, Marmaduke Davenport, settled and made improvements upon it. In 1838, Adrian H. Davenport was appointed by Governor Lucas sheriff of Scott County, being the first to serve in that office under Iowa Territory. In 1850, he and his father moved to LeClaire, where the latter died in 1852.

THE COUNTY SEAT CONTEST.

The act of the Legislature establishing the boundaries of the county provided for holding an election for the county seat on the third Monday in February, 1838. The importance of this election, as deciding the destiny of the competing towns, for the honor and prestige of the seat of justice, was held to be of great moment, and preparations were accordingly made for a spirited contest. Rockingham and Davenport were the competing points. Three election precincts were established, viz.: Rockingham, at the Rockingham House; Davenport, at the Davenport Hotel; and LeClaire (then Parkhurst) at the house of E. Parkhurst. The election returns were to be made to Governor Dodge, of Wisconsin Territory.

The day of election came, Davenport polled the majority of votes, and rejoiced over the result with bonfires and illuminations. It has been hinted that the election was not altogether fair; that while the people of Davenport were rejoicing over their great victory, Doctor E. S. Barrows, and others from Rockingham, were on their way to Mineral Point to see Governor Dodge, with papers and documents to prove the frauds which had been perpetrated at Davenport. Something has been said of a "motley crowd of imported voters" from Illinois and from the Dubuque mines. Be that as it may, the Legislature, which met at Burlington in June, appointed a new election to be held the following August, the returns of which were to be made by the clerk of the Board of County Commissioners to the sheriff of Dubuque County, who was authorized to count the votes in the presence of the commissioners of that county.

This time Rockingham carried the day, although it is said "a great mystery seemed to hang over the polls." When the ballot-box was emptied of its contents, it showed "most astonishing results." The committee sent down from Davenport to watch the polls could never explain where all the votes came from. Corruption was charged, but the result was explained as being in strict conformity with the oath taken by the judges and clerks of election, which was that they should, "to the best of their ability, see that votes enough were polled to elect Rockingham the county seat."

The votes, as required by law, were counted in the presence of the commissioners of Dubuque County, but the commissioners, by some mistake, failed to make an entry of it upon their records, and in a few weeks, by the process of "purging the polls," found a majority of two in favor of Davenport, which was accordingly declared to be the county seat.

The Rockingham party brought an action against the commissioners by procuring a mandamus directing them to make the proper entry upon their records, and in the final hearing the court decided in favor of Rockingham.

The Legislature, then in session at Burlington, passed an act for another election, and at this time there were other competitors for county seat besides Davenport and Rockingham. Sloperville, then "the geographical center," and "Winfield," at the mouth of Duck Creek, entered the list, the former, however, dropping out before the election, and leaving Davenport, Rockingham and the "Duck Creek Cornfield," as it was called. Finally, on Eve of election, Rockingham withdrew, on condition that Davenport would build a court house and jail, on a similar plan of those at Rock Island free of expense to the county, which Davenport gave bonds to do, was elected, and made the permanent seat of justice for Scott County.

Thus terminated the most exciting question that had disturbed the community. It has been remarked by one of the old settlers, who participated in the stirring events of those times, that "through this whole controversy the utmost good feeling and gentlemanly conduct prevailed. No personal feuds grew out of it, and to this day it is often a source of much merriment among the old settlers, and is looked upon only as the freaks and follies of frontier life."

A peace treaty was held at Rockingham Hotel in the Winter of 1840, in which all the prominent actors in the county seat controversy met as mutual friends, ratifying the "treaty," as it was called, by a grand ball, in which more than forty couples mingled in the dance. The citizens of Davenport have always cheerfully borne witness to the intelligence and the many friendly and social virtues for which the early settlers of Rockingham were famed. In 1845, the town began to decline; many of the inhabitants left and settled in other parts of the county; some of them became citizens of Davenport. James Davenport, one of the founders of Rockingham, removed in 1848 to Shullsburg, Wisconsin, where he became largely interested in lead mining.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COUNTY.

The act of the territorial legislature organizing the county, provided for an election of officers to be held on the third Monday in February, 1838. At this election Benjamin F. Pike, Andrew W. Campbell and Alfred Carter, were elected County Commissioners. Major Frazer Wilson received the appointment of sheriff from the Territorial Governor of Wisconsin.

On the 4th of July, 1838, Iowa was separated by act of Congress from the Territory of Wisconsin, and organized into a separate Territory. Governor Lucas made the following appointments for Scott County: Willard Barrows, Notary Public; Ebenezer Cook, Judge of Probate; Adrian H. Davenport, sheriff; Isaac A. Hedges and John Porter, Justices of the Peace. D. C. Eldridge received the appointment of Postmaster.

At the first election under the new territorial law, William W. Chapman was elected delegate to Congress, Jonathan W. Parker, member of the Council, and Laurel Summers, member of the House of Representatives. Clinton County was at that time attached to Scott for judicial purposes. The first term of the District Court met at Davenport in October, 1838, Hon. Thomas S. Wilson presiding. Little business was done at that term. Several attorneys were admitted to the bar.

Surveys.—The surveys of the public lands in Iowa began in the Autumn of 1836. The Scott County survey was made by A. Bent & Son, from Michigan, United States Deputies from the Surveyor General's office at Cincinnati, and were completed in March, 1837.

Growth and Progress.—From the first opening of the territory west of the Mississippi for settlement in the Summer of 1833, immigration began to set in; settlements were built up along the Mississippi and on Cedar River, and increased rapidly at Burlington, Dubuque, and in the vicinity of Davenport, Rockingham and Buffalo. Within the limits of Scott County a considerable population soon settled. From the Spring of 1840 the county was rapidly settled, and Davenport grew in population, so that in 1853 it numbered 3,000 inhabitants. The policy of the proprietors of the town was liberal in the encouragement of settlement and the erection of public buildings. The citizens took hold in earnest and subscribed large sums for the promotion of business enterprises.

First Railroad.—The Mississippi & Missouri Railroad Company was organized in 1853, with a capital stock of $600,000, the corporation to continue fifty years from date. On the 1st of September the ceremonies of breaking ground took place. It was a day full of interest to the people of Davenport. The Rock Island and Pacific road was near complet on, and the first locomotive was soon expected to stand upon the banks of the Mississippi River, sending its shrill whistle across the mighty stream as the precursor of its westward flight across the prairies of Iowa.

The ceremony of breaking ground took place near the corner of Fifth and Rock Island Streets. As Mr. Le Claire, who had been selected to remove the first ground, came forward, pulling off his coat and taking the wheelbarrow and spade, he was greeted by a hearty round of applause. A great and important object had been accomplished for the city, the county and the state. At the vote taken to decide whether the county should take stock in the road 309 votes were cast, and out of these but two were against subscribing to the stock. The amounts taken were as follows:

City of Davenport	$ 75,000
County of Scott	50,000
Individual subscriptions	100,000

On the 22d of February, 1854, the long contemplated railroad from Chicago to Rock Island was completed, and by it the Atlantic and Mississippi were united.

Bridge Across the Mississippi.—On the 17th of January, 1853, an act was passed by the General Assembly of the State of Illinois entitled, "An Act to incorporate a bridge company by the title therein named," of which Joseph E. Sheffield, Henry Farnham, J. A. Matteson and N. B. Judd were the sole incorporators. This company was incorporated for the purpose of constructing a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River, connecting the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad, at Rock Island, with the Mississippi & Missouri Railroad, at Davenport. The capital stock was $400,000, raised on 400 bonds, of $1,000 each, the payment of which was guaranteed by the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad Company and the Mississippi & Missouri Railroad Company. The work of location and construction commenced in the Spring of 1854, under Henry Farnham as Chief Engineer and John B. Jarvis as Consulting Engineer. B. B. Brayton, of Davenport, had charge of the work as Resident Engineer. By the Spring of 1856 the bridge was completed, and was regarded as a grand achievement of enterprise and a magnificent triumph of art. The bridge was 1,580 feet long and thirty-feet high, across the Mississippi from the western side to the island, and 450 feet across the slough, from the Island to the Illinois shore. The entire cost of both structures and the railroad connecting them across the Island was about $400,000.

"OLD SETTLERS."

Our sketch of Scott County would be incomplete without some record of the early pioneers who endured the perils and hardships of frontier life in establishing civilization on our western borders. They were a hardy and enterprising race, and, generally speaking, those of Scott County were as noble a class of men as can be found in any country. We have already spoken of Captain Benjamin W. Clark, the original founder of the Town of Buffalo. For many years he spent much of his time in assisting immigrants to make selection of lands, and probably no man who ever lived in Iowa did more to aid and encourage the early settlement of the country.

James M. Bowling, from Virginia, settled in Buffalo Township in 1835. After commencing his farm he went to Virginia and was married, and returned in 1836. In 1837 he had the prospect of a fine crop, his corn in June being about six inches high, but several hundred Indians, living in the vicinity, wantonly set fire to the prairies surrounding his cornfields and burnt up his crop and his fences. These Indians were a constant annoyance while they remained in the neighborhood.

Among the early settlers was Leroy Dodge, who immigrated to Iowa from the State of New York in 1836. He was for many years a pilot on the Mississippi, and then commanded a steamboat. He purchased four hundred acres along the river bluff above Buffalo and built him a cottage on the bank of the river. He turned his attention to farming, principally to stock-raising, and introduced many fine specimens of improved stock. In 1852 he represented Scott County in the State Legislature, being an earnest democrat, and a lover of the cause of human rights.

Among others who settled at an early day in this part of the county, were Joseph and Matthew Morrison, Elias Moore, and Andrew W. Campbell. Mr. Campbell was one of the most enterprising of the pioneers. He opened a large farm on the river bottom, sold to Henry C. Morehead at an early day, and moved to Blue Grass Prairie, where he opened another large farm. He was one of the first County Commissioners, elected in 1838. He made several trips to California, and died in the Great Basin of the Rocky Mountains in 1851.

The following old settlers lived in Rockingham prior to the Fall of 1836: Colonel John Sullivan, Adrian H. and James Davenport, Millington and Franklin Easly, Captain John Coleman and his brothers, William Elogo, John Willis, S. S. Brown, Henry C. Morehead, David Sullivan, Ethereal and A. M. Allen, A. William White, William Dutro, H. W. Higgins, Cornelius Harrold, Richard Harrison, Willard Barrows, James B. Mecoy, and F. H. Shepherd.

A large hotel erected by the proprietor in Rockingham, in 1836, was kept by H. W. Higgins, and was one of the best public houses west of the Mississippi. John S. Sheller was a merchant in the place in 1837.

Among those who made claims back from the river were David Sullivan and Rufus Ricker in 1835. Hon. James Grant opened a large farm upon the edge of the prairie at "Pleasure Grove" in 1838, enclosing 320 acres, much of which he put under cultivation. He introduced the first blooded stock into the county, if not into the State, the fruits of which may be seen in the herds of some of the best farmers of to-day.

Among those who settled on the bluffs and the edge of the prairie were Lewis Ringlesby, Esq., R. W. H. Winfield, John Wilson, familiarly known as "Wildcat Wilson," from having often, as he said, "whipt his weight in wildcats," and John Friday, noted for having broken the first ground upon the bluffs. John W. Brown, William Vannyl, and John Burnside were also settlers as early as 1836.

The beginnings in agriculture in this section may be well illustrated by the fact that John Wilson, in the Fall of 1836, bought two bushels of seed wheat of John Dunn, who settled at Allen's Grove, which the latter had brought with him from Ohio. Mr. Winfield sowed the wheat that Fall and cut the crop the following year with a sickle.

Of the early settlers in Davenport we shall speak more particularly under the head of that city; here Le Claire, Col. Davenport and his sons, Judge Mitchell, James McIntosh and his brothers, D. C. Eldridge, John Owens, Major Thomas Smith, Major William Gordon, Philip Hambaugh, Alexander W. McGregor, Levi S. Colton, Captain James May, and others—all men of talent, means and influence. Those of a little later date were Rodolphus Bennett, Frazier Wilson, Dr. A. C. Davidson, John Forest, William Nichols, Capt. John Litch, Thomas Dillon, William B. Vorton, Isaac Hedges, John Porter, Andrew Logan, and Ebenezer and William L. Cook.

The Pioneer Settlers' Association of Scott County was organized in January, 1858. Its first "festival" was held at the Bartis House, on the 22d of February, and was decidedly the greatest occasion of the season. In December, 1857, a call had been made through the city papers for all the old settlers of Scott County who had become residents prior to December 31, 1840, to meet at Le Claire Hall on the 23d of January, 1858. In answer to this call about sixty were present. The meeting was called to order by D. C. Eldridge, Esq. Ebenezer Cook, Esq. was elected chairman, and John L. Coffin secretary of the meeting. At this meeting an association was formed and Antoine Le Claire elected president. At a meeting on the 30th of January a constitution and by-laws were adopted. The constitution provides for an annual festival of the society, to be held on the 22d of February—Washington's birth day.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The first agricultural society ever formed in Scott County was in January, 1840. Alexander W. McGregor, Esq., was chosen President; G. C. R. Mitchell, Esq., Vice President; John Forest, Esq., Secretary, and Antoine Le Claire, Esq., Treasurer. At this early day but little interest was felt by the patrons of the society, and it was suffered to go down; little, if anything, being done for agriculture in the county till 1853. In August of that year, two prominent farmers, H. M. Thompson Esq., of Long Grove, and Eli S. Wing, Esq. called a meeting, and a new society was formed, H. M. Thompson being elected President, James Thorington, Esq. Secretary, and John R. Jackson, Treasurer. The second year of this society (1854) the first fair was held in Davenport, having the same officers elected as in 1853.

FAIR GROUND ASSOCIATION.

In June, 1854, a company was organized called "The Fair Ground Association of Scott County, Iowa." This company purchased eight acres of land lying near Duck Creek, some two miles from the city, at a cost of $200 per acre, enclosed about four acres with a tight board fence seven feet high, and built sheds and work shops for the second annual exhibition, which took place on the 24th and 25th of September, 1855. This exhibition was creditable to the society and to Scott County, showing a marked increase of interest in agricultural pursuits in this section of Iowa.

CITY OF DAVENPORT.

DAVENPORT, the county seat, is situated on the right bank of the Mississippi, just below the upper rapids, and opposite Rock Island, Illinois. It is 200 miles by river above St. Louis, and 160 by railroad southwest from Chicago.

NATURAL SURROUNDINGS.

The natural surroundings of the city are such as to add beauty and variety. The land in the township of Davenport is somewhat broken, on account of the bluffs along the river. The width of these bluffs between the river and the prairie is in general from one to two miles, and were formerly covered with timber. At a point about three miles above the city the bluffs open out into a beautiful prairie called Pleasant Valley. Immediately back of the City of Davenport, the slope from the top of the bluffs to Duck Creek is one of uncommon beauty and richness, being a rolling prairie covered with gardens, orchards and fields, in the highest state of cultivation. Duck Creek, rising in Blue Grass, about ten miles distant from the city, passes through the whole length of Davenport Township, and running east empties into the Mississippi about five miles above the city. Its course is up stream, parallel with the Mississippi for a considerable portion of its length, and only one or two miles back from the river.

UNDERLYING FORMATION.

The geological substratum on which the City of Davenport is located is a white or light gray limestone, characterized by its fossils as belonging to the Hamilton group of Devonian rocks. This limestone crops out along the river banks at the upper portion of the city. Near East Davenport it presents perpendicular cliffs, varying in height from fifteen to twenty-five feet above low water mark; thence occupying the bed of the Mississippi, it forms the lowest chain in the course of the Rock Island Rapids, reappearing in similar character on Rock Island proper and the corresponding left bank of the Mississippi. The shores of both banks of the river are here strewn with water-worn pebbles of this white limestone, variously mixed with smaller fragments of transported igneous rocks, including agates, cornelians and numerous forms of porphyry.

GENERAL FEATURES.

Davenport occupies a beautiful site, being situated at the foot and along the slope and summit of a bluff, which rises gradually from the river, and is enclosed on the land side by an amphitheater of hills.

With its imposing business houses, tall chimneys and busy thoroughfares, it presents the aspect of a prosperous commercial and manufacturing city. It is regularly laid out, with broad ornamented streets, and besides the county buildings and the city hall, contains many substantial and elegant edifices, among which is one of the finest opera houses in the West.

The population of Davenport in 1840 was 600; in 1850, 1,848; in 1860, 11,267; in 1870, 20,038, of whom 8,301 were foreigners.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Davenport & St. Paul Railroads pass through the city. The old bridge connecting Davenport with Rock Island has recently been replaced by one of wrought iron, resting on massive piers of stone, which, besides a rail track, has accommodations for carriages and pedestrians. It was built partly by the United States and partly by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, at a cost of $1,000,000.

Davenport has all the improvements of a modern city—gaslight, water works, and several miles of street railway. She has immense water power, and is one of the largest grain depots of the Upper Mississippi.

EARLY HISTORY.

The claim on which Davenport now stands was made in the Summer of 1833, by R. H. Spencer and a man by the name of McCloud. A quarrel arose between these men respecting the claim, whereupon Antoine LeClaire purchased their interest for one hundred dollars. In the Fall of 1833, a movement was made to have a town laid out upon this claim, and with that end in view, Antoine LeClaire, Major Thomas Smith, Major William Gordon, Phillip Hambaugh, Alexander W. McGregor, Levi Colton, Captain James May and Colonel George Davenport, held a meeting at the house of the latter, on Rock Island, to consider the subject. The result arrived at was that a town should be started. In pursuance of this the company purchased of Mr. LeClaire all that portion of his claim west of Harrison Street, running along the bluff as far west as Warren Street, and thence south to the river, for two thousand dollars.

The town was laid out in the Spring of 1836, and named after Colonel George Davenport, the survey being made by Major William Gordon.

Besides the claim on which the original town plat was laid out, Mr. LeClaire owned an entire section (640 acres), a portion of which is included in the present city limits. This was "LeClaire's Reserve," made to him by the Sac and Fox Indians, in the treaty of 1832. As Mr. LeClaire figures so prominently in all important matters connected with the early history of Davenport, it will be well to give here a brief sketch of his life.

ANTOINE LECLAIRE.

Antoine LeClaire was of French and Indian descent, his father being a Canadian Frenchman, and his mother the daughter of a Pottawatamie chief. As early as 1808 his father established a trading post on the present site of Milwaukee, and in 1809 was associated in the fur trade with John Kinsey, at Fort Dearborn, now Chicago. He was loyal to the American cause in the war of 1812, and was taken prisoner at Peoria, and imprisoned for a short time at Alton, Illinois.

Antoine LeClaire was born at what is now St. Joseph, Michigan, then the Northwest Territory, December 15, 1797. In 1818 he first became interpreter to Captain George Davenport, at Fort Armstrong, Rock Island, but was subsequently sent on business connected with Indian affairs to Arkansas. In 1820 he married the grand-daughter of a Sac Chief—A-co-qua, the Kettle. In 1827 he was again stationed at Fort Armstrong as interpreter.

He was a remarkable linguist, considering his early opportunities for study, speaking some dozen different Indian dialects, besides French and English. He officiated as interpreter in the following treaties: With the Osage and Kansas Indians, at St. Louis, in 1825; with the Chippewas, at Prairie du Chien, in 1825; with the Winnebagoes, at Prairie du Chien, in August, 1825; with the Sacs and Foxes, at Rock Island, in 1832; with the same at Washington, in 1836, and also in 1837, and with the same at Agency City, in 1842.

The Pottawattamies, at the treaty of Prairie du Chien, presented him with a section of land in Illinois, on which the City of Moline is now situated.

No man was so intimately associated with the founding and progress of the City of Davenport as Mr. LeClaire. In 1835 he sold the original plat to the proprietors, and from time to time made additions to the town, till he became one of the greatest proprietors in Iowa, perhaps the largest, considering that he owned also the site of LeClaire, which was laid out on the other section reserved to him in the treaty of 1832.

In 1836, he built the hotel which bears his name, to which addition after addition has since been made, including the entire side of the block. To every branch of enterprise he extended aid, by assisting worthy and enterprising men, sometimes involving his own princely means to help others in their undertakings. To the churches he was liberal, giving grounds and means for the erection of three Catholic Churches. He built St. Margaret's wholly at his own expense, furnished it with an organ, and for some time supported the religious services with pecuniary aid.

Mr. Le Claire first had a cottage on the ground where the treaty of 1832 was held, but gave that up for the occupancy of the railroad, and built the LeClaire Mansion on the bluffs. He died September 25, 1861, and was buried at the Church of St. Margaret, where a costly monument has been erected to his memory.

COLONEL GEORGE DAVENPORT.

In this connection a brief notice is also necessary of Colonel George Davenport, as a part of the history of the city which bears his name.

Colonel Davenport was a native of England, and removed to the United States in 1804. From 1805 to 1815 he was attached to the army. He was with General Wilkinson at the Sabine during the trouble with Aaron Burr, and in the war of 1812, in the defense of Fort Erie and at the battle of Lundy's Lane. He accompanied the first expedition (1805) which ascended the Mississippi to pacificate the hostile Indians, and assisted in founding Fort Armstrong on Rock Island. In 1818 he settled upon the island, where he resided till his death.

He was a partner in the American Fur Company till its withdrawal from the Mississippi, after which, till he retired from business, he carried on the trade alone with the Indians. He was a man of excellent character, generous and whole-souled, and had an eventful experience in frontier life.

On the 4th of July, 1845, he was murdered by desperadoes at his home on Rock Island. The tragic event threw the community into wild excitement, and spread fear and apprehension throughout the border settlements. For several weeks no trace could be found of the murderers. At length Edward Bonney, of Lee County, undertook to ferret out their place of concealment. Starting in August he proceeded to Nauvoo, where he first got trace of them by representing himself as one of the gang. On the 8th of September he arrested Fox at Centreville, Iowa, where he committed him to jail. On the 19th, he arrested Birch and John Long at Sandusky, Ohio, and brought them to Rock Island. These men were all well known in the west as leaders of a band of desperadoes. Richard Baxter and Aaron Long, brother of John, were soon after arrested as accessories to the murder, at Galena, and Granville Young at Nauvoo.

On the 6th of October, 1845, bills of indictment were found by the grand jury of Rock Island County against all of the parties except Fox, who had escaped from jail in Indiana on the 17th of September. On the 14th of October, the two Longs and Young were put upon trial, a change of venue being denied. They were found guilty and sentenced to be hung on the 29th. Birch turned state's evidence. Baxter was tried separately, and sentenced to be hung on the 18th of November, but on a writ of error granting a new trial, he was sentenced to the penitentiary for life. He died there in about two years. Birch took a change of venue to Knox County, and while awaiting trial broke jail and escaped. John Long confessed all upon the gallows, although he died without any signs of penitence or remorse.

IMPROVEMENTS.

The first improvements within the present city limits were made before the town was laid out, by Mr. LeClaire, on the grounds occupied by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad depot, in the Spring of 1833. The first public house or tavern was built on the corner of Front and Ripley Streets, in 1836, by Messrs. LeClaire and Davenport, and opened by Edward Powers, from Rock Island. In 1837 it passed into the hands of John McGregor.

John Litch, a sea captain, from Newburyport, New Hampshire, opened the first pioneer whisky shop in June, 1836, in a log shanty on Front Street, below where Burnell, Gillet & Co.'s mill was afterwards built. Captain Litch was one of the noted "characters" of pioneer times. Some of his peculiarities are thus described in an early history of Davenport: "He dealt in almost every thing, from the fine fur of the beaver and the otter down to the wolf and the pole cat. In the provision line he kept every thing that could be had, from pork and flour down to pumpkins and turnips; but the great leading article was whisky. The captain, too, had such a nice, peculiar way of making the "critter" palatable by various other ingredients that his "punches," "cobblers" and "juleps"—all made from whisky—were much sought after, and his store became the resort not only of those who wished to purchase the necessaries of life, but the professional man, the politician, the claim speculator, the old discharged soldier and the Indian; all met there upon a common level, and talked over all the matters of common interest under the balmy influence of the captain's good cheer." Captain Litch, however, was a man who occupied a number of important positions in the early time, and was not worse than many others who "took their glass" in those days when it was a common custom of the country. He died March 5, 1841.

At the close of the year 1836, there were some six or seven houses in the town. In this year Mr. Le Claire was appointed postmaster, and while running his ferry across the Mississippi used to carry the mail in his pocket. His percentage due on the first quarter was seventy-five cents.

In the Spring of 1837, Capt. John Wilson, from New Hampshire, purchased the ferry of Mr. LeClaire, and ran a flat-boat with oars till 1841, when it was supplied with a horse-boat till 1843, at which date Capt. Wilson put on a steam ferryboat. The "rights and privileges" of the ferry, conveyed to Capt. Wilson, embraced one mile up and down the river each way from the ferryhouse, which stood at the foot of Main Street, and all was purchased for the sum of $1,000.

In the Spring of 1838, Antoine Le Claire laid out his first Addition to the Town of Davenport, on his reserve. It embraced two tiers of blocks forming Harrison and Brady Streets, and running back as far as Seventh Street. This gave the town a new impulse, for in this addition purchasers could obtain clear and immediate titles, and get their lots of Mr. Le Claire himself. Hitherto the land in the old town plat had not yet come into market, and purchasers of lots could only obtain bonds for deeds. These lands were brought into market on the opening of the land office at Dubuque in May, 1840.

INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN.

In 1838 the legislature passed an act incorporating the town of Davenport. At the April election, Rodolphus Bennett was chosen mayor, and Frazer Wilson, recorder. Dr. A. C. Donaldson, D. C. Eldridge, John Forest, Thomas Dillon and Capt. John Litch were elected trustees. At a meeting of the board, or town council, which soon followed, James M. Bowling was appointed Treasurer, William Nichols, Street Commissioner, and William H. Patton, Marshal. By a vote of the members, the first corporation seal used by the council was an American twenty-five-cent piece.

The first brick house was erected by D. C. Eldridge in the Summer of 1838.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS

The first white male child born in Davenport was a son of Levi S. Colton in the Fall of 1836. He died at the Indian village on the Iowa River in August, 1840.

The first white female child was a daughter of D. C. Eldridge, Esq., who is still living, or was but a short time ago.

Alex. W. McGregor opened the first law office in 1836.

The first sermon was preached by Rev. A. M. Gavit, a Methodist minister, in the house of D. C. Eldridge, on the corner of Front and Ripley Streets.

The first marriage ceremony in town took place in the Spring of 1837, the parties being William B. Watts and a niece of Antoine Le Claire.

The first death was that of Mrs. Tennyhill in 1836. She was buried on the brow of the bluff where the First Baptist Church now stands—a place which had been selected as the burial ground of the town. During that year there were seven deaths. Some were buried on Mr. Le Claire's private ground, on the corner of Sixth and Le Claire Streets, a spot now covered with improvements, the graves having been removed.

The family residence of Willard Barrows, Esq., was built on the spot above referred to, and in the ground occupied by his garden was buried Dr. Emerson, the owner of the celebrated Dred Scott, who accompanied his master to this territory while he was in the army at Fort Armstrong. It was upon this ground that the suit was predicated for the freedom of Scott, the decision of which in the Supreme Court of the United States made Chief Justice Taney so odious throughout the North.

A Fish Story.—Mr. Willard Barrows, in June, 1837, caught a species of pike called the muskelunge, in Sugar Creek, that empties into the Cedar River, that weighed 35¼ pounds, and measured 5¼ feet in length. The same summer Mr. E. W. H. Winfield caught a catfish in the Mississippi, at Rockingham, that weighed 170 pounds. Having hauled it in front of the hotel, it was soon surrounded by spectators. A little daughter of H. W. Higgins having caught sight of the monster through the crowd, as it lay floundering on the ground, and not knowing what it was or the cause of the excitement, started off upon the run, exclaiming, "There now, if I don't go and tell my pa, they have killed our old sow."

On the 8th of May, 1840, the first Territorial Whig Convention was held at Davenport. Delegates were present from all the settled counties in the territory, except Dubuque and Clayton. They met at the Le Claire House, formed a procession, and marched with a band of music, consisting of one bugle and a clarionet, to the Harrison log cabin, just then erected on the corner of Third and Main Streets. Several speeches were made, when Alfred Rich, Esq., received the nomination for delegate to Congress. The Democratic convention met at Le Claire on the 19th of June, and nominated A. C. Dodge, who was elected by a large majority.

Business at the close of 1840 was increasing. There were eight mercantile establishments, four groceries, two hotels, a brewery nearly ready for operation, a large pork house, with cash and goods offered for pork. The population amounted to about six hundred.

On the 21st of April, 1841, the mayor, recorder and trustees of Davenport passed an ordinance raising the license for retailing liquors from $25 to $100. J. W. Parker Mayor.

On the 17th of January, 1844, the first steam mill in Davenport was put in operation by A. C. Fulton. It had been but five months and twenty-two days in building. It was four stories in height, with an engine room 27x50 feet, and was dedicated by a "grand opening" by Mr. Fulton. About three hundred citizens participated in the dinner, amidst general rejoicing over so fine an enterprise.

In the Summer of 1851, about thirty citizens and many immigrants died of cholera. An express and telegraph offices were opened in the city in 1852.

Among the men who did much for Davenport at an early time was J. N. D. Burrows, of the firm of Burrows & Prettyman, well known as merchants and manufacturers for more than twenty years. Mr. Burrows was a native of New York, spending his early life in Cincinnati, and moving thence to Iowa in 1837. He purchased and shipped the first bushel of wheat ever sent out of Scott County. In 1840, the copartnership commenced between him and R. M. Prettyman, Esq., who was a native of Maryland. In 1847, they commenced the manufacture of flour at Rockingham, and soon, for larger and better accommodations, removed to Davenport, purchasing the Fulton and Davenport Mills, which in 1854 they remodelled at a cost of $25,000. These were known as the Albion Mills. In 1855 they made 80,000 barrels of flour. The capacity of these mills was 500 barrels per day, and they once ran as high as 540 barrels. The largest business ever done by this firm was in 1855, when it amounted to over $700,000. In 1854 they packed 19,000 hogs.

In his social relations Mr. Burrows stood high, and few among the early settlers did more towards building up the interests of Davenport.

THE PRESS OF DAVENPORT.

On the 7th of July, 1838, Andrew Logan, from Pennsylvania, arrived with a printing press, and on the 17th of September following issued the first number of the Davenport Sun. Its motto, "And man went forth to till the ground," was well adapted to the situation both in a literal and a figurative sense; for not only the ground for agriculture but also for newspaper enterprise remained to be tilled in Iowa. Here and there a few workers in both departments had gone forth, but the great field for such magnificent results as have since been attained was almost wholly unoccupied.

Publishing papers in those days was an up-hill business, which only those who have had experience in it can appreciate. During the two first years, Mr. Logan had no assistants but his two little sons, the eldest only twelve years of age.

At the time of the arrival of Mr. Logan, the county seat had not been located. The excitement upon the question was at its highest pitch. The editor was like the man who felt obliged to say, "Good Lord and good Devil, for he did not know into which hands he would finally fall," his paper being a candidate for whichever town should prove the successful competitor for the county seat. He, however, solved the problem by opening his columns to both sides, and letting representatives of the rival localities advocate their respective claims. In this way his paper fought a pretty strong battle both for Rockingham and Davenport, without incurring the ill-will of either place. On the side of Davenport the principal writer was John H. Thorrington, father of Honorable Thomas Thorrington; and on the side of Rockingham, Colonel John H. Sullivan. Some pretty spicy discussions were carried on in those days.

The paper did good service in the interest of immigration and the building up of the county and state. It issued its last number on the 8th of October, 1841. Mr. Logan established himself upon a farm on the Iowa City road about six miles from Davenport. He was, in fact, the pioneer farmer of the prairies of this section, there being at the time of his settlement only one house between him and town. He sold his place some time in 1863 and moved to Marshall County.

Davenport Gazette.—In August, 1841, was issued the first number of the Davenport Gazette, by Alfred Sanders, Esq. Mr. Sanders was from Cincinnati, where he had resided till twenty-one years of age, having been born in Ohio in 1819. He had visited the Upper Mississippi in 1840 in search of a place for a permanent settlement, and finally selected Davenport as his future home.

None but those who have tried the experiment can realize the trials, hardships and discouragements incident to opening a printing establishment in a frontier town away from all resources both financial and mechanical, and at a time of general stringency and depression in money matters throughout the new settlements of the West. To enter upon such an enterprise at such a time, required not only energy, courage and perseverance, but a faith in the future of the place and territory, based on a far-reaching foresight of their coming greatness and prosperity. Mr. Sanders possessed these qual ties in an eminent degree. He landed on the 11th of August, from one of the smallest river steamers, the water being so low on the rapids that the boat had to be shoved over with poles. The arrival had been announced, and soon the landing was thronged with a crowd of spectators, curious to see the new press and editor. There being no wharf and the water being low, a plank walk was laid to the boat, on which in attempting to carry the press it was precipitated into the Mississippi. It was, however, finally landed, none the worse for its "baptism" before entering upon its new work, and the first number of the Gazette was issued on the 26th of August, 1841. Up to the present day not a single number has been missed in its regular publication. For the first ten years it hardly paid expenses; every obstacle existed in the way of its success; facilities and a field for it had to be created, by a slow and laborious process of self-denial, energy, economy, and incessant effort; yet Mr. Sanders kept his paper alive, and constantly increased its weekly value to his readers. Few such instances of deep devotion to a worthy enterprise amidst such hardships and discouragements are found in the records of the West as that which characterized Mr. Sanders in his determination to found a standard newspaper in a new country such as Iowa was at that time.

Nor should the man who did the printing, Mr. Levi Davis, be forgotten in this record of the early press. No man among the early settlers of Davenport, is deserving of more credit than he, for faithfulness, industry and sterling integrity. He was the partner of Mr. Sanders, not only pecuniarily, but in the care, responsibility and burdens which came upon the paper in the many dark years of its existence. He made the paper a model of neatness in mechanical execution such as few files of Western papers produced under such disadvantages can show. As the country and town grew in population and business, the patronage of the Gazette increased, so that in May, 1851, its proprietors felt justified in enlarging it to a seven-column paper. On the 3d of September, 1853, they issued a tri-weekly. On the 16th of October, 1854, it appeared as a daily, starting out under favorable auspices, and continuing to increase in circulation and influence, notwithstanding the financial depression of 1857. In 1855 the proprietors introduced the first steam-press ever put in operation in Iowa—a large-sized Taylor & Hoe press, and from that time forward the establishment has been a financial success such as few newspapers in the West have attained.

The dates of enlargement of the Gazette are the following: Weekly—1842, 1846, 1855, 1865 and 1872; Daily—1856, 1861, 1865 and 1874.

The changes in proprietorship have been as follows: Established by Alfred Sanders and Levi Davis in 1841. The latter retired in 1856, and was succeeded by A. H. Sanders, who retired in 1861. In 1862 the Gazette Company was formed, Edward Russell, editor; James K. McCosh, Levi Davis, Fred Koops and Edward Russell, partners. In 1863, J. H. White purchased the interest of J. K. McCosh, and became business manager till 1865, when he sold his interest to Edward Russell, Levi Davis and F. Koops. In 1868, Mr. Koops died, and his interest was purchased by J. S. Conner, who became business manager till 1870, when J. H. White purchased his interest and assumed the management. In 1871, Edward Russell sold his interest to W. M. Potter. In 1872, Levi Davis sold to H. C. Marsh. In 1873, J. H. White died, and in 1874 his interest was purchased by E. C. Chapin, the present business manager of the Gazette Company, of which C. H. Marsh is one of the proprietors, and Waldo M. Potter, editor.

The Gazette is a leading paper and one of the most influential west of Chicago, and is published in a fine building owned by the company.

The Davenport Democrat.—In 1844 a newspaper was started in Davenport called the Democratic Banner, by Alexander Montgomery, who sold to E. Sneathen. T. D. Eagal afterwards became editor and proprietor, and after passing through several hands, the paper was purchased in 1855 by Hildreth, Richardson & West. Mr. Hildreth died in 1857, and Richardson & West continued it under the name of the Iowa State Democrat. Afterwards the Daily News was purchased and combined with it and it was issued as the Daily Democrat and News. Not having the data, we are unable to follow the subsequent changes, but in the hands of the present proprietors, the Richardson Brothers, the Democrat has become "a power in the land," and source of profit to its editors and publishers, who are now reaping in an increasing ratio, the fruits of the editorial ability and shrewd business management which has placed their paper in the front rank of journals west of the Mississippi river. The Democrat Building is a fine establishment. The whole enterprise is an illustration of what may be accomplished by talent and energy, directed by sound financial ability and good financiering. Few papers have achieved a more decided and permanent success than the Davenport Democrat in the hands of its present proprietors.

Der Demokrat, German daily and weekly, Liberal in politics, published by Henry Lischer; J. P. Sibolt, editor. This prosperous and successful journal was established in 1851 by Theo. Guelick, and is among the oldest German papers in the state. Its daily issue is the only daily in the state printed in the German language. It became the property of its present publisher, Mr. H. Lischer, in 1856, who enlarged it in 1863 The weekly edition is said to have the largest circulation of any German newspaper published in Iowa, and its influence is second to none in shaping and moulding the thought and politics of the country.

The Western Weekly, devoted to news, literature and temperance, is the organ of the Good Templars' organization of the state, and is a high-toned and ably-conducted paper. It is edited by Samuel Roberts, a polished, conscientious and able writer, and a gentleman who has a high ideal of journalism. Its mechanical execution is in the best style of the printer's art, while its contents are rich and varied, affording its numerous weekly readers a choice selection of literary, miscellaneous and original matter. The Weekly is published by the Western Weekly Publishing Company, and has a liberal and increasing patronage.

The Davenport Times, published by the Eldridge Brothers, was started in 1874 as a gratituous advertising sheet, but has been converted into a regular newspaper, and is receiving an encouraging patronage. Its publishers deserve to prosper, for they are the right kind of newspaper men—enterprising, courteous and obliging, and have an eye to the general public welfare as well as to business. The Times is published by the Eldridge Brothers on Third Street, between Brady and Perry.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Davenport has seven or eight public school houses, many of which are costly and commodious buildings, and all supplied with able and efficient teachers. The schools are under the management of a City Superintendent and a Board of Education, and are graded in primary, intermediate, grammar and high school departments. In no city west of the Mississippi, are the public schools in a better condition than in Davenport. Much pains have been taken to elect men to regulate the schools whose are intelligent and of high moral character. Although there are many deservedly popular select schools, yet the interest in the common schools of the city has gradually increased in proportion to the efficiency of their management, and as experience demonstrates the advantages of a free school system, open to all classes, and in which the rich and the poor alike have the opportunities of an education.

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS.

Catholic.—The first church organization in Davenport was St. Anthony's Roman Catholic. As early as 1836 missionary priests from Dubuque preached occasionally in private houses. In the Spring of 1838, Reverend Samuel Muzzuchelli, an Italian by birth, visited Davenport and organized a church. During the Summer, Antoine LeClaire erected a small brick church edifice on Church Square, which was enlarged in 1845, and was for several years the largest public edifice in town. On the 22d of May, 1839, St. Anthony's Church was dedicated by Right Reverend Bishop Loras, of Dubuque, assisted by Reverend Samuel Muzzuchelli, and for many years it was under the pastorate of Reverend J. M. Pelamorgues.

In 1855 a second Catholic Church was organized, for the Germans, by Reverend Michael Flammany. A stone church building was erected the same year on Mitchell's addition to Davenport, Mr. Mitchell donating the land. Reverend Mr. Baumgartner was appointed pastor, and remained in that office till 1848.

St. Margaret's Church was erected by Mr. LeClaire, who also donated the ground for it, in 1856. Reverend A. Trevis was the pastor for many years, and was assisted by Reverend H. Cosgrove.

In 1858 the number of Catholics in Davenport amounted to 7,000.

The Catholics organized a temperance society in 1841, which did much good, and had also an institute, which met once a week for lectures and discussions. These imparted a beneficial influence, the fruits of which are still ripening in the tone of society. Although the majority of the people of this communion were poor in the early days of Davenport, yet they had the prestige of numbers, of being the first in the field, and the powerful support of such liberal patrons as a Davenport, a LeClaire and a Mitchell.

Presbyterian.—In 1838 the first Presbyterian Church was formed, consisting of ten members, and met in a small building above the alley on Ripley Street, between Front and Second. The building belonged to T. S. Hoge, and was subsequently burned down. In May, 1839, a more thorough organization was effected, at a meeting held in a little frame school house on the corner of Fourth and Harrison Streets. The pioneer clergymen who officiated on the occasion were, Reverend Ithamer Pillsbury, of Andover, Illinois; Reverend M. Hummer, of Rock Island; and Reverend Enoch Mead, of Rockingham.

Among the incidents of this meeting, it is related that Reverend Mr. Pillsbury walked all the way from Andover to Davenport, twenty-six miles, and returned on foot; that when he came to Rock River slough it was overflowed for a space of some eight rods, and was too deep to wade; and that he applied to Mr. George Moore, the nearest resident, though living two miles distant on the island, who kindly sent his son with a team to carry him across. This is but an instance among many of the hardships of pioneer ministers in the West.

In 1842 J. M. D. Burrows and T. S. Hoge were ordained elders of the church. The first settled pastor was Reverend Samuel Cleland, in 1843. Their first house of worship was a small brick structure, on the site of the present church building.

In the Fall of 1846 the Sunday School was first organized; C. C. Williams, Superintendent. The edifice erected in 1852 had the first steeple and bell in Davenport.

Christian Church.—The first organization of this church was on July 25, 1839, at the house of D. C. Eldridge, Elder James Rumbold officiating. Seventeen persons united. After holding meetings some time in private houses, the congregation rented as their first stated place of worship Mr. Tapley's carpenter shop, on Second, between Main and Brady Streets, at four dollars per month. In 1844 a brick meeting house was erected on Brady Street, between Fourth and Fifth, costing $800. "Christian Chapel" was erected in 1855-6, at a cost of $8,500. In 1842 the church was incorporated, by act of the Legislature, under the name and style of "The Church of Christ, meeting in Davenport."

In 1844, Doctor H. P. Gatchell was pastor; in 1848, Elder Charles Levan, succeeded by Elder James E. Gaston, who was followed by Elder Alexander Johnson. In 1854 Elder Jonas Hartzell became pastor, continuing till February 7, 1858, and was succeeded by Elder Jeff Rogers till October of that year. Elder Samuel Lowe followed in August, 1859; and in December, 1862, Elder A. Chatterton settled over the church.

Congregational.—The first Congregational sermon in this vicinity was preached by Reverend Asa Turner, at the house of Levi Chamberlin, Esq., in Pleasant Valley, in the Summer of 1836. On the 30th of July, 1839, a small congregation was formed in Davenport, and met in a small building on Main Street, opposite the Catholic church. Their next place of meeting was the "Log Cabin" erected by the "Harrison Club" on Third Street; next, they met in a school room on the east side of Harrison Street. In 1844 part of their church building was erected and dedicated.

Reverend Ephraim Adams was the first regular pastor, and continued ten years and six months in the pastorate, resigning in May, 1855. He began with twelve members. In 1862 the number had reached four hundred and twenty-three. The successor of Mr. Adams in 1855 was Reverend George F. Magoun.

Episcopal.—The organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Iowa, was effected at Muscatine, in August, 1853. Reverend Henry W. Lee, D.D., was elected Bishop in June, 1854, and consecrated in Rochester, New York, in October following.

The first regular service of the Episcopal Church in Davenport was held by Reverend C. H. Goldsmith, on the 14th of October, 1841. On the 4th of November a parish was regularly organized, under the name of "Trinity Church." Ira Cook, J. W. Parker, W. W. Dodge, Ebenezer Cook and H. S. Finley were elected Vestrymen.

Their first church edifice was a small frame building, on Main, between Fourth and Fifth Streets, which was abandoned in 1853, and service held in a store room on the corner of Rock Island and Second Streets till August, 1854, when their church was completed and dedicated.

St. Luke's Parish was organized on the 4th of April, 1856. In March, 1857, Reverend Horatio Powers became rector. On the 14th of March, 1858, the beautiful church edifice of this parish was dedicated.

It is impossible for us, in the limited space at our command to give more than a mere sketch of the beginnings of these important religious movements.

Davenport is headquarters of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Iowa, having the Bishop's residence and cathedral, the latter a fine structure erected some ten years ago.

Methodist Episcopal.—Reverend Mr. Gavitt, from Ohio, first sounded the gospel trumpet according to the Methodist faith in this vicinity in 1836, preaching the first sermon in the house of D. C. Eldridge. A class of five or six members was formed in 1839, at the house of Timothy Dillon, on Third Street, near Washington Square. Such was the beginning of a church which has since grown into great magnitude and influence. In 1853, the little brick church on Perry Street becoming too small, the new church on Brady Street was erected, and dedicated in July, 1854. In 1863 this church had a membership of about four hundred.

Baptist.—We have not been able to obtain the history of the founding of the First Baptist Church of Davenport, but infer that it had an early existence, and attained a good degree of prosperity prior to 1851; for on the 6th of October of that year "sixteen members of the First Baptist Church of Davenport asked and received letters of dismission for the purpose of organizing another church." On the 7th of October the council met at the house of J. M. Witherwax, and proceeded to organize the "sixteen members" into a "Second Baptist Church of Davenport, Iowa."

On the 13th of June, 1852, Reverend Mr. Ellis arrived, settled, and the church steadily increased in numbers. In February, 1853, a movement was made toward building a house of worship, which was soon consummated in a stone edifice, forty-six by eighty-six feet, with basement and spire. The membership in 1862 was two hundred and eighty. Reverend Isaac Butterfield, pastor for five years, resigned his charge in 1863, leaving the church out of debt and prosperous.

Evangelical Lutheran.—This church was established November 25, 1855. Reverend Jacob Steck was the first pastor. In 1856 a church building was erected and dedicated.

Second Presbyterian, N. S.—This church, an off-shoot of the First Presbyterian, was founded on the 4th of May, 1857, with twenty-eight members. For some time they occupied Grigg's Hall; then Metropolitan Hall; and subsequently the house originally occupied by the First Baptist Church on Brady Street. Reverend D. L. Packard was their pastor, during whose ministry the church seemed to prosper; but from removals and financial embarrassments, it declined, and, we believe, was finally abandoned.

Associate Reformed Presbyterian.—A church of this order was founded in 1856, and erected a house of worship on the southeast corner of Scott and Eleventh Streets on a lot donated by James McIntosh. The congregation, in 1857, numbered about sixty, and was under the pastoral charge of Reverend S. M. Hutchinson.

Dutch Reformed Church.—In 1859 a church of this denomination was organized with eleven members. A neat church edifice, seating two hundred and fifty persons, was erected at a cost of $3,500, on the corner of Eleventh and Brady Streets, and dedicated on the 6th of September, 1860. At the same time Reverend C. G. VanDerveer was installed pastor. In 1863 the church numbered forty members, and the Sunday school ninety. Mr. VanDerveer was Chaplain of the Eighth Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

which was captured at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, after which he resumed his charge at Davenport.

Unitarian.—In about the year 1870 a movement was made by the Western Secretary of the American Unitarian Association for the establishment of a Unitarian Society in Davenport. A society was organized, and since that time a church has been built and supplied with regular preaching. Reverend S. S. Hunting is the present pastor.

ADDITIONS TO THE CITY.

Antoine Le Claire laid out his first addition to the City of Davenport in the Spring of 1838. The dates of his second and third additions we have not been able to obtain. His fourth addition was made in May, 1850; his fifth, on the 22d of February, 1852; his sixth, in the Fall of 1853; and his seventh, on the 20th of June, 1854. Cook & Sargeant's addition was made in 1851.

POLK COUNTY.

Polk County is situated in the central portion of the state, and has a considerable variety of surface, the streams running through it determining in a great measure its topography. It is a good agricultural county, having a soil as rich and diversified as any in the state, and yielding as abundantly to the skill and industry of the husbandman. The rivers and streams which flow through this county collect their waters from Southern Minnesota and from a large area in Central Iowa, forming a water system of perhaps greater extent than that of any other county in the state, and affording numerous sites for mills and manufactories. The principal river is the Des Moines, which flows through the county in a southeasterly direction, receiving its tributaries—Beaver Creek, North River and Raccoon River—from the west, the latter emptying into the Des Moines within the city limits. The tributaries on the east side are Four Mile Creek, the Chicaugua, or Skunk River, and Indian Creek, besides several smaller streams, among which may be named Camp Creek, Mud Creek and Spring Creek. Big Creek flows into the Des Moines from the north. The larger of these streams contain fine fish of various kinds, and are more or less rapid in their course, passing between banks of various heights, from the slight elevation of the bottom lands to bluffs and hills of considerable altitude. The margins of the streams are well timbered, and indeed throughout the county considerable timber prevails—much of it useful for manufacturing purposes, such as black walnut, hickory, white oak, maple, ash, elm and sycamore; and detached groves are found in many parts of the county, which relieve and beautify the prairie landscape.

Quarries of limestone are found in different parts of the county, and sandstone and coal are universal and inexhaustible. Many coal mines are in successful operation, and the price of coal for fuel in the city of Des Moines ranges at about $3.00 per ton.

In point of health Polk County ranks among the best in the state, the surface being elevated several hundred feet above the level of the Mississippi. There is hardly any marsh, a very small proportion of wet land, and only one or two sluggish streams in the whole county. After rains, and after the frost leaves the ground in the Spring, the soil is freed from surface water and mud with astonishing rapidity. This is especially noticeable since the country has been generally brought under a state of cultivation, and fevers and ague, which were common in the early settlement, are now almost wholly unknown. The climate is milder than that east of the Alleghany Mountains in the same latitude, the winters less severe, the snows lighter and frosts not so deep. Polk County lies south of latitude 42°, the same as Connecticut and Northern Pennsylvania, and the climate here is not so rigorous as in either of those states.

HISTORICAL.

Purchase of the Territory.—The territory embraced in Polk County was originally included in the purchase made by the United States Commissioners of the Sac and Fox Indians, at Agency City, on the 11th of October, 1842. By the terms of this treaty the Indians were to remain in the exclusive possession of the "Purchase" till October 11th, 1845. In the Fall of the last mentioned year most of them were removed to their reservation in Kansas, the balance being removed in the Spring of 1846.

Fort Des Moines. Meantime, for the protection of the Indians, Government erected Fort Des Moines within the limits of the "New Purchase." The expedition for the erection of the fort was conducted by Captain James Allen, the future commandant, an officer of fine military talents and experience, who arrived up the Des Moines River from Fort Sanford on the 9th of May, 1843, with a small detachment of United States troops, on board of the steamer Ione. This was the first steamer that ever ascended the Des Moines as far up as the present capital of Iowa. Effecting a landing at what is now the foot of Court Avenue, the troops and military stores were disembarked, and Captain Allen returned with the steamer to Fort Sanford, to make arrangements for bringing on the rest of the soldiers and supplies. In due time they arrived to join their comrades, amounting in all to one hundred and twenty-five officers and men, and set to work to erect the fort, which soon reared its log palisades near the mouth of the Raccoon, at its confluence with the Des Moines.

Thus was established another fort within the Indian country, the outpost of an advancing civilization destined soon to sweep away the last vestige of that once powerful race from the continent. The barracks were built of rough logs, one story high, with stone chimneys and "puncheon" floors. The buildings, including stables for the horses, numbered about twenty-five. Captain Allen had his headquarters not far from where the old Collins House once stood, on Market Street. Under him were Lieutenants Greer, King and Potter, the first serving in command of the artillery, the others of the infantry. Doctor Griffin was surgeon of the post; Major Beech, Indian agent; and Joseph Smart, interpreter.

Indian Traders.—Soon after the arrival of the troops a trading post was established on the east side of the river, by two noted Indian traders, bearing respectively the names of Washington George and George Washington Ewing, brothers, from Ohio. According to a memorandum kept by Benjamin Bryant, "the Ewings landed in a keelboat, on the east side of the Des Moines River, May 30, 1843, with goods, corn, some provisions, and tools to build a trading house." They also built a log cabin to live in. Among the treaty stipulations was an important clause, that no whites should be allowed to settle on the New Purchase without special permission from the officers of the agency, until the Indian title should expire. On the 6th of May, 1843, Benjamin Bryant, who had lived a good deal among the Indians, was allowed to make a claim, and J. B. Scott, trader, James Drake, gunsmith and blacksmith, John Startevant, Robert Kinzie and Alexander Turner, were also permitted to locate claims and to improve a small tract of land as attaches of the garrison, to raise corn for the Indian agency. Phelps & Co., of Fulton, Illinois, received a permit from the Government as Indian traders, and built a log house on the east side of the Des Moines, near where Tuttle's packing house now stands.

Early Settlers.—In February, 1844, Peter Newcomer obtained permission of Captain Allen to make a claim on the prairie east of town about four miles, on condition that he would build a bridge over Four Mile Creek, a road having been laid out in the Fall of the previous year from the fort to Toole's Point, now Monroe, Jasper County. Here Mr. Newcomer erected his solitary cabin and endured the hardships and privations of frontier life for many years.

One of the earliest settlers in the county was Honorable Thomas Mitchell, who came from Fairfield, Iowa, in April, 1844. He built his cabin on a farm which he named Apple Grove, on the Iowa City road, in Beaver township, where he kept a house of accommodation for the traveling public for many years.

In May, 1846, Joseph Slaughter built a cabin about a mile south of Skunk River, where it makes its eastward bend to Colfax. Joseph Kintz settled to the north, on Clear Creek. These pioneers and the Tooles were Mr. Mitchell's neighbors.

John Saylor settled near the fort in April, 1845, having obtained a permit to supply the garrison with hay and other produce. In October of the same year, Isaac Cooper, now a wealthy citizen of Des Moines, opened his cabin in Delaware Township. Mr. Cooper was the pioneer chairmaker in the county. He fashioned a chair from a black walnut tree, making the seat of strips of bark, which rustic heirloom is still in possession of the family.

Rev. Mr. Purdoe, an itinerant minister, preached the first sermon in the county at Apple Grove, in the Fall of 1844. Present as hearers: Mr. Mitchell's family, two hired men, the servant girl, and some half-a-dozen travelers.

The first well dug in the county was operated by Mr. Cooper, with a pair of skillets left by the retiring Indians. This well was twenty feet deep, and had an unfailing supply of water.

Capt. Allen commenced a sawmill on Middle River, a short distance from Carlysle, in the Fall of 1843, and took in as a partner J. D. Parmalee. The enterprise became a success. Corn was afterwards cracked and ground for food at this mill. It was the first mill in Polk County. In 1844, facilities for grinding wheat were added to it, and in the Winter farmers came with their grists. Previous to this they had to go as far as Bonaparte, 150 miles over bridgeless roads.

In April, 1846, Eli Grulliger settled in Franklin Township, and gave his name to the grove of timber that sheltered his cabin. In May of the same year, Michael Lavish commenced making improvements at Lavish's Grove. Corey's Grove, in the corner of Elkhart Township, was settled by Walker Corey and John Fisher, in 1846. Among the early settlers in Beaver Township was L. M. Burk, in April, 1846. In Camp Creek Township, James N. Stewart settled in March, 1847, moving by wagon from Indiana. He built his cabin about two miles from the Des Moines River, at a place known as "Stewart's Settlement." George Beebe settled in Madison Township in May, 1846, and was followed by D. C. Marts, with his family, in 1847. Andrew Messersmith was also a settler in this township in 1846.

The year 1846 marks the first settlement in Delaware Township in the advent of Riley Thornton, who built his cabin on a branch of Four-Mile Creek. James Smith, now a wealthy pomologist living south of Des Moines, made a beginning in Douglas Township in 1847. He and his son dug a hole in the side of a hill, and completed their first residence by putting up a few logs and poles, to the front entrance of which was attached a slab door. Here he began the first nursery in the county, which in a year or two he sold to Nathan Thornton.

Hon. J. C. Jordan built his cabin in Walnut Township, about six miles west of Des Moines, in 1848. His cabin was noted for having the first battened door in the county, the fashion having been to rive out lumber from walnut logs and fasten the rude planks to a cross-piece with wooden pegs. This primitive door was usually hung on wooden hinges and fastened with a wooden latch, from the outside of which depended a string, a symbol of the free and easy access of the visitor to the cabin of the hospitable pioneer.

Addison Michael was one of the first settlers in Saylor Township before he moved to Fort Des Moines. In his cabin was born the first baby in the township, in April, 1846. John Bradley lived in a cabin made of cornstalks, with a pole roof, and quilts hung about the beds to protect the sleepers from the storm, a partition of quilts dividing the main apartment into kitchen and dormitory.

EXCITEMENT ABOUT CLAIMS.

The Indian title to the lands in this portion of Iowa expired at midnight, October 11, 1845. This period was impatiently awaited by those who were already here, for after that time each was at liberty to make a claim of 320 acres, which could be held until Government brought the land into market, and then purchased under such regulations as are now in force. Long before the expiration of the Indian title, the settlers around the fort had made arrangements with each other, and the most valuable tracts were already considered claims. Some claims were even measured and staked off, but this was of no validity, and done only for convenience, or to facilitate such subsequent survey as was absolutely necessary to establish and identify it. So eager were the settlers, who had previously remained only at the sufferance of the General Government, to have permanent houses near the fort, that during the fore part of the night preceding the 11th of October, men were stationed in all directions around with instructions to immediately begin the measurement of claims as soon as midnight arrived.

Precisely at twelve o'clock, the loud report of a gun at the agency announced that the empire of the red man had ended here forever, and that of his master race had begun. Answering reports rang sharply on the midnight air in quick succession, till the signal was conveyed for miles around, and all understood that civilization had now commenced her reign in Central Iowa. The moon was slowly sinking in the west, and ere long the landscape was shrouded in darkness save the fitful flashes of torches and lanterns carried by the claim makers, or the wilder glare occasioned by the burning of some Indian wigwam, set on fire to light the pioneers in their work. Throughout the country thousands of acres were laid off into claims before the dawn. Some who had not axes marked the boundaries of their claims by cutting their initials on trees with their pocket knives. Such was the case with Jacob Frederick and Jeremiah Church, in the vicinity of Fort Des Moines—the latter cutting his initials by the light of a burning wigwam in the old Indian village.

Mr. Church started the town of Liberty in 1846; but it was afterwards abandoned, and Dudley sprang into existence in its stead.

There was some quarreling after the eventful night of October 11, as might naturally have been expected; but the difficulties were finally adjusted in a satisfactory manner by a claim committee.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COUNTY.

The Territorial Legislature, in session at Iowa City, passed an act January 17, 1846, organizing Polk County, with certain boundaries which were afterwards changed, by transferring four townships to Warren County in the interest of Fort Des Moines, it not being in the center of the county without the proposed change. These townships were, however, returned by legislative action in 1852, after they had been used in the interest of the seat of justice of Polk County.

The organization of the county was an exciting subject in the little hamlet. Where will the county seat be located? was the main question. Honorable Thomas Mitchell, Doctor Fagan, and two other gentlemen, were the lobby members from the Fort. Starting on horseback one cold February morning to go down to Iowa City, they reached Bennett's Cabin, four miles east from Newton, nearly frozen. Corn bread and sour bacon, and sleeping in a trundle bed, did not dampen their determination. "Des Moines must not be beaten," was the war cry.

Brooklyn was in the field against Fort Des Moines. The Legislature appointed Thomas Hughes, of Johnson, M. T. Williams, of Mahaska, and Giles M. Pinneo, of Scott County, commissioners to locate the county seat. These gentlemen did not immediately attend to their duties, and local excitement ran high. Among those who ardently fought for the championship of Fort Des Moines over Brooklyn, was A. D. Jones. Esquire, who first made his appearance in this section at Meacham's Tavern February 13, 1846. Mass meetings were held on the day following, both at the garrison and at Brooklyn, and parties nominated for County Surveyor—Mr. Jones at Fort Des Moines and Mr. Woodard at Brooklyn. In the election which followed it was claimed that Mr. Woodard received a majority of the votes cast, but Mr. Jones contested the point and received the certificate of election.

The county seat was located by the commissioners at Fort Des Moines, May 25, 1846.

The first election in Polk County occurred on the first Monday in April, 1846. In Fort Des Moines the polls were opened in one of the dragoon houses near what is now called "The Point." There were three places of voting in the county: At Thomas Mitchell's, in Camp Creek precinct; at J. D. Parmalee's, near Albany Mills; and at the Fort.

The whole number of inhabitants, at that time, in Polk County, exclusive of the military, was between two and three hundred. At the election the following county officers were chosen: Thomas McMullen, Recorder; William F. Ayers, Treasurer; Thomas Mitchell, Sheriff; John Saylor, Judge of Probate; G. B. Clark, County Assessor; Addison Michael, County Collector; A. D. Jones, County Surveyor; James Phillips, Coroner; Benjamin Saylor, William H. Meacham and E. W. Fouts, County Commissioners.

FIRST DISTRICT COURT.

Polk County, at its organization, was included in the second judicial district, of which Honorable Joseph Williams was judge. He presided at the first court held in the county, which convened on the 2d of April, 1846, one of the log shanties of the garrison being appropriated as the temporary abode of justice. Here court was opened in due form, and with as much dignity as the unpropitious circumstances would allow. John B. Larsh, United States Marshal; Thomas Baker, District Attorney; and Perry L. Crossman, District Clerk were present. It appearing that no grand jury had been summoned, the court adjourned till the next day, when the sheriff returned his venire, with the following named grand jurors: William Lamb, John B. Scott, Samuel Dilley, John Baird, George B. Worden, J. M. Thrift, Samuel Deford, Samuel Shafer, W. W. Clapp, Benjamin Saylor, Peter Newcomer, Newton Lamb, J. D. Parmalee, James Davis, J. J. Meldrum, Thomas Leonard, T. McMullen, Jeremiah Church, Thaddeus Williams, A. Brannon, G. B. Clark, and William F. Ayers.

The grand jury being empanneled, sworn and charged, were given in custody to Lewis Whitten, b iliff, and went out as usual to consider such matters and things as might perchance be brought to their notice. Happily, crimes had been but few, and they found nothing demanding their attention; consequently they brought in no "true bills," except for their fees. They soon returned to court, were discharged, and the court adjourned till the next term. Jeremiah Church, one of the jury, says in his journal, they were an uncouth and barbarous looking set; that he felt constrained to apologize to the judge for their rough appearance, but Mr. Church does not state whether his habiliments were altogether up to the dignity of a grand jury or not. Judge Williams jocosely told him that men might have clean hearts under dirty shirts, and that in a new country every allowance was to be made for personal attire and appearance.

The first duly solemnized marriage that ever occurred in the limits of the county, and perhaps in the new purchase, was that of Benjamin Bryant to Miss Elvira B. Burge. The ceremony was performed by Aaron D. Stark, Esquire. It was Esquire Stark's first essay at performing a marriage rite, and he is said to have introduced some variations from the ordinary ritual.

LAND SALES AND CLAIMS.

The first land sales of the land embraced in the last Indian purchase occurred at Iowa City, which was the nearest land office, in the Fall of 1848. The sole tenure by which many of the settlers in this vicinity held their lands up to this time was the precarious right of claim, which involved the liability of being obliged to give up their lands at any time to speculators and parties who might supersede them in pre-emption. Speculators industriously scoured the country, noted the most valuable portions, and determined to seize upon them, even though they were the claims of others, the moment they came into market. To protect themselves the settlers formed an organization, at a public meeting held at Fort Des Moines, on the 8th day of April, 1848, at which the committee reported the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That we will protect all persons who do or may hold claims against the interference of any person or persons who shall attempt to deprive such claim holders of their claims, by pre-emption or otherwise.

2. Resolved, That we will in all cases discountenance the speculator, or other persons who shall thus attempt any innovation upon the homes of the rightful settlers; that we will not hold any fellowship with such persons, and that they shall be regarded as nuisances in the community.

3 Resolved, That no person shall be allowed to pre-empt or purchase in any form from Government any land which shall be held as a claim, unless he shall first obtain the consent of the claimant.

4. Resolved, That the filing of any intention to pre-empt contrary to the rights of the settlers be regarded as an attempt wrongfully to deprive the citizen of his home and his claim.

5. Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed, and that it shall be their duty to inquire into and adjust all difficulties and contentions in cases where claims are in dispute.

6. Resolved, That we will sustain and uphold said committee in their decisions and in the discharge of all their duties.

7. Resolved, That all persons be invited to sign the foregoing resolutions, and that the signers pledge themselves to be governed by and aid in sustaining them.

In pursuance of the fifth resolution, the following committee was appointed: J. B. Scott, Thomas Mitchell, John Saylor, Doctor P. A. Fagan and Thomas Henderson. Nearly all the prominent men of the settlements signed the resolutions, and in some cases earnest work was necessary to carry out the purpose of the association.

THE FLEMING WAR.

Such was the case in the "Fleming war," which occurred in the Spring of 1849. Asa Fleming held a claim a few miles south of Fort Des Moines. One B. Perkins, a neighbor, filed an intention of pre-empting it. Both were members of the claim club, and on this account public opinion grew warm against Perkins. Fleming gathered a crowd; the claim members armed with guns and other weapons, and after expostulating in vain, went for Perkins, who barely escaped being shot by mounting a horse and riding with all speed to Fort Des Moines, where he arrived not a moment too soon to hide himself from the fury of his pursuers. In a few days he recovered from his fright, and swore out a warrant to have Fleming arrested for shooting with intent to kill. The warrant was served, and Fleming was brought into court by George Mitchell, constable, to be tried before Justice Luce; but before any of the formalities were entered into a crowd of Fleming's friends broke into the office and rescued him, carrying him away by main force. He was placed upon a horse and escorted to his cabin by the exultant crowd, amidst cheering and waving of handkerchiefs. In a little while Fleming was again arrested; but his friends, eighty strong, determined that he should not be tried, and appearing at the Raccoon ferry ordered the ferryman, Mr. Scott, to take them over. He refused, so long as they were armed and threatening the town. Word by this time had reached the village, and such was the excitement that business for the time being was suspended. The people rushed to the ferry to witness the fight that seemed to be impending. The Fleming crowd swore at Scott, and threatened to go round and set fire to the town. But the ferryman, with intrepid coolness, told them to stack their guns and they should be immediately set across. After some controversy, and seeing that Scott was determined, they concluded to stack their guns, and were all set across and marched into town unarmed. Fleming was examined in due form, and found guilty of the charge preferred by Perkins. He gave bonds for his appearance at the next term of the District Court. The grand jury, however, by that time failed to find a bill against Fleming; and Perkins finding himself so unpopular in the matter, was obliged to give Fleming a bond, and this ended the battle.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The first court house was erected in 1848, on a lot purchased by the county of Thomas McMullen for $35. The building cost about $2,000, and was built by John Saylor. The jail was erected in 1849, by Messrs. Shell & Guerrant, at a cost of $750.

The present court house, including jail in the basement, was begun in 1858, and not completed for several years. It was first used for court purposes in October, 1866. The cost of the building, as now completed, was over $100,000. Dyer H. Young, of Des Moines, was the architect, and Isaac Cooper the contractor and builder.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

The Polk County Poor Farm and Asylum are situated seven miles north of Des Moines, in Saylor township. The farm contains two hundred and ninety acres, and is in a good state of improvement. The house is a three-story frame building, forty by sixty, and the average number of inmates is about thirty. Mr. Nathan Parmenter, Supervisor for District No. 3, Madison township, is Superintendent of the county poor, and has appointed as steward of the farm and asylum Mr. William S. Fisher.

In October, 1852, an agricultural fair was held in the court house yard—rather a slim exhibition for the infant Polk Agricultural Society; but in the next Autumn, in September, on the grounds of the district fair on Raccoon bottom, the agricultural resources of the county made a fine showing for a new section.

Messrs. McClothen and Mitchell made a rail pen for sixteen blooded stock—short horns, exhibited by Mr. Bennet, bought in Massachusetts. They were beautiful animals. Mr. Mitchell, of Apple Grove, showed a fine Durham bull—all were thoroughbreds. Jacob Frederick and his son, B. F. Frederick, of Four Mile township, exhibited fine wooled sheep; good horses by Doctor Brooks, the President. There were fine specimens of wheat and corn; immense squashes and potatoes. The directors of the society this year were Honorable Thomas Mitchell, of Apple Grove; Captain F. R. West and Honorable B. F. Allen, of Fort Des Moines. The ladies brought no fancy work, nor was there any exhibition of equestrianship on the grounds. Mr. Morris was a prominent exhibitor at this fair.

The Polk Agricultural Society, re-organized in 1872, held its fairs during the two following years. In 1875 it was absorbed by the District Association, embracing several adjoining counties. The fair grounds of this association are located on a spot admirably fitted for the purpose, on the north bank of the Coon River, and within the limits of the city of Des Moines.

CITY OF DES MOINES.

DES MOINES, the seat of justice of Polk County and capital of Iowa, is situated at the confluence of the Racoon with the Des Moines River, and occupies nearly a central position in the state. It is 161 miles northwest of Keokuk, 174 miles west from Davenport, and 357 miles by railroad from Chicago. The distance to Council Bluffs and Omaha on the west is 142 miles.

Des Moines has the advantage of six important railroads, viz.: The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; the Keokuk & Des Moines; the Des Moines & Fort Dodge; the Des Moines, Indianola & Missouri; the Des Moines, Winterset & Southwestern; and the Des Moines & Minnesota, all of which are in successful operation, and there are others in the way of completion.

The situation of Des Moines is picturesque, occupying chiefly the valley and slopes of the hills on both the east and west sides of the river, the hills swelling into a grand circle of bluffs, which sweep the horizon on nearly all sides. From these bluffs fine views are obtained, and on their sides and summits are many of the most costly and elegant residences of the city.

From the western extremity to Capitol Hill on the east, the sweep is grand and imposing, and is best witnessed from the elevations of Park Hill, south of the Coon River—a point commanding a view of the entire city.

The city is not compact except in its business portion, but scattered over considerable territory, the corporation extending two and a half miles from north to south, and four and a half miles from east to west. The traveler is apt to be deceived in the number of inhabitants, as many of the residences are scattered far back on the wooded hills, where they are invisible from the business part of the city.

The level portion is capacious enough to accommodate the business of a large commercial metropolis. Here the streets are well laid out, and the buildings and business blocks solid and substantial, composed chiefly of brick, from two to four stories in height. The court house, post-office, opera house, and several of the blocks and hotels make a fine appearance.

The Des Moines River, which flows through the heart of the city, is spanned by four costly bridges, 600 feet in length, while the Coon has two bridges, affording to South Des Moines, and the rich prairies beyond, easy communication with the various parts of the city. Owing to the location of the Capitol, the east side is scarcely less important than that west of the river, and in the future development and growth of the city, it will all become one compact mass, with its continous streets joined by bridges on both sides. The principal streets running east and west are laid out in this manner, and are numbered from the river each way, east of the river being East Court Avenue, East Walnut Street, etc., and vice versa.

The situation of Des Moines, as to commercial advantages, compares favorably with any city in Iowa. Although it has not the river navigation, like the cities along the eastern border, yet its location is central in the midst of a large area unoccupied by any rival city, and in one of the richest agricultural districts in the country. Besides its railroad system—becoming more and more the rival of water navigation every year, and destined at no very distant day to supersede it almost entirely—gives it great commercial advantages, the roads centering here and radiating into all parts of the country east, west, north, and south. While Des Moines has a just pride in being the seat of government of a state which in comparatively few years has attained to the rank of third in agricultural importance in the Union, yet her growth and stability by no means depend upon the location of the Capital, and the advantages derived from the business which it creates and fosters. She has resources of her own, derived from the rich surrounding country, the agricultural and mineral wealth of the vicinity, and her facilities and advantages for manufacturing.

HISTORY.

Like many other places which have since grown into importance, the original nucleus of Des Moines was a fort erected by the government in an Indian country. It was built in 1843 by Captain James Allen, and was called Fort Des Moines from its situation on the Des Moines River. The name was also for some time attached to the struggling frontier village which gradually grew up around the garrison. Several settlers came in and obtained permission from the military authorities to make claims before the expiration of the Indian title. Among these were Peter Newcomer and John Saylor, the first settling about four miles east of the fort in 1844, the latter north of it, opening a garrison farm, in April, 1845. These pioneers were often at a loss for the conveniences of civilized life. Mrs. Newcomer, for example, had a cow giving good, rich milk, but how to make the butter was the problem, as she had no churn. The ingenuity of her husband was equal to the emergency. He took a section of a hollow log, and putting in a board bottom, fashioned a dasher out of a hickory pole. It is common among pioneers to find hollow logs serving the purpose of smoke house, barrel and leach tub, but Mr. Newcomer's genius seems to have transcended them all in utilizing this species of hollow-ware, which nature furnishes to the hand of the pioneer.

The Sac Indians often camped about the fort, except when they were off hunting or down to their village. In those days they were quite harmless and inoffensive. Their great warriors were dead, they had no care for anything to eat; their time was spent in playing cards and target shooting. Their enemies, the Sioux, were to be feared, and at one time made a demonstration of attacking the fort, which caused a good deal of excitement among them and the soldiers. But the philosophical Sac turned on his complacent heel, fled to the house for safety and quietly commenced a new game of poker. It was dull times for the soldiers as they daily went through the manual of arms, and these little occasional excitements afforded them some diversion.

At one time two or three renegade scoundrels captured several horses belonging to the Sacs, after obtaining their friendship by giving them whisky and presents. Captain Allen sent out a detachment of cavalry to bring the thieves to justice. But the prairies were wide and the grass high, so that all escaped except one—Jonas Carsner. The Indians could not bring direct evidence that he was the thief, but after a trial by the officers he was delivered over to Sergeant Haley, Goodell Smart and another man, disguised as Indians, who administered to him a severe whipping. This should have made Carsner a better man, but it proved otherwise. One of the horses was found. This animal they lent to a man named Fish, who also had two horses stolen from him by the same party, while he was bringing in supplies to the settlement. Fish started out to hunt for his team on the Indian's horse, and while passing through a skirt of the forest, Jonas Carsner came out of the brush, dexterously cut the saddle girth, unhorsed Fish, and bore away at full speed the horse he had before stolen. Poor Fish had nothing else to do but to foot it back to camp, and tell the story of his defeat to the Indians, whose curses were not only loud but deep. These renegades and outlaws infested the frontier settlements for a time, but disappeared as the settlements increased and law and order became established; not, however, in many places, without a struggle on the part of the honest settlers, who often had to organize into associations for self-protection.

The dangers and privations of the pioneer settlers were great in those early times. Mrs. Saylor lived alone in her cabin in the midst of Indians and wolves for six weeks, while her husband was gone to Van Buren County on business. The wolves would chase the house dog across the door step and look in at the windows with their fiery eyes as she sat at her sewing. Mr. Saylor hollowed out a log for a bread tray to mix bread in, and the family was often reduced to close rations when their scanty supplies of provisions gave out. They obtained a little game, roasted crab apples and acorns, and drank slough water.

At one time thirty half drunken Indians came to the cabin and demanded Mr. Saylor's meat. Instead of being frightened and giving up the precious supplies he had just brought, he took a good sized sapling and knocked down a half-dozen of the tapers, and by telling them the soldiers were coming succeeded in driving the rascals off.

The soldiers were all removed from the fort in June, 1846. Among the early settlers were Isaac Cooper and Dr. T. K. Brooks. Isaac Cooper at one time went to Oskaloosa to buy corn and carry it to mill. The Shunk River was so high that he could not ford it. There was no bridge nor ferry, and he was obliged to float his corn across on logs. He afterwards sold his meal at $2 per bushel in Fort Des Moines.

The first white child born within the present limits of Des Moines was a son of the first tailor, J. M. Thrift, in January, 1845. This was on the east side. Shortly after this, in February, occurred the birth of a child of Lieutenant Seevers, at the quarters on the west side. The first death was that of the last mentioned child in the Autumn following. Ezra Rathburn, a colored minister of the Methodist church, and the first who ever preached at the Fort, attended the child's funeral.

A class, or Methodist Society, was organized at Fort Des Moines in the Fall of 1845.

Benjamin F. Hoxie established the first grocery store, after the sutler left, on the east side, near Shepherd's mill, and R. W. Sypher sold general merchandise in a log building on the Phelp's place, near where Tuttle's pork-house now stands.

Brooklyn was then laid out on the east side, two miles from the river, and for a long time was the rival of Fort Des Moines—on paper. Dr. Brooks, Jeremiah Church and William Lamb, were its godfathers. Alexander Turner and Jacob Frederick wished it well, and bought a lot apiece. But it never had a building erected on its site. W. W. Clapp kept grocery on the west side.

The first regular mail route was opened to Fort Des Moines in April, 1846. Josiah Smart was appointed postmaster, but would not serve. Dr. Brooks was appointed in his place. Jeremiah Church and Peter Newcomer signed the Doctor's bond. A. D. Jones, Esq., swore him into office. The mail was a weekly, arriving on Wednesday. The through route was to Keokuk, via Toole's Point, Oskaloosa, Eddyville, Ottumwa and Agency City.

In 1847 Rev. Mr. Post, of Pella, carried the mail on horseback—about a hatfull in all. Hon. P. M. Casady was then postmaster, the sucessor of Dr. Brooks.

The town of Fort Des Moines was laid out June 4, 1846, by A. D. Jones, surveyor, assisted by Dr. Fagan. The first town officers of Fort Des Moines were: Reverend T. Bird, President; Hoyt Sherman, Esq., Honorable P. M. Casady, L. P. Sherman, C. D. Reinking, R. W. Sypher and Jesse S. Dicks, members of the council. The sale of lots began in the village July 15, 1846. Lot 5 in block 31, corner of Walnut and Court Avenue, sold at $35. Lot 1, in the same block, cost its owner the enormous sum of $18.

In July, 1846, Des Moines had thirty-one houses, twenty-three families and one hundred and twenty-seven souls, all told. The first frame building was erected on the 25th of July, 1846, by David Solenberger—dimensions 18x20, and one-story. Most of the settlers who came in that year occupied the old garrison houses, the soldiers having been removed. The year 1846 was a fruitful season, crops were good, and immigration received a new impetus.

The lawyers conspicuous in the Fall campaign were Major McKay, Colonel Thomas Baker, Honorable P. M. Casady, W. D. Frasee, S. D. Winchester and A. D. Jones, Esq., all of Fort Des Moines. The physician on the east side was Doctor Brooks; on the west side Doctors Fagan and Kirkbridge. There was on the west side a little apothecary shop. Mr. Vanatta made chairs and had a turning lathe; William F. Ayers did tailoring; and J. A. Campbell had a grocery and a place of amusement for the young folks to hold singing schools and dances. During this year Addison Michael put up a frame store. The first brick building in town was erected by J. A. Campbell, in 1848.

The United States Land Office was established at Des Moines in March, 1853. On the 7th of June, Isaac Cooper was appointed Chief Clerk; Honorable R. L. Tidrick, Register.

In 1850 the population was 515. In 1860 it had increased to 4,181. In 1870 it was 12,035, showing an increase in the decade preceding of 7,854. Since 1870, the increase has been about a thousand a year, the present population being about 17,000.

The name was changed to Des Moines in the adoption of a city charter, in 1857. The first city officers were the following: Colonel W. H. McHenry, Mayor; W. A. Hunt, J. F. Kemp, F. R. West, L. White, Isaac Cooper, W. C. Burton, R. L. Tidrick, M. Lawrence J. W. Stanton, G. W. Connor, H. H. Griffith, J. A. Williamson, W. A. Scott and J. Hyde, Alderman

On the 22d of September, 1851, the citizens of Fort Des Moines voted to have it incorporated as a town. Hon. P. M. Casady, Rev. Thompson Bird, and L. P. Sherman, Esq., were the committee to draft articles of incorporation, which were adopted by the people October 18, 1851. By act of the Legislature the town was incorporated in 1853.

In 1851 bills were introduced into the House of Representatives to remove the Capital of the State from Iowa City to Pella and Fort Des Moines, and that designating the latter place seemed to have the support of a majority of the members, but was finally lost on ordering to a third reading. The following session a bill was introduced into the Senate for the removal to Fort Des Moines, which was barely defeated upon the final vote. The effort was renewed at the next session, and was this time successful; and on the 15th of January, 1855, the Governor approved the bill relocating the seat of government within two miles of the Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines, and providing for the appointment of commissioners for that purpose. The spot was accordingly selected in 1856, and the land donated by the citizens and property-holders of Des Moines. An association of private individuals erected the building for a temporary capitol, leasing it to the state at a nominal rent. Governor Grimes, on the 19th of October, 1857, issued his proclamation declaring the City of Des Moines the Capital of Iowa. The removal of the archives was completed in December; the safe of the Treasurer of state, being drawn on two bob-sleds by ten yoke of oxen, entered the new capitol; and on the 11th of January, 1858, the Seventh General Assembly convened at Des Moines, now made by the State Constitution the permanent seat of government. The state obtained title to the "Old Capitol" building by purchase in 1864. The corner-stone of the new capitol building was laid with appropriate ceremonies November 23, 1871. Thus Des Moines became the State Capital, and the prestige and influence thus gained have not been without their effect in promoting the rapid growth of the place.

RAILROADS.

The first train of cars that entered the city came over the Des Moines Valley (now Keokuk & Des Moines) Railroad, in August, 1866. The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad was completed in September, 1861; the Indianola and Winterset branches in 1873; and the Des Moines & Minnesota in July, 1874. Des Moines has now six railroads in operation, as follows:

1. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific.
2. Keokuk & Des Moines.
3. Des Moines & Fort Dodge.
4. Des Moines, Indianola & Missouri.
5. Des Moines, Winterset & Southwestern.
6. Des Moines & Minnesota.

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS.

The pioneer church through its peculiar system of itineracy was early in the field to plant its standard of Christianity upon the outposts of civilization. We have already spoken of Reverend Ezra Rathburn's first preaching at the fort. Prior to 1845, or during the early part of that year, the Methodists sent out a missionary, whose circuit included Madison, Polk, Warren, the north half of Marion, and the south half of Jasper and Dallas Counties. This was performed on horseback by Reverend Mr. Russell, his saddle-bags sometimes scantily filled with corn bread and a slice of bacon, a worn bible and a clean shirt completing his outfit, as he journeyed from one sparse settlement to another, preaching in log cabins. In the Fall of 1845 a class was formed at Des Moines. A prayer meeting was held regularly for many years at John Saylor's house. Elijah Crawford was class leader in 1848. The first Methodist Episcopal Church of Des Moines was erected in 1848, and was the first building for church purposes on the line of the Newton road west of Iowa City.

In 1848 the New School Presbyterians sent out a Home Missionary, Rev. Thomas Bird, who was a faithful and self-sacrificing laborer. He preached extensively in the cabins, and built up little churches in many parts of the county.

The first Presbyterian church of Des Moines was organized June 4, 1848, at the house of John Dean, on the east side of the river. It started with thirteen members, Reverend Salmon Cowles pastor for a short time, and was incorporated November 24, 1854. In July, 1856, the lot on Locust street was purchased, and in a few years the present edifice erected at a cost of about $8,000.

Reverend J. A. Nash, a Baptist clergyman, now resident of the University of Des Moines, was the first pastor of the Baptist church, which organized in 1850. Mr. Nash has been closely identified with the interests of education, as well as the upbuilding of his own church. The church edifice was erected in 1850, on a lot donated by the County Commissioners.

Mr. Bird founded the Central Presbyterian Church in Des Moines, with seven members, one man and six women. In 1857, it had fifty-four members, Mr. Bird still pastor. He died a few years since, much lamented.

May 22, 1856, the Protestant Methodists organized themselves into a church in East Des Moines, having a membership of sixteen, and meeting at first in the Lyon school house, under the ministry of Reverend William Reinsburg.

The Lutherans organized July 7, 1855, with twelve members, which soon increased to sixty.

St. Andrews (Catholic) church belonged to the Diocese of Dubuque, in 1855. The same year its members built a part of the old brick church, forty-three by sixty feet. In 1857, its membership was five hundred and sixty.

In July, 1856, the Christian church was organized under the preaching of Reverend N. Summerbell, with a membership of seventeen.

The Episcopal church (St. Paul's) was organized in 1855, Rev. E. W. Peet, Rector. In 1857 it numbered twenty-five members.

CHURCHES.

Not having space to follow the history of all the churches in detail, we give the following summary: Des Moines has twenty-three churches, viz.: First Baptist, Burns Chapel, Centenary Methodist, Central Presbyterian, Church of Christ, Des Moines Mission, English Lutheran, Evangelical Association, Fifth Street Methodist, First Presbyterian, German Lutheran, German Methodist, African Methodist, Plymouth Congregational, Second Baptist, St. Ambrose Catholic, St. Mary's German Catholic, St. Paul's Episcoval, Swedish Lutheran, United Brethren, United Presbyterian, Universalist, Wesley Chapel, and Hope Chapel.

PUBLICATIONS.

The first luminary that rose upon the political horizon, in the shape of a newspaper, in this locality, was the Iowa Star, issued by Barlow & Granger, editors and publishers, July 26, 1849. It was a Democratic organ, the party at that time being largely in the ascendant throughout the state. Judge Bates, of Iowa City, had an interest in the journal; the party was interested in its success, and all of Polk County was proud of the enterprise, for it gave that strip of country a great advantage over its less energetic neighbors. The Democrats of Iowa at this period seem to have been as much opposed to the extension of slavery into the territories as the Whigs, for at the Fairfield Convention, June 17th, they adopted a resolution saying: "We have no doubt of the right of Congress to prohibit by law the extension of slavery into the territories of the United States." Thomas H. Benton, in a famous speech had taken this ground, and Mr. Granger supported him in the Iowa Star. These views were generally accepted at that time by the Democrats of Des Moines. Mr. Granger was a clear and forcible writer.

On the 22d of February, 1850, the Star passed into the hands of Bates & Johnson, Judge Curtis Bates assuming the editorial management. Some time during the year Mr. Johnston died of small-pox, and Judge Bates conducted the paper alone, till he formed a partnership with Dr. A. Y. Hull, in 1852. The paper was continued by them till the Winter of 1854, when the office was transferred to Will Tomlinson, who changed its name to the Iowa Statesman. In January, 1857, the office was purchased by William Porter, and the name of the paper changed to the Iowa State Journal. Mr. Porter continued editor till 1860, when he sold to Stinson Hutchins, now editor of the St. Louis Times. His partner, Todd, and himself changed the name back to the Iowa Statesman. Stevens & Hoxie then published it for a while as the Commonwealth, and sold to J. B. Bausman, who changed its name to the Iowa Times. He, and the company who owned a part of the paper, sold to Colonel W. H. Merrit, who, in 1862, changed its name back again to the Iowa Statesman, and continued its publication about three years, when he sold to Staub & Jenkins, who were succeeded by C. J. Snow, till the Barnhart Bros. & Witmer purchased the material, in 1869, and continued the publication of the paper under the name of the Iowa State Leader.

In January, 1873, the office was purchased by W. W. Witmer, J. W. Witmer and W. E. Andrews, who incorporated the establishment under the firm name of The State Leader Company, under which it is still doing business. W. W. Witmer, President; W. E. Andrews, Secretary; J. W. Witmer, Treasurer.

The Iowa State Leader is published both daily and weekly from the Hawkeye Insurance Building, and is an able and successful journal.

The Fort Des Moines Gazette.—In November, 1849, L. P. Sherman, from the Cincinnati Gazette office, made preparations to start a Whig paper in Des Moines in the interest of his party. The printing press and material was shipped from Cincinnati and hauled from the river, and in a little frame building, not far from Sherman's Block, the first number of the Fort Des Moines Gazette was issued January 11, 1850. Mr. Sherman continued the publication of the Gazette one year, when it was changed into the State Journal by Peter Myers & Co., who were unsuccessful, and in 1852 Mr. Sherman sold the material to the Iowa Star.

The Iowa State Register.—In February, 1856, Thomas H. Sypherd and A. J. Stevens established a paper in the City of Des Moines called The Iowa Citizen. In 1857 the first named gentleman retired, and was succeeded by W. H. Farmer. Later in the same year the paper went into the hands of J. C. Savery, soon after which Mr. Farmer retired, and J. M. Dixon, the now unfortunate blind man, was made the editor, continuing till December, when the whole establishment passed into the hands of John Teesdale. Mr. Dixon was retained as associate editor, and was a talented writer.

On the 15th of February, 1860, the name of the paper was changed to The Iowa State Register, its present name.

On the 8th of May, 1860, the Register establishment was purchased from Mr. Teesdale by F. W. Palmer, afterwards member of Congress. On the 13th of January, 1862, Mr. Palmer issued the Register as a daily for the first time, as a twenty column sheet. In 1864 the size was increased to twenty-four columns.

In 1866 the paper and the entire establishment were purchased by Mills & Co., and on the 1st of May, 1867, enlarged to thirty-two columns. On the 8th of September, 1869, it was still further enlarged to a thirty-six column sheet, and issued on entirely new material.

On the 6th of December, 1870, the Register newspaper establishment was purchased by Clarkson Brothers, the present proprietors of the daily and weekly Iowa State Register. The firm consists of R. P. & J. S. Clarkson. Office, Walnut Street, corner Third, Des Moines, Iowa.

The Register is one of the ablest papers in the state, a journal well fitted by its commanding talents and enterprise to occupy the central position it does, and the controlling influence in both local and general state politics. Hon. R. P. Clarkson, the chief editor, is also postmaster of Des Moines.

The Iowa State Journal was originally established as the Iowa Review by Waterman & Speed, December 31, 1870, and by them conducted till May 18, 1872. It was then purchased by the Republican Printing Company, and the Daily Republican established. G. W. Edwards, President and Managing Editor; G. A. Stewart, Secretary and Associate Editor. The Daily Republican was continued till October, 1873, when it was purchased by the State Printing Company, and its name changed to the State Journal. The Printing Company continued it till the following April, and sold to G. W. Edwards, who managed it for a short time.

On the 26th of October, 1874, it was purchased by Williams, Blair & Pierson, the present proprietors. J. E. Williams, Editor; J. G. Blair, Business Manager; R. J. Pierson, Superintendent and Bookkeeper.

The Journal has always been a strictly Republican paper, its editors and managers supporting the regular party nominations. It is issued both daily and weekly. Office on Mulberry Street, near the court house and post-office.

The Analyst, the only strictly mathematical publication in the country, is edited and published by J. E. Hendricks at the office of the State Journal. Established in 1874. Devoted exclusively to pure and applied mathematics. Circulation about 500. Monthly.

DES MOINES INSTITUTIONS.

University of Des Moines.—This is a prosperous college under the auspices of the Baptist denomination, Rev. J. G. Nash, president. The building has the following history: In May, 1855, at the Lutheran Conference, Knoxville, a college was determined upon, to meet the wants of that denomination. Des Moines, through the influence of Dr. Grinnell and other members of the church, gave $10,000 as a building fund. In November, 1855, a Board of Trustees was elected, and a charter obtained from the legislature the same year. The building was finished in the Fall of 1857. A literary society was established in the interest of the college, and made successful by a "brilliant array of home talent," in a course of popular lectures lasting through the Winter of 1856-7. The college was duly inaugurated under the name of Iowa Central College. In 1868 the Lutherans sold the institution to the Baptists. The building has been improved under their hands, and everything in connection with the college indicates a fair degree of prosperity.

Des Moines Literary Association, with library and reading room, open daily to the public, except Sundays and holidays. John Mitchell, President; W. T. Dart, Secretary.

Des Moines has three active temperance organizations—Peoples Temperance Association, and two lodges of Good Templars—Union Lodge No. 263, west side, and Des Moines Lodge, on the east side.

The Citizens Association.—C. P. Holmes, Secretary, furnishes information and works in the interest of the city.

The Early Settlers Association.—Hoyt Sherman, Corresponding Secretary, preserves many reminiscences of pioneer life.

BANDS.

The bands are three in number: Harmonia, string band; Hartung, string band; Mechanics Silver Cornet Band.

MILITARY.

There is a military organization called the Olmsted Zouaves, attached to which is the Baker Battery.

MASONIC.

Free Masonry is represented by seven lodges, viz.: Capital Lodge, No. 110; Pioneer Blue Lodge, No. 22; Temple Commandery, No. 4; Capital Council, No. 9; Corinthian Chapter R. A. M., No. 14; Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite; Masonic Mutual Benefit Association.

ODD-FELLOWS.

Of Odd-Fellows there are four lodges, viz.: Ebenezer Encampment, No. 10; Fort Des Moines Lodge, No. 25; Capital Lodge, No. 106; Jonathan, No. 137.

The Germans have a Turner's Association and Harmonia Society, and there is one society of Red Men. The printers have a Typographical Union, and the city a Union Relief Society, with its committees distributed in all the wards.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Des Moines has been liberal in providing for popular education. The school system in the city is divided into two independent districts, those of East and West Des Moines, with their respective boards of education.

West Des Moines District.—The number of school buildings in this district is four, containing twenty-eight rooms, and seats for 1,716 pupils. The number of children of school age is 2,728. The enrolled is 1,750, or 64 1-5 per cent, of the whole number eligible, a considerably larger per cent. than is found in most cities of the United States, except Boston and San Francisco, where the per centage is 95 and 81 respectively.

The value of school property in the west district is a follows:

Value of school sites	$ 25,000
Value of school buildings	100,000
Value of school furniture	1,200

The second ward building is a remarkably fine brick structure, accommodating the High School of the city. It was erected in the Summer of 1867, and cost, exclusive of lot, $75,000. The third ward building, erected in 1870, cost over $60,000. The fourth ward building is now (1875) in process of construction, and when completed will cost about $25,000. These, with a smaller building erected in the first ward in 1874, constitute the school buildings of West Des Moines district.

The number of schools is twenty-four, viz.: 1 ungraded school, 13 primary schools, 9 grammar schools, and 1 high school. The teachers employed are twenty-seven—four males and twenty-three females. The course of study in all grades is thorough and progressive, and in the High School extends through four years, embracing the languages, natural philosophy and higher mathematics.

Superintendent, J. H. Thompson; President Board of Education, C. A. Dudley, Esq.; Secretary, J. M. St. John.

East Des Moines District.—This district has two brick school buildings, and a third is about to be erected in the Sixth Ward, corner of Sixteenth and Locust Streets. The schools are graded, embracing Primary, Intermediate, Grammar, and High Schools. The building containing the High School is an elegant three-story brick structure, and cost the district about $30,000, inclusive of furniture. The number of children of school age in the district is 1,570. Teachers, including the Principal of the High School, 17. E. M. Cotton, Superintendent and Principal of High School; Joseph Brewer, President Board of Education; W. M. Day, Secretary.

BUSINESS OF THE CITY.

Des Moines has six banks, eighteen hotels, a woolen mill, oil mill, three immense packing-houses, four breweries, two stoneware factories, two school furniture factories, five foundries and machine shops, three plow factories, one brass foundry, two boiler shops, four carriage shops, several planing mills, two marble works, a spice mill, a paper mill, and one scale manufactory. There is also a reaper factory, sewing machine factory, several water and steam flouring mills, a publishing house, extensive coal mines, and the usual variety of smiths and mechanics.

J. H. Given, who established the first plow factory in Des Moines, in 1851—making 200 plows—now manufactures 1,500 in the course of the year, and does an immense business in other departments of his foundry. He owns the Given House, as well as the immense factory 133 feet in length, and 39 in width, 50 feet front, three stories high, near the Rock Island Depot.

S. Green, foundry man, who was first employed by H. N. Hemingway as a moulder in the pioneer foundry in 1857, has a large building eighty-five feet in length, thirty-eight wide, near Given's plow factory. Both buildings are fire-proof, from Pitman's patent, and are creditable to the enterprising proprietors.

J. & J. D. Williams, proprietors of Farmers Mill, do a heavy business in the flour trade. This mill was built on the site of the old Stutsman mill in East Des Moines—has two run of burrs, and makes a good brand of flour.

The Post-office in West Des Moines makes a fine showing in the money order department. Amount of money orders issued for 1873, $66,727.95. Paid, $194,261.65. Number of money orders, 14,214. 50,000 newspapers are distributed yearly at this office. Hon. J. S. Clarkson, Postmaster. The Post-office is located in the splendid and costly United States building that was erected in 1871-2, and cost $150,000.

Terrace Hill, the home of Hon. B. F. Allen; Cole Chester, Judge Cole's residence; General Tuttle's, J. Gilcrest, and others, which we have not room to notice, are some of the finest private dwellings in the state.

Des Moines has the Holly system of water works, erected in 1871—street cars, gas, and two bridges that ought to be free to all who enter her borders. The depots are to be enlarged some time, when the rich railroad corporations take "a good ready."

First Ward.—P. McGlew.	Fourth Ward.—J. J. Williams.

ALLAMAKEE COUNTY.

This county occupies the extreme northeast portion of the state. It is bounded north by Minnesota, and east by the Mississippi River. The surface of the county is rolling; hence the landscape has a pleasing variety, and the surface drainage is good. Along the river the bluffs rise almost perpendicularly from the shore to the height of about four hundred feet, thence the land gradually ascends towards the interior, till at Waukon, near the center of the county, it attains the altitude of six hundred and fifty feet above the river level.

The only exception to this is the small slough-sections extending along the river in the upper and lower portions of the county. These reach back from one to three miles, forming a series or net-work of sloughs, the principal of which, in the upper series, is known as the Iowa Slough. Between this and the Mississippi are Marshy and Big Lakes. This upper series of sloughs extends from the northern boundary of the county to near Lansing. The lower series begins with about the center line of Lafayette township, and extends along the river to Johnsonport. The principal slough in this section is known as Harper's Channel. Considerable portions of the land along this channel are among the most productive in the county.

SOIL.

The soil of the county is considerably diversified. Perhaps about one-third is prairie, hazel thickets and river bottom. It consists of a deep black loam of almost inexhaustible fertility, and is dry, porous and easily tilled. About one-sixth is burr oak openings, scarcely inferior in richness to the prairies. The white oak and hickory openings constitute about one-half of the area, and though heavier, and of less depth, produce a finer quality of wheat than the prairies. The chief deficiency of this soil seems to be its lack of vegetable mould; hence it responds well to fertilizers, and, under liberal treatment, makes durable and valuable farms.

CLIMATE.

The climate of this county is particularly inviting. For the dryness and healthiness of its atmosphere it corresponds with Southern Minnesota. The elevated and rolling surface of its prairies render it remarkably free from miasma, and hence malarious diseases are as little known as in New Hampshire or Massachusetts. Indeed, the bracing air of this locality often proves a sovereign preventive, sometimes a cure, of consumption, that scourge of New England. And hence consumption is almost unknown in this section.

PRODUCTS.

The soil and climate of this county are adapted to the usual variety of products raised in a similar latitude in any part of the country. Many of them grow with a luxuriance and a yield almost unequalled. The richness of the soil seems inexhaustible, and the seasons are sufficient for crops to mature. In no section of the west is there a more rapid growth of vegetation in the spring, or more protracted and beautiful autumn seasons for maturing and taking care of the late crops. Corn grows on this soil year after year without manure, and without any perceptible diminution of quality, and as for wheat, few counties in the west can surpass it either in quality or yield. Potatoes, onions, melons, cabbage, currants, grapes, gooseberries, strawberries and raspberries—indeed, the whole catalogue of vegetables and small fruits are raised easily and in abundance from the soil of this county.

The great staples, of course, are wheat, corn and oats. The statistics for 1873 show that the number of acres improved in the county was 114,118. Of wheat there was harvested 814,031 bushels; corn, 798,166 bushels; oats, 418,793 bushels; barley, 43,034 bushels. The amount of wool shorn was 23,749 pounds.

FRUIT CULTURE.

That fruit, particularly apples, can be cultivated in Northern Iowa has been pretty well demonstrated by the efforts of practical horticulturists. The first to establish a nursery in this section was Mr. D. W. Adams, as early as 1853. Mr. Adams has been successful, and is still engaged in the business. In 1865, the following statement, under the head of this county, was made in the Iowa Gazetteer:

"In regard to the fruit-growing qualities of the soil of this county, we will give the opinion of a gentleman residing at Waukon, who has spent the best years of his life in fruit-growing in a new country. He says: 'I have an orchard of 1,400 trees, just coming into bearing, and a nursery of about 75,000 apple trees, in which I have acquired some very dear-bought experience, and I have come to this conclusion: In growing apples, grapes and fruits, Northern Iowa can compete with other states most successfully, for we have never in twelve years had a spring frost to injure blossoms. We get hardy apples and invite competition. The following are eminently successful and hardy: Red Astrachan, Red June, Tetofsky, Sweet June, Oldenburg, Alexander, Holden, Pippin, St. Lawrence, Bally Sweet, Jonathan, Fameuse, Wilmsap, English Golden Russett, Talman Sweet, Northern Spy, Rawel's Jeanette.'"

We have visited the nursery of C. & C. Barnard, of Waukon, and gathered the following facts which may be of interest to fruit growers: Mr. Barnard established a nursery here in 1866. His father was a nurseryman in England. Mr. Barnard was bred to the business. He followed the nursery business in West Virginia and Ohio before coming to this state. Mr. Barnard has always contended that in any country where there is abundance of natural fruit there is no difficulty in raising plenty of cultivated fruit, provided the kinds adapted to the soil and climate can be obtained. Hence Mr. Barnard has been many years trying experiments on trees adapted to the soil and climate of this section of Iowa. In respect to the plum, he found by experiment twenty years ago, that the native variety of Iowa transplanted to Ohio did not succeed. He also brought some of the best varieties of that state to this section, and found that they proved equally a failure. This convinced him that there must be adaptation between the plant and the soil and climate in which it is expected to flourish; that other conditions besides the severity of winter are destructive to trees, for instance, extreme dryness of soil, the want of deep plowing and keeping the soil cultivated and mulched when necessary about the trees to preserve the scanty moisture in dry seasons.
